1843—This was one of the most extraordinary comets of which we have any record. It approached to within 60,000 miles of the sun, whirled completely around that luminary in two hours, lost its tail in its flight around the sun, and then tail and comet went off, each on its own hook, and have never been seen since. This phenomenon was visible all over England in broad daylight.

1858—This was a perfect stunner, and was known as Donati's comet. Its period of revolution is 1,950 years, so that those who missed seeing it then will probably not have another opportunity.

1861—In this year another large comet was visible.

1874—This comet was visible to the naked eye for several weeks.

A Rare Proof of Devotion.

[San Francisco Chronicle.]

About a month ago, F. A. Learett, of Oakland, an engineer in the employ of the Central Pacific railroad company, and stationed in Arizona, was seriously scalded by the overturning of his engine, and one of his legs was so badly injured that the flesh fell away. The attending physicians told him that if his friends would each contribute a small piece of flesh they could repair the limb and restore it to its old usefulness. The statement was widely circulated, and twenty-eight of his fellow-workmen volunteered and bravely bared their limbs to the surgeon's knife. The transplantation of flesh was successfully made, and to-day the leg looks almost as natural as the uninjured member. The heroic act of the men was duly rewarded. The railroad company hearing of the case, leave of absence was given, and two months' extra pay was ordered paid to each of the men. Mr. Learett is now at his home, No. 803 Peralta street, and is rapidly recovering.

Siam is the country where the white elephant is worshiped. As a deity, the white elephant is a success. From the hour that he takes possession of his princely parlors, presents pour in upon him in a steady stream. Like Grant, he accepts everything that is offered, and the King of Siam regards his white elephant with as much favor as Grant did the whisky ring. His Majesty, the King, recently received a brand new elephant, fresh from the jungles, the old deity having handed in his checks. The king has the household of his new deity arranged in princely style, and convenient to his own palace. Every article dedicated to the white elephant's use and service, is of massive gold or rare porcelain, and goods to the amount of many thousands are contributed annually. The sacred elephant having a mind above trinkets, his treasury department is supplied with a custodian who, a la Pitney, transfers the valuables to the palace of the king and other "high officials." As the goods disappear, a devout people continue to give, and thus, between paying, giving and stealing, the King of Siam finds his white elephant a great help, and is, probably, as rich as John Sherman.

The latest proof of the blood-thirstiness of the terrible turtle (chelonia imbricata) comes from Chautauqua Lake, a place which heretofore has been regarded as free from pitfalls and dangers of every kind. The information, which is entirely trustworthy, is to the effect that a turtle seized a young lady by the ear as she was bathing in the lake, "and only the superhuman efforts of her friends saved her from drowning." The account goes on to say that the turtle's head had to be severed from its body and its jaws pried apart before the young woman was set free.

SKILL IN THE WORKSHOP.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. If long hours of confinement in close rooms have enfeebled his hand or dimmed his sight, let him at once, and before some organic trouble appears, take plenty of Hop Bitters. A small boy, of Bath, Me., had just gone to bed, when he began to dream about cows. Some slight noise woke him up and he said, "Mumma, I saw some cows." "Where?" she asked. "Up there," said he pointing to the ceiling. His mother remarked that that was a queer place to see cows, and the little fellow got slightly angry and said, "Well, I guess they could be angel cows, couldn't they?"

DEACON DAY AND THE HIGHWAY COW.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

The best o' bein's will hev their cares—
There's alwus sumpthin' to cross our way,
To worry an' fret us in our affairs—
An' sech wus the lot o' old Deacon Day;
He hed his trials—I'll tell you how
He was tempted an' tried by a highway cow.

The hue o' her hide was a dusky brown;
Her body was lean, an' her neck was slim;
One horn turned up, an' the other down;
She was sharp o' sight, an' was long o' limb,
With a peaked nose, an' a short stump-tail,
An' ribs like the hoops on a home-made pail.

Many a day hed she passed in pound
Fur meanly helpin' herself to corn.
Many a cowardly cur an' hound
Hed been transfixed by her crumpled horn,
Many a tea-pot an' old old tin-pail
Hed the farm boys tied to her stumpy tail.

Old Deacon Day was a pious man,
A frugal farmer, upright an' plain;
Ah' many a weary mile he ran
To drive her out o' his growin' grain.
Sharp were the pranks that she used to play
To git her fill and to git away.

He used to sit on the Sabbath-day
With his open Bible upon his knee,
Thinkin' o' loved ones far away,
In the Better Land that he longed to see—
When a distant beller, borne thro' the air,
Would bring him back to this world o' care.

When the Deacon went to his church in town,
She watched an' waited till he went by
He never passed her without a frown,
And an evil gleam in each angry eye.
He would crack his whip, an' would holler,
"Whay!"
Es he drove along in his "one-horse shay."

Then at his homestead she loved to call,
Liftin' his bars with her crumpled horn,
Nimbly scalin' his garden wall,
Helpin' herself to his standin' corn,
Eatin' his cabbages one by one—
Scamperin' home when her meal was done.

Off'en the Deacon homeward came,
Hummin' a hymn, from the house o' prayer,
His kindly heart in a tranquil frame,
His soul as calm as the evenin' air,
His forehead smooth as a well-worn plow—
To find in his garden that highway cow.

His human passions were quick to rise,
An' stridin' forth with a savage cry,
With fury blazin' from both his eyes,
Es lightnin's flash in a summer sky,
Redder an' redder his face would grow,
An' after the critter he would go—

Over his garden, round and round,
Breakin' his pair an' apple trees,
Trampin' his melons into the ground,
Tippin' over his hives o' bees,
Leavin' him angry an' badly stung,
Wishin' the old cow's neck was wrung.

The mosses grew on the garden wall;
The years went by, with their work an' play;
The boys o' the village grew strong and tall,
An' the gray-haired farmers dropped away,
One by one, as the red leaves fall—
But the highway cow outlived 'em all.

The things we hate are the last to fade;
Some cares are lengthened thro' many years;
The death o' the wicked seems long delayed,
But there is a climax to all careers,
An' the highway cow at last was slain
In runnin' a race with a railway train.

All into pieces at once she went,
Jest like savin's banks when they fail;
Out o' the world she was swiftly sent;
Lostie was left but her own stump-tail.
The farmers' gardens an' corn-fields now
Are haunted no more by the highway cow.

SAVED IN TIME.

"Charity, kind sir! My poor children are starving!"

The speaker was a thinly-clad woman, who shivered in the wintry blast, for it was January, and the keen frosty air penetrated even the warm garments of the rich.

The gentleman addressed was a man of perhaps thirty-five, a rich and prosperous man, who hoped soon to become still more rich and prosperous through an alliance with the fair girl at his side.

"Poor woman!" said Isabel Howard compassionately. "I have left my purse at home. Walter, I am sure you will relieve her distress."

"Of course I will, my darling. Here, poor woman, take that, and may it do you good."

As he spoke he drew from his pocket half a sovereign, and put it into the extended hand of the applicant.

The poor woman's heart bounded with joy, for she had hoped for but sixpence at the best, and ten shillings seemed to her positive wealth.

"Heaven bless your generous heart!" she exclaimed with heartfelt gratitude.

"Thank you," said Walter Barton, graciously.

Isabel rewarded him with a beaming smile.

"I am glad you gave the poor creature so much," she said. "I like generosity. I don't think I could esteem or respect a mean man."

"We think alike on that subject, my darling," said Walter. "I never can refuse to give, even if I suspect the object may be unworthy. It makes me happy to make others happy."

Another beaming glance from Isabel.

"I love you all the better for that, dear Walter," she said in a low voice.

"On the whole," thought Barton, "my ten shillings are a good investment, though I can't help grudging it to the beggar. When Isabel becomes Mrs. Barton, and I get hold of her hundred thousand pounds, I shan't give many half-sovereigns to beggars. For the present it's policy to be generous."

Of course Isabel could not read the thoughts of the man at her side. She believed him a genuine philanthropist, while, in reality, he was a mean, selfish hard-hearted man, yet with tact enough to overcome these traits for the sake of making a favorable impression upon the heart of the heiress.

Isabel Howard was an orphan, and the absolute mistress of a hundred thousand pounds—no small fortune for a girl of nineteen. But her fortune was by no means her chief attraction. She was beautiful, sweet-tempered, accomplished, and her heart was animated by the most generous charity. She had a regular list of pensioners, and would have found it impossible to refuse an applicant who was in need. Doubtless she had often given to unworthy objects, but such mistakes rebound to the credit of those who make them.

As Isabel said, she would have found it impossible to respect or esteem a mean man. Thus far, Walter Barton had succeeded in concealing his real character from her, but the time was coming when it would be revealed. Whenever he was with her he gave liberally to any who asked for charity, but at his warehouse he would have repulsed them with hard and bitter words. He kept a large clothing establishment in Manchester, but Isabel, who lived in the suburbs, had never been there, and knew absolutely nothing of him in his business relations.

Of course there were many who courted the favor of the young and beautiful heiress, but there was only one who came near being the rival of the successful suitor. This was Dr. Percy Elgin, a young physician, who had recently established himself in the city, and was having a hard struggle to get into a lucrative practice, being poor and without powerful friends. But he was essentially noble, of good figure, with a frank open face, and unusually able and intelligent. Success with him was only a matter of time.

When he saw the rich trader preferred to him, he quietly withdrew, disappointed, but too honorable to attempt to reverse Isabel's decision, now that it appeared to be made.

It was made, and the wedding-day was about to be fixed, when something occurred which quite changed the position of affairs.

Isabel was walking near the cathedral, when her attention was attracted to a girl of about her own age, leaning against the railings. The girl was plainly dressed, and in her face and attitude was such an air of despondency, that Isabel, whose heart was full of compassion for the wretched, felt herself constrained to stop and speak to her.

"Are you not well?" she asked in a low, sympathetic voice.

The girl, who was very thinly and poorly clad, looked up.

"Yes," she answered "I am well."

"But you are sad. You have met with some misfortune, have you not?"

"Yes," answered the girl, despondently.

"Will you tell me what it is? Perhaps it is something that I can remedy. Do not think me inquisitive, but I really want to help you, if you will let me."

The girl answered frankly:

"Thank you for your kindness. It does me good, for I stand in need of kind words."

"Tell me, then, your trouble," and Isabel, in her sealskin jacket and warm velvet dress, took the arm of the shabby creature, and together they walked along through Market street into the busiest part of town.

"My mother and I lived together," explained the girl. "We are very poor, and mother is an invalid, unable to do much. We have nothing to live upon except what I earn by my needle."

"That must be very little."

"Yes, it is very little; but I have been defrauded of that little. It is too hard."

"Tell me about it. Is it possible that any one could be so mean as to cheat you out of the little you earn in that hard way?"

"I will tell you how it happened. A week since, I got a bundle of waistcoats to make for a large house. The pay was very small. By working early and late I could earn about eighteenpence a day."

"Is it possible? I never heard of such oppression!" said Isabel indignantly.

"Well, I finished the half-dozen, and this morning took them round to the shop. Instead of paying the money, the proprietor, a rich man, said roughly that they were not well done, and he could only pay sevenpence apiece for them. If I would take that he would give me more work. I knew it was all a pretence to cheat me out of sixpence on each, for I am an experienced waistcoat-maker, and these were made as well as usual."

"And did you take the money, my poor friend?" asked Isabel.

"What could I do? There was no money to buy our dinner. I had to take it, but I know that it is impossible for us to get along on that paltry sum. I see nothing for us but starvation."

"Cheer up! I am rich. I will help you," said the heiress. "But tell me the name of this mean wretch who defrauded you?"

"Walter Barton."

"Who?" exclaimed Isabel, startled and surprised.

"Walter Barton. I hear he is engaged to a wealthy heiress, but I don't think such a man can prosper."

"I must look into this," said Isabel, quickly, her face flushed. "It's more important to me than you know. Come to my house."

The girl accompanied her home, and presently the heiress, who had changed dresses with the poor girl for a brief space emerged into the street and made her way to the shop of Walter Barton. She was so muffled up that her face could not be seen.

"What do you want?" asked a salesman roughly.

"To see Mr. Barton," answered Isabel in a low voice.

"He is busy. He can't see a girl like you!"

"I have something important to say to him."

Walter Barton, on being told this, came forward.

"Well, girl, what do you want of me," he asked rudely.

"You gave me only sevenpence for some waistcoat I brought here this morning," said Isabel in an assumed voice.

"What of that? They were poorly made."

"I need the money for my mother. I worked hard, and I am sure the waistcoats were well made."

"Look here! I can't be troubled with you," said Barton roughly. "I gave you all the work was worth."

"My mother will starve!"

"Let her starve then. It's no business of mine.

This was too much for Isabel, whose indignation was intense.

She threw up her veil, revealing to Walter Barton a face that terrified him, so full was it of withering scorn.

"I am glad I have found you out, Mr. Barton," said Isabel. "Fortunately it is not too late," and she turned haughtily and swept out the shop.

"Isabel! Isabel! Isabel Howard!" called Walter Barton in an agitated tone. "Come back. It's all a mistake. I will make it right."

Isabel did not answer, nor turn back, but left the place with her illusions broken.

The next day it was announced in society that the engagement was broken. Three months later there was a new engagement, but this time it was Dr. Percy who, gained the prize for which so many were striving.

The poor girl soon obtained remunerative employment through Isabel's influence, and she and her mother never again knew want.

As for Walter Barton, he rued bitterly his fatal mistake, but for Isabel it is a most fortunate one, since it saved her from marrying a man whom she would have despised, and gave her a husband whom she could respect as well as love.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

REMEDY FOR FROST-BITE.—Nordenskjold used upon his Arctic expedition an ointment prepared as follows: Corrosive sublimate, 1 gram; castor oil, 40 drops; oil turpentine, 60 drops; collodion, 40 grams.

The leaves of geranium are an excellent application for cuts, when the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of the same kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied on linen to the part, and the wound will become cicatrized in a very short time.

SULPHURIC ACID BURNS.—M. Alanore, a Paris pharmacist, relates the details of an accident by which two students in pharmacy received a quantity of sulphuric acid on their faces and clothing. The professor brought them to M. Alanore's pharmacy, and he as quickly as possible covered their faces with a soft paste of calcined magnesia and water, about two millimetres thick—more being supplied as this fell off. In a quarter of an hour, both were free from pain, but the treatment was continued in one case for five hours, in the other for twenty-four. When able to bear the air without pain, no mark of the burn remained except a slight redness, which entirely disappeared in a week.

COLD FEET AND SLEEPLESSNESS.—The association between cold feet and sleeplessness is much closer than is commonly imagined. Persons with cold feet rarely sleep well, especially women; yet the number of persons troubled is very considerable. This is the plan to adopt with cold feet: They should be dipped in cold water for a brief period. Often just to immerse them and no more is sufficient; and then they should be rubbed with a pair of hair flesh gloves, or a rough Turkish towel, till they glow, immediately after getting into bed. After this a hot-water bottle will be successful enough in maintaining the temperature of the feet, though without this preliminary it is impotent to attempt to do so. Disagreeable as the plan at first sight may appear, it is efficient; and those who have once fairly tried it continue it, and find that they have put an end to bad nights and cold feet. Pills, potions, lozenges, "night caps," and all narcotics fail to enable the sufferer to woo sleep successfully; get rid of the cold feet and then sleep will come of itself.—Boston Medical Journal.

THE TREATMENT OF INFLUENZA.—It is of great importance to have the room cool and properly ventilated. In a common cold the patient is best in bed and in a warm room; but in influenza, if the patient is not too ill, it is better to get him out of bed after the third day, and place him on a sofa. Draughts and chills must be avoided, on account of the risk of inflammation of the lungs. As there is usually complete loss of appetite, it is difficult to get him to take much nourishment. Solid food may have to be abstained from in bad cases for two or three days. Should beef-tea be given, it should not be very hot, as it is apt to increase the headache and languor. Plenty of milk should be given, alone or mixed with soda water, as may be most palatable to the patient. Cold drinks, orange and lemon juice, cream-of-tartar water, raspberry vinegar, weak citrate of potash, citric acid and water flavored with sugar, barley water flavored with lemon juice, infusion of mallows, and so on, should be given ad libitum, and when there is much fever they should be iced. Weak cold white wine whey often proves grateful. In the way of stimulants, claret or hock, with seltzer water, is useful; but in the case of old people suffering greatly from debility, it is usually necessary to give port wine or brandy. As soon as the fever begins to subside, the patient should be encouraged to take solid food although at first there may be little or no appetite. The air of the sick-room should be kept moist by means of the steam of a kettle placed on the hob, or by putting boiling water into flat, shallow vessels. The inhalation of hot steam several times a day from a suitable inhaler may prove useful, and the addition of ten or twenty drops of chloroform to the water may subdue the violence of the cough.

Mexican Coinage.

We are indebted to an invaluable publication upon the history of the coinage of the mints of Mexico, in the columns of El Minero Mexicano, for the facts which we have tabulated below to show the amount of gold and silver thus coined during the five years ended 30th June, 1879:

30 June.	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
1875	$862,619 00	$19 386,958 50	$20,249,677 50
1876	809,401 50	19,454,054 00	20,263,455 50
1877	695,750 00	21,415,128 50	22,110,878 50
1878	691,998 00	22,084,203 50	22,776,201 50
1879	658,206 00	22,162,987 65	22,821 193 65
Totals	$3,717,974 50	$104,503,332 15	$107,221,306 65

During the same period the money value of the total copper coinage was $11,906,604, or more than three times greater than the value of the gold coined during the same half decade—the total coinage for the period being $119,127,910. Of this amount it is to be noted 87½ per cent. were of silver, ten per cent. in copper, and but two and a half per cent. in gold. It is this last fact which we commend to the consideration of capitalists upon the eve of embarking in Mexican gold mining ventures with the expectation of finding there the greatest gold mines in the world, upon the specious statements of unscrupulous speculators and their venal scribblers of the press.—Mining Record.

The Cabbage Pest.

The imported cabbage worm has come to stay. His first summer on Long island showed the natives that he was capable of advancing the price of cabbage—$500,000 worth was destroyed in one season in the suburbs of New York. He has followed the tide of civilization and gone West. The problem now is, what will kill the worm and not injure the cabbage? We would suggest that the deliverance must come by preventing the moth from laying the eggs on the cabbage. We have suggested to our neighbors to try tying newspapers, or sacking, or netting of any kind, over the cabbage plants during the prevalence of the moth; when it disappears the covering to be removed. Few of all the remedies so far named have given satisfaction. Prof. C. V. Riley, always practical and intelligent, suggests the use of pyrethrum. He first tried it in 1879, but did not recommend it that year, as he wished to test it further. He has made tests, and caused tests to be made by agents, and the general experience has been most favorable. He unhesitatingly recommends pyrethrum for all the different worms that infest the cabbage plants. Prof. A. J. Cook, of Lansing, Mich., says he tried bi-sulphide of carbon as a weapon against these pests. It had been successfully employed in fighting the phylloxera in France, which suggested its use here. He made a small hole close to the plant, three or four inches deep, and turned into it about a half teaspoonful of liquid, then quickly filled the hole with earth and packed by stepping on it. The same experiment was tried for the squash-borer with gratifying success. He thinks the bi-sulphide of carbon would prove effective in fighting the peach-tree borer and the radish and onion maggots.—Exchange.

Esquimaux Hospitality.

At midnight we arrived at a village, which proved to be much larger than we thought, consisting of twenty-six huts and about 300 inhabitants. Being conducted to the chief, he received us very kindly and allowed us to pitch our tent, which we did in short order, the natives helping us to do so and to unpack our sledges. The chief had Russian tea prepared for us in his dwelling. On the table, consisting of a small box with a really clean cover, was a tea service of four pretty cups and saucers. It took about two hours to get through with the drinking, which was followed by a feast of deer meat. We contributed to the feast by furnishing some hard bread and coffee. The women appear to be the domestics, and are not allowed around when the men are drinking tea, except to wait on them, which they do with the right arm and breast uncovered. We found the oil stove we brought along of the greatest utility, but it did not compensate for the very great inconvenience caused by the absence of sugar, cups, plates and spoons, which in the hurry and confusion incident to departure were forgotten. Having decided to remain the night with the chief, it was 4 o'clock in the morning before we were able to turn in. Then we were obliged to make the natives leave by signs that we wanted to go to sleep, so great was their curiosity in looking at the only white people they had ever seen. Gesler and myself spread our skins and prepared to take it easy. Our drivers found quarters in some of the huts. It was 9 o'clock when we got up after a sleepless night. The weather continued the same—a thick snowstorm. Gesler went out for the purpose of shooting a duck, but was unable to find one. Being warned that it was unsafe to travel till the subsidence of the storm, we concluded to stop until the following morning. In the afternoon, the highest point of the island being ascended, in was found to be 1,200 feet by the barometer. The thermometer stood at 37 deg.; open water could be seen from the top, apparently twenty miles away, and for a few minutes the mainland could be seen to the westward about eight miles off. The natives almost pull our tents to pieces trying to crowd in, and they leave us alone only when we tell them we want to sleep. Our sledges have been repaired and our dogs have been fed for the first time. Late in the evening the weather cleared a little, when the main land could be seen from our tent. It was nearly midnight before we turned in.

We turned out early the next morning, and prepared breakfast of potatoes, bacon, coffee and the large eggs which had been brought us by the young natives. It is the first real meal we have had since leaving the ship. The day was warm and pleasant, making the snow too warm to travel. However, we struck our tent and packed everything on the sledges ready for an early start in the evening. It took some time to collect the dogs, as some of them had gone sealing with their natives. We left two letters with the chief, and his wife invited us to eat some fish at their house. They might have been very good if properly cooked and served. As it was they were served in a large tray not over clean, into which the bones, along with saliva were ejected from the mouths of the native guests, who assisted at the feast. All, except ourselves, among whom was divided one fork, ate with fingers.—Lieut. Reynolds' Account of the Corwin Cruise.

The Man with the Umbrella.

Why it is that the public do not look kindly upon a man carrying an umbrella in a hot day is a mystery to be solved, but the fact is they do not, and that not one man in a hundred has the moral courage to carry one. Yesterday, when an eminent and dignified citizen, coming back from his dinner, turned into Griswold street with an umbrella over his head he was accosted with:

"Been raining down your way?"

"No, sir!"

"Going to?"

"No, sir!"

"Then you carry the umbrella to keep the flies off?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, that's a good plan, and all soft men ought to practice it."

The next man had a grin on his face as he called out:

"What's that for?"

"To keep the sun off."

"What do you want to keep the sun off for?"

"Might get sunstruck."

"Suppose you did?"

"Suppose you mind your own business, sir."

The next one presumed upon his long friendship to halt the man with the umbrella and whisper:

"Pretty sharp in you, old fellow; keep the edges toward your creditors and they can't see you."

Other men told him that wearing a poultice on the head would dispense with the umbrella, and others said if he was afraid of his ears being tanned he should fasten a fan on each side of his hat. Not one single man took him by the hand and encouraged him, and when he reached the postoffice he was so discouraged that he lowered his shade, and used it to punch the ribs of a boy who had begun to sing:

He's a flat, he's a feller,
And his lugs an old umbrella.

Restoring the Action of the Heart.

In a letter to the London Lancet, Dr. A. Paggi records the following observations: He states that in Paris he saw a case in which, under the inhalation of chloroform, the heart ceased to beat, and artificial respiration for ten minutes failed to restore circulation, when Dr. Labbe dipped a large cloth in boiling water and applied it to the region of the heart, with the result of immediately restoring the action of that organ.

WEATHER INDICATIONS.

A Great Western Prophet on the Elements—Sure Signs.

[From the Burlington Hawk-Eye.]

It is an easy matter to forecast the weather, like Prof. Tice and Mr Vennor, if people will only give their minds to it. By closely reading and studying the predictions of these good weather-breeders we have deduced the following rules by which they make all their forecasts—hindcasts of the weather are not made until next day.

An intensely blue sky indicates a temporary absence of clouds. Under other circumstances an intensely blue sky indicates a tornado.

When a woman leaves a piece of soap on the stairs where her husband will tread upon it, it is a dead-sure sign of a storm.

When the sun rises behind a bank of clouds and the clouds hang low all around the horizon and all over the sky, and the air feels damp, and there is a fine drizzling mist blowing, the indications are that there will be rain somewhere in the United States or Canada.

When it begins to thunder look out for lightning.

When a man gets up in the night and feels along the top pantry shelf in the dark and knocks the big square bottle without any label down to the floor and breaks it, it is a sign there is going to be a dry spell until 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning.

When the spring millinery openings are advertised look for bright, sunny weather all around the house, with treacherous calms and rising barometer, indicative of sudden tempest and mean temperature.

When the cradle begins to vibrate with irregular, spasmodic motions about 1 o'clock in the morning, look out for signals and try to remember where you put the paregoric the last time you used it.

When the youngest boy in the family comes home three hours after school hours, with his hair wet and his shirt wrong side out, look out for a spanking breeze.

To see the head of the family feeling in his right-hand pocket, then in his left-hand pocket, then in all his vest pockets, then in his hip pocket, then in his coat pockets, and then look at the ceiling, indicates "no change."

If he suddenly stops whistling to the ceiling and expands his broad grimace of delight, in means "unexpected change."

If the spring bonnet comes home trimmed on the right side of the wearer's seat in church, and has two more sprigs and three more dandelions than the woman in the next pew, it is "set fair."

The weather during the whole of Thanksgiving week——()* !

An unusually large number of spiders presages a very mild or a very open winter, as the case may be.

If the corn husks are very thick the winter will be colder than the summer.

If the corn husks are very thin the summer will be warmer than the winter.

If the corn husks are neither too thin nor too thick the summer will be warm, and the winter will be cold.

If the weather prophet predicts a rainy season and it happens to rain away out in Calaveras county, and it is as dry as a bone all over the rest of America, this rain must be set down to the credit of the weather-breeder and all the dry time counts for nothing.

The Native Esquimaux.

The Esquimaux generally are a goodish lot of poor devils as far as disposition is concerned, their good nature apparently beginning with boyhood. A short time since a canoe was alongside in which lay a baby enveloped in furs, its tiny hands protruding and holding a piece of blubber, which it sucked with apparent relish. It was quick to feel itself an object of attraction, and its chubby face returned any number of smiles of recognition, alternating with occasional blinks caused by the falling snow. Something of the artistic instinct also crops out in their disposition, as may be witnessed from rude carvings of ivory and attempts at delineation. At St. Michael's an Esquimaux boy who has never had any instruction draws extremely well. They have music peculiar to themselves, and are devotedly fond of dancing, which is done entirely by the women, who, being stripped to the waist for the occasion, are more decollette than our women at the "germans." The men are spectators.

It is much to be regretted that they are not more cleanly in their persons and habits. If an enterprising entomologist were so inclined it would be quite possible for him to supplement the paper to the Royal Society, made some years ago, on the "Ethnological Classification of Vermin," and "Ouida" might find material which, if worked up, would surpass in disgustfulness the flea epic mentioned in "Moths."

As a trader the Esquimaux is a regular Shylock. He will haggle about the slightest matter in making a bargain, although bartering for 10 cents' worth of tobacco a skin that could not be got for as many dollars in New York. Occasionally one or two are met with not so unsophisticated. A chap on the Siberian coast having a quantity of furs to dispose of, being offered some trifling thing, exclaimed (using a phrase unmentionable to ears polite), "those skins are worth $10 down in San Francisco." Another fellow said he had been to California on a whaler, and being asked his name said it was "Shoo Fly."

In physiognomy this race has many of the Mongolian peculiarities, yet the type varies. In the vicinity of East cape a few are to be seen having distinctive Hebrew noses, others of a more Milesian cast of features look like Irishmen, while one old fellow was found the very image of the proprietor of Wormley's Hotel, in Washington. Physically they are far behind the Anglo-Saxon, if the writer may be allowed to regard himself as a standard of comparison. They are wanting in biceps, cannot swim, stand on their heads nor turn somersaults. A few gymnastic tricks fill them with admiration and astonishment.—Lieut. Reynolds.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

THERE is a bank of coal about two miles from El Moro, Col., high up on the mountain north of the town, that has been on fire for upward of thirty years.

A FABULOUS story of the manufacture of glass is that the Israelites set fire to a forest, and the heat, becoming intense, made the niter and sand melt and flow along the mountain side, where it melted as glass.

THE solitary wasps sting their victims in such a manner as to pierce the ganglia, and thus, without killing them, almost deprive them of all power of movement. One species of sphex, which preys on a large grasshopper, after having almost paralyzed her victim in the usual manner, throws it on its back, bends the head so as to extend the articulators of the neck, and then, seizing the membrane between the head and the body with her jaws, crushes the ganglion—a marvelous instinct.

THE wild dogs of India run by nose, and, having made themselves acquainted with sambur or other deer in the valley or jheel of the jungle, they separate and lie in wait at the different passes from the ghat, crouching on the high ground above the paths taken by the deer. One or two of the pack then go around and rouse the sambur, which rushes up hill by one of the many paths. The dog which lies in waiting springs at his victim and fixes to his throat, and the others soon run into him.

THE curious custom of preserving the tears shed at a funeral is still carried out in Persia as in olden times. The tears are bottled in the following manner: As the mourners are sitting around and weeping the master of ceremonies presents each with a piece of cotton wool, with which he wipes off his tears. This cotton is afterward squeezed into a bottle, and the tears are preserved as a powerful and efficacious remedy for reviving a dying man after every other means have failed. It is also employed as a charm against evil influences.

A GENTLEMAN had his curiosity aroused, while the trees were covered thickly with ice, as to the relative weight of the ice and wood it surrounded. So he cut off a limb and found that it weighed two and three-quarters pounds; after the ice was melted it weighed two ounces. Two hours later another trial was made; at first the limb weighed four and one-half pounds; after the ice was removed it weighed three ounces. Another trial showed a weight of thirty-two pounds, while the limb alone weighed two pounds, making thirty pounds of ice.

A YOUNG man in Danbury, Ct., lost his arm in a railroad accident. For some time thereafter he was seriously troubled by pains as of the cramping of the fingers and thumb of the missing arm. He felt the pain, although he knew well that there was no arm there. At length the lost arm was exhumed, and it was found that the fingers and thumb were cramped in just the manner he had described when suffering the pain. They were put in a comfortable position and returned to their grave, whereupon the patient was immediately relieved of the pain, and has suffered no more with it since.

Aunt Susan's Suggestions to a Fretful Wife.

—"Hester;" exclaimed Aunt Susan, ceasing her rocking and knitting, and sitting upright. "Do you know what your husband will do when you are dead?"

"What do you mean?" was the startled reply.

"He will marry the sweetest-tempered girl he can find."

"Oh, auntie!" Hester began.

"Don't interrupt me until I've finished," said Aunt Susan, leaning back and taking up her knitting. "She may not be as good a housekeeper as you are; in fact, I think not, but she will be good-natured. She may not even love him as well as you do, but she will be good-natured."

"Why, auntie—"

"That isn't all," continued Aunt Susan. "Every day you live you are making your husband more and more in love with that good-natured woman, who may take your place some day. After Mr. and Mrs. Harrison left you, the other night, the only remark he made about them was: 'She is a sweet woman.'"

"Oh, auntie—"

"That isn't all," composedly continued Aunt Susan. "To-day your husband was half way across the kitchen floor, bringing you the first ripe peaches, and all you did was to look on and say: 'There, Will, just see your tracks on my clean floor! I won't have my floor all tracked up.' Some men would have thrown the peaches out of the window. To-day you screwed up your face when he kissed you, because his mustache was damp, and said, 'I never want you to kiss me again.' When he empties anything you tell him not to spill it; when he lifts anything you tell him not to break it. From morning until night your sharp voice is heard complaining and fault-finding. And last winter, when you were sick, you scolded him about his allowing the pump to freeze, and took no notice when he said, 'I was so anxious about you that I did not think of the pump.'"

"But, auntie—"

"Hearken, child. The strongest and most intelligent of them all care more for a woman's tenderness than for anything else in the world, and without this the cleverest and most perfect housekeeper is sure to lose her husband's affection in time. There may be a few more men like Will—as gentle, as loving, as chivalrous, as forgetful of self, and so satisfied with loving that their affections will die a long, struggling death; but in most cases it takes but a few years of fretfulness and fault-finding to turn a husband's love into irritated indifference."

"But, auntie—"

"Yes, well! you are not dead yet, and that sweet-natured woman has not been found: so you have time to become so serene and sweet that your husband can never imagine that there is a better-tempered woman in existence."

An Offer Declined.

A letter from the Hon. Crabtree Lynch, of Buffalo, who styles himself: "The mastodon orator of the nineteenth century," contained an offer to appear before the club and deliver his lecture on: "Seven Ways of Being Happy," provided his expenses were paid and a $20 bill handed him as he left town.

"We can't accept de offer," said the President in reply. "The price am not only too high, but we doan't want nobody to tell us how to be happy. I doan' know what his seben ways am, but when I gets down of an evenin' wid a pan of mellow apples on one hand, a dish of peanuts on de odder, wid my co'n-cob pipe where I kin reach it an' de dog asleep under the bed, I reckon I tackle 'bout all de happiness any one need fish fur in dis weary world. If I had six odder ways in reserve I should bust wid comfort."—Lime-Kiln Club.

Koumiss.

The Tartars and some other equestrian tribes, from time immemorial it is said, have practiced the art of brewing a sort of beer from mare's milk; and in later times they have learned how to distill this beer and procure from it a very potent brandy. Koumiss is the native name of the mare's milk beer, and rack or racky of the koumiss brandy. This koumiss has at times become celebrated among enlightened people as a health reviver—a fact, by the way, not at all extraordinary, and not necessarily dependent upon any good quality of the koumiss. The regular doctors and the standard medicines fail us so often that we must not be too severe on the afflicted, who, in their despair, resort to quacks and the outlandish devices of the barbarians.

The following account of the preparation of koumiss by the Tartars is on the authority of a memoir by Dr. Grieve, in 1788, to the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Take any quantity of mare's milk, dilute it with a sixth of water, pour it into a wooden vessel, and add as a ferment about one-eighth of very sour milk, or better, of old koumiss, cover the vessel with a thick cloth and keep it at a moderate temperature. After standing twenty-four hours, a thick coagulum rises to the top, which must be well mixed in by beating and churning. After reposing for another day, it is again stirred till it becomes quite homogeneous, and in this state it forms the new koumiss, which has an agreeable sweetish acescent taste. Koumiss keeps well, and like other beers and wines, with proper care, improves with age in taste and becomes more alcoholic.

It is often preserved and transported in bottles made from horse-skin; a complete bottle is made from the skin of the hind-quarter, the leg forming the neck of the bottle. We understand that it is the practice of some of the tribes to prepare koumiss in the skin-bottles by simply filling up the bottle with fresh milk as fast as the koumiss is consumed. If the rate of using and filling up be properly regulated, a pretty uniform product would be secured, but of course it would be a sort of "'alf and 'alf."

It is to be understood that mare's milk is the basis of the genuine koumiss, and no doubt genuine koumiss has a taste and odor peculiar to and characteristic of mare's milk. But as to chemical constitution, there is very little difference between mare's milk and that of other large mammals, and any kind of milk will produce koumiss closely resembling the genuine. The Tartars use mare's milk because of the abundance of horses in comparison with other available milk-giving animals. Horses and Tartars have been constant companions for ages, and thus it has come about that Tartars became experts in the difficult art of milking mares and then invented koumiss. The ancient Scotch made a fermented drink out of milk, but not mare's milk, which it is proper to allude to here. The basis of the Scotch drink was whey, which was prepared by keeping it buried in the ground, undisturbed, for a year.

A drink under the name of koumiss has been on sale in some of the saloons of this city, which is prepared from a recipe substantially as follows: To one quart of milk add one table-spoonful of sugar and the same of brewer's yeast; when sufficiently fermented, preserve in strong bottles.

Wine whey, and innumerable punches, and Tom and Jerries, which contain milk as an essential ingredient, also are related to koumiss. And there are those, constantly increasing in number, who do not allow that milk can be improved for any useful purpose by the addition of alcohol.—Scientific American.

The Malaria Puzzle.

The people both in town and country are becoming more and more puzzled over the definition of malaria and the results of its effects on public health. When it was an emanation that declared itself in the soil of the Lombardo-Venetian plains, it took the form of an intermittent fever and assumed that guise in whatever locality it appeared. It is only of late years that it has assumed a variety of shapes, and is now spreading itself insiduously in all localities, and is mainly traceable to emanations from badly ventilated sewers, and even from soils that have no connection whatever with the marsh miasma to which its prolonged debilitating effects were once attributable. Indeed it has assumed so many complexions that even the shrewdest pathologists are unable to trace it to its origin or to devise means for its exclusion, or to prescribe methods for the relief of its consequences.—Exchange.

THE Philadelphia Easy Hour mentions Mr. J. A. Walton, of 1245 North Twelfth street, that city, as an enthusiastic indorser of St. Jacobs Oil for the relief and cure of diseases of horses.

WORK is the law of our being—the living principle that carries men and nations onward. The greater number of men have to work with their hands as a matter of necessity, in order to live; but all must work in one way or another, if they would enjoy life as it ought to be enjoyed. Labor may be a burden and a chastisement, but it is also an honor and a glory. Without it nothing can be accomplished. All that is great in man comes through work, and civilization is its product. Were labor abolished, the race of Adam were at once stricken by moral death.

HABITUAL costiveness afflicts millions of the American people. Kidney-Wort will cure it.

AN EX-CONSUL'S STORY.

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

A late United States Consul at one of the English inland ports, who is now a private resident of New York, relates the following interesting story. He objects, for private reasons, to having his name published, but authorizes the writer to substantiate his statement, and, if necessary, to refer to him, in his private capacity, any person seeking such reference. Deferring to his wishes, I hereby present his statement in almost the exact language in which he gave it to me.

C. M. FARMER.
1659 Third Avenue, New York.

"On my last voyage home from England, some three years ago, in one of the Cunard steamers, I noticed one morning, after a few days out of port, a young man hobbling about on the upper deck, supported by crutches and seeming to move with extreme difficulty and no little pain. He was well dressed and of exceedingly handsome countenance, but his limbs were somewhat emaciated and his face very sallow and bore the traces of long suffering. As he seemed to have no attendant or companion, he at once attracted my sympathies, and I went up to him as he leaned against the taffrail looking out on the foaming track which the steamer was making.

"'Excuse me, my young friend,' I said, touching him gently on the shoulder, 'you appear to be an invalid and hardly able or strong enough to trust yourself unattended on an ocean voyage; but if you require any assistance I am a robust and healthy man and shall be glad to help you.'

"'You are very kind,' he replied, in a weak voice, 'but I require no present aid beyond my crutches, which enable me to pass from my stateroom up here to get the benefit of the sunshine and the sea breeze.'

"'You have been a great sufferer, no doubt,' I said, 'and I judge that you have been afflicted with that most troublesome disease—rheumatism; whose prevalence and intensity seem to be on an alarming increase both in England and America.'

"'You are right,' he answered; 'I have been its victim for more than a year, and after failing to find relief from medical skill have lately tried the Springs of Carlsbad and Vichy. But they have done me no good, and I am now on my return home to Missouri to die, I suppose. I shall be content if life is spared me to reach my mother's presence. She is a widow and I am her only child.'

"There was a pathos in this speech which affected me profoundly, and awakened in me a deeper sympathy than I had felt before. I had no words to answer him, and stood silently beside him, watching the snowy wake of the ship. While thus standing my thoughts reverted to a child—a 10-year-old boy—of a neighbor of mine, residing near my consulate residence, who had been cured of a stubborn case of rheumatism by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, and I remembered that the steward of the ship had told me the day before that he had cured himself of a very severe attack of the gout in New York just before his last voyage by the use of the same remedy. I at once left my young friend and went below to find the steward. I not only found him off duty, but discovered that he had a bottle of the Oil in his locker, which he had carried across the ocean in case of another attack. He readily parted with it on my representation, and, hurrying up again, I soon persuaded the young man to allow me to take him to his berth and apply the remedy. After doing so I covered him up snugly in bed and requested him not to get up until I should see him again. That evening I returned to his stateroom and found him sleeping peacefully and breathing gently. I roused him and inquired how he felt. 'Like a new man,' he answered, with a grateful smile. 'I feel no pain and am able to stretch my limbs without difficulty. I think I'll get up.' 'No, don't get up to-night,' I said, 'but let me rub you again with the Oil, and in the morning you will be much better able to go above.' 'All right,' he said, laughing. I then applied the Oil again, rubbing his knees, ankles and arms thoroughly, until he said he felt as if he had a mustard poultice all over his body. I then left him. The next morning when I went up on deck for a breezy promenade, according to my custom, I found my patient waiting for me with a smiling face, and without his crutches, although he limped in his movements, but without pain. I don't think I ever felt so happy in my life. To make a long story short, I attended him closely during the rest of our voyage—some four days—applying the Oil every night, and guarding him against too much exposure to the fresh and damp spring breezes, and, on landing at New York, he was able, without assistance, to mount the hotel omnibus and go to the Astor House. I called on him two days later, and found him actually engaged in packing his trunk, preparatory to starting West for his home, that evening. With a bright and grateful smile he welcomed me, and pointing to a little box, carefully done up in thick brown paper, which stood upon the table, he said: 'My good friend, can you guess what that is?' 'A present for your sweetheart,' I answered. 'No,' he laughed—'that is a dozen bottles of St. Jacobs Oil, which I have just purchased from Hudnut, the druggist across the way, and I am taking them home to show my good mother what has saved her son's life and restored him to her in health. And with it, I would like to carry you along also, to show her the face of him without whom I should probably never have tried it. If you should ever visit the little village of Sedalia, Mo., Charlie Townsend and his mother will welcome you to their little home, with hearts full of gratitude, and they will show you a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil enshrined in a silver and gold casket, which we shall keep as a parlor ornament as well as memento of our meeting on the Cunard steamer.'

"We parted, after an hour's pleasant chat, with mutual good-will and esteem, and a few weeks afterward I received a letter from him telling me he was in perfect health, and containing many graceful expressions of his affectionate regards."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A French Boy and His Mother.

Nothing in this imperfect world is so beautiful as the relations of a French son to his mother. He sees from his first sentient look the being whom every one in the house adores. Does the nurse or the maid speak even sharply to the mistress of the house she is immediately discharged. The child would thus see its mother's authority verified from the first, and, whatever we may say on this side of the water of the marriage relation in France, the master of the house certainly compels a sort of respect toward the mother and mistress of the house, which goes far toward making the manners of a nation respectful and polite. From the cradle to the grave a French son has one duty, one affection, which is paramount to all others—that is, his love for his mother. As a child, as a boy, he treats her with perfect respect and obedience. As a young man, he delights to send her flowers, to take her to the theaters and cafes. It is a common sight in Paris to see a young man with an aged and gray-haired woman at the public galleries and places of amusement, apparently perfectly happy with each other, the young man studying to make his mother comfortable and amused. Often, in leaving France, a young man asks of his family the privilege of taking his mother with him as his "guide, philosopher and friend." Before his marriage is arranged she is his constant companion and his best adviser. Never until death separates them does he fail in his duty toward her; and after that event has closed his sweet, dutiful history, he keeps the anniversary of her death as his most sacred day, and visits her grave with his children to dress it with flowers.—Book of Amenities of Home.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

MR. BRAMI has made a number of experiments on animals with pure hydrocianic acid, and reports that the flesh of those killed with it remained unaffected by decomposition about a month. He found also that in separating the acid from the tissues by distillation that it was more readily accomplished in cases of herbivorous than of carnivorous animals.

IN a letter to the Lancet, Dr. A. Paggi records the following observation: He states that in Paris he saw a case in which, under the inhalation of chloroform, the heart ceased to beat, and artificial respiration for ten minutes failed to restore circulation, when Dr. Labbe dipped a large cloth in boiling water and applied it to the region of the heart, with the result of immediately restoring the action of that organ.

A FRENCHMAN has devised a method of converting iron into steel and at the same time producing illuminating gas. The iron is placed in a retort with charcoal or coke in layers, and is heated to 1,650 degrees Fahrenheit. Fatty matters are then injected, and as soon as decomposition has taken place a jet of dry steam is passed over the incandescent mass. The iron is thus changed into steel, while carburetted hydrogen is given off from the retort.

THE lead used in sounding from a vessel usually weighs about fourteen pounds, but in deep-sea soundings a weight of not less than 150 pounds is frequently employed. Wire has been largely used for a line, as it makes less friction in sinking through the water. With hemp rope a sinker of 300 weight is sometimes twenty minutes in reaching the bottom in 1,560 fathoms of water, so great is the friction of the line.

PROFESSOR IRA REMSEN, of John Hopkins University, has been investigating the question whether or not cast-iron stoves allow deleterious gases to escape, and the result vindicates the stoves. The professor finds that carbonic oxide, the gas generally thought to be emitted, does not pass through red-hot cast-iron even if it is not more than an eighth of an inch thick; and he says, moreover, that after careful examination he did not find, in any instance, hurtful gas given out by a well-made furnace.

MR. MAXIM, inventor of one of the electric lights, ridicules the idea that there is danger to either life or property from the use of that light, and says he is ready at any time to take the shock from any number of the largest machines. While lightning will jump through two miles of air and forty feet of solid rock, he asserts that no dynamo machine used for the electric light in this country will make a current of sufficient strength to jump through the one-hundreth part of an inch of either air or stone.

G. H. DARWIN has been trying to estimate the stresses caused in the interior of the earth by the weight of continents and mountains, and concludes that either the materials of the earth at 1,000 miles from the surface have about the strength of granite or that they have a much greater strength nearer to the surface. He confirms Sir William Thomson's theory that the earth must be solid nearly throughout its whole mass, and he attributes the lava of volcanoes to the melting of solid rock, which exist at high temperatures, at points where the pressure is diminished, or to the existence of comparatively small vesicles of molten rock.

Baby Saved.

We are so thankful to say that our baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The parents, Rochester, N. Y. See another column.—Buffalo Express.

Cause for Gratitude.

Uncle Mose met Aunt Sally on Austin avenue. As she wore a down-in-the-mouth expression, Uncle Moses asked her:

"What ails yer, Aunt Sally? Is yer worryin' bekase Marse Roberts am 'posed to de union ob church and state, and ter President Garfield gettin' well?"

"Tain't dat ar."

"What am de truble, den?"

"De truble am, Uncle Mose, wid my ole man. He am gettin' more crosser ebery day. I has done my lebel bes', but he am gettin' wusser and wusser ebery day. Dar's no chance for him to 'prove enyhow."

"I knows yer ole man berry well, and I say yer has cause to be thankful."

"How so, Uncle Mose?"

"Bekase he can't get no wusser den he am already. He am de meanest nigger in Austin."

And then Aunt Sally whacked old Mose over the head with her umbrella.—Texas Siftings.

is uniform success, and on this basis Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is without doubt one of the greatest remedies in the land.

IN THE course of a conversation at Concord School, Prof. Harris said that "by means of his morning paper, man each day adjusted anew his relation to the universe." "By this wonderful principle," he added, "of the co-operation of man with his race, by which each partakes of the wisdom of all, we have, for three cents, our daily knowledge from Japan, Arabia, and the entire earth. The most potent element in modern civilization is the newspaper."

BRICKLAYERS make use of spirits of turpentine, and also of vinegar, for the purpose of removing mortar stains from pressed brick fronts, the materials being carefully applied with a sponge or rag. Any acid applied in the above manner, in very dilute form, would answer the purpose. Vinegar being a very dilute acetic acid is probably as good a recipe as can be given.

He Had a Bad Memory.

There is a poker-club in Yonkers which meets on Sundays. They call it the Sunday-school club, and that's where they tell their families they go on Sunday afternoon. By invitation, Stimp joined last Sunday's session. His wife was a little skeptical about his going to a Sunday-school club, and Monday morning questioned him a little. "What did you do there?" "Oh! they read the scriptures and discussed them." "Did you pay any attention to what was said?" "Of course." "What did they read about?" "The Hebrew children." "How many Hebrew children?" "Do you know the coffee is too weak?" "No. How many Hebrew children?" Stimp had the cup to his lips and he kept it there, trying to remember if there were not three score and ten, when one of the little girls answered, "Three!" "Three!" echoed Stimp. "What became of them"? "I almost forget, but I believe that Isaac was eaten by a ram at the flaming bush; Daniel was cast into the lion's belly; and Jonah raised gourds in the whale's den." That settled the matter. Stimp's wife knows that he did not go to Sunday-school. But he refuses to tell her what became of that $40 he had on Saturday.—Exchange.

"HAVE you spoken to pa about that yet?" anxiously inquired the oldest daughter of her indulgent mother. "No, my child, not yet. Your father is too busy with his creditors to think of pony phaetons and russet harness to match just now." "Bother the creditors," was the snappish reply. "That's what your father is doing, my dear. After he has compromised you shall have your turnout."

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

TO BE SOLD AT AUCTION.

These familiar words recall to the farmer and others interested, the unfortunate necessity of sometimes getting rid of Stock that is not otherwise salable on account of blemishes or imperfections. To improve upon this method, by showing how to restore your Stock to first-class condition, is the plan herewith presented. The signal benefit of the Great German Remedy to mankind very reasonably induced its application to the sufferings and ailments of the dumb creation, beginning with the Horse. People who tried it were more than surprised by its results, as attested in the speedy and permanent cure of their Stock, and they gladly announced their experience by word of mouth and by the public press, until to-day FARMERS and DEALERS, STOCKMEN AND BREEDERS, the COUNTRY OVER, are using ST. JACOBS OIL with delight, satisfaction and profit. The mistake of thinking that anything is good enough for a Horse is made by others who lose their Stock by a miserable effort at economy. There are others who humanely regard the welfare of their faithful dumb creatures, and provide for their comfort with good food and shelter, and for their health by a constant supply of ST. JACOBS OIL,—the safest and speediest relief for Diseases of Horses and Stock ever discovered. Whenever there appears any evidence whatsoever of disease or injury among Animals, they should have the best possible treatment, as it never pays to defer attention to Stock. Inasmuch, then, as it is the part of common prudence to use the surest curative means in the beginning, every Stable, Farm and Stock-yard should be abundantly supplied with ST. JACOBS OIL, which is used and recommended by the best Horsemen in the country as an article which will relieve more promptly and certainly the ailments of and injuries to Stock than any other remedy known. For Spavin, Ringbone, Wind-Gall, Flesh-Wounds and Galls of all kinds, Poll-Evil, Splint, Swellings, Tumors, Fistula, Lameness, Stiffness, Cramps of the Muscle, Acute and Chronic Founder, Mange, Corns, Whitlows, Broken Knees, Cuts, Colic, Sore Throat, Distemper, and many other Diseases, especially Foot-Rot in Sheep, ST. JACOBS OIL affords instant relief and a sure cure, and costs but FIFTY CENTS. Pamphlets containing full directions for home treatment of diseases of domestic animals, sent upon application, by

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.
GENTLEMEN:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

MONDAY night, at midnight, the bells rang out on the still night air, the solemn news, that the president was dead. He quietly breathed his last that evening at Long Branch, at 10:30. He had been gradually failing during the day, but no immediate danger was apprehended. During the evening he expressed himself as feeling comfortable, and finally fell asleep. On awakening, he complained of a severe pain. Dr. Bliss came, and immediately sent for Mrs. Garfield. In about twenty minutes he was dead. The immediate cause of his dying so suddenly, was the rupture of a vein near the track of the ball. Word was at once sent to different members of his family. Two sons were at Williams college, but one was unable to leave his room, on account of sickness. His aged mother, though greatly prostrated by the shock, will be able to attend the funeral, which will be in Cleveland next Monday. He will be buried in Lake View cemetery, near that place. A post mortem examination showed that the ball had lodged just in front of the left side of the spinal column, and below the stomach, and was completely encysted. Guiteau will be tried in Washington.

AT the coming cotton exposition at Atlanta, among other novelties, will be the manufacture of cloth from raw cotton, in the presence of the visitors. Senator Brown, of Georgia, will have a suit of clothes manufactured at the Atlanta exposition, from raw cotton, within the space of twenty-four hours, the cotton to be picked, ginned, spun, dyed and woven in public.

SINCE ex-Senator Christiancy returned from Peru, he has been stopping at the National hotel in Washington. Last week during his absence, some thieves entered his room and stole a package of diamonds worth $6,000. They did not belong to the ex-minister, but had been sent to this country in his care, by parties in Peru.

THERE are now but about 490 prisoners in the state prison at Jeffersonville, and the number is said to be diminishing continually.

ARTHUR was sworn in at midnight, on Monday night, at his home in New York City. A judge of the state supreme court administered the oath.

THE national fair of the Indians in the Indian territory, was held at Muskogee last week. It is managed entirely by Indians, and the exhibits are all of their make.

A BROTHER to Mrs. Christiancy has challenged the ex-senator, but his exship don't take kindly to warlike arbitration of his domestic troubles, and declines—with thanks.

SEVERAL of the decendants of Baron Steuben, are now officers in the German army, and have accepted the invitation of the United States to attend the Yorktown centennial next month.

SEVERAL land slides have occured near Elm Switzerland lately. It is believed that more than forty persons have perished. The river has become so much filled up at that point, that it has formed a large lake, which covers many fine farms.

Now that the Michigan fires are extinguished and the danger over, comes the report that extensive brush fires are breaking out in California and other parts of the Pacific Slope. But no fear is entertained that they will equal the other in destructiveness.

THE great northwest is having its share of good fortune this year. Minnesota and Dakota, and that part of the British dominions lying north of them have better wheat crops than usual, or at least as good, twenty bushels per acre is said to be the average.

AN iron buoy, that is known to have been placed in the Amoor river, and kept there for a number of years, was recently found floating off the west coast of British Columbia. It is claimed that this shows the existence of a strong ocean current in that direction.

A BALLOONIST known as Professor G. A. Rogers made an ascent near Boston last week, and after sailing some distance attempted to descend. When he had come within 500 or 600 feet of the earth the balloon began to burst, and the gas escaped so rapidly that the professor was pitched out when about 150 feet from the ground. He fell like a dead weight, and was found doubled up and nearly unconscious. On examination it was found that he was not seriously hurt, and he was cared for by physicians, who believe he will recover.

Ft. W.J.R.R. will sell tickets to the Northern Indiana fair to be held at Ft. Wayne, Sept. 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30. One fare for the round-trip good to return not later than train No. 5, Oct. 1.

POLITICIANS are still gossiping about vice President Arthur's birth place. If he was born outside of the United States, he is not eligible to the presidency in case of Garfield's death. He would also be ineligible to the vice presidency which he is now holding. Arthur, himself, is discreetly quiet.

ONLY a few years ago, the reliably republican state of Minnesota repudiated a part of her state debt, to the extent of one half. She paid only fifty cents on the dollar. Ever since that time, her people in common with all the republican party, have been pointing the finger of scorn at those southern states who have done or tried to do the same thing. It was a beautiful spectacle. But it is in danger of a transformation at present. A recent decision of the supreme court of the state, is likely to revive the matter, by declaring the state liable for its full indebtedness. It also declares that the legislature had no right to take the actoin it did in the matter.

A DARING attempt to rob the mail coach took place last week. It was in New Hampshire this time, and not in the far west. A single robber stopped a man going along with his family in his own conveyance, robbed him of his watch and $300 in money. The stage coach then came up, and the robber proceeded to stop that. But the driver whipped up his horses and ran over the rascal, knocking him down. Several shots were fired by the passengers, who had not yet learned to submit to this sort of thing. The robber returned the fire, but by the time he had gathered himself up fairly, the coach was rattling away down hill out of his range, and he disappeared in the bushes.

FROM all over the country comes the report of liberal contributions to the fund for the relief of the suffers by the Michigan fires. These contributions at present amount to nearly $50,000 in money. In addition to this, articles of all kinds that can be used by the destitute people, are being rapidly forwarded. Most of those in the burnt district have lost buildings, farms, tools, fences, crops and in fact everything they had. The thing most needed at present, and for which there is need of great hurry, is seed wheat. It is estimated that 80,000 bushels of seed wheat will be needed to supply the present want, and enable those, who have lost their grain, to do the fall seeding.

Rev. L. Rice, of Auburn, who has so long been laboring on this circuit, closed his labors here last Sunday, by delivering a most impressive sermon. The church was full and the attention was excellent to the close. In fact a part of the time, the scene was very impressive. Mr. Rice has made a host of warm friends during his ministry, both for his personal character as a man, and his labors as a christian. During the past nine years, he has preached at this place, Auburn, Sedan and Fairfield Center. He has the best wishes of our people wherever he goes.

—A meeting of citizens of Auburn was held at the sheriff's office on Tuesday evening, for the purpose of taking steps to aid in the relief of the sufferers by the late Michigan fires. A committee of ladies was appointed to solicit money and clothing to be forwarded to those who have suffered so greatly by the recent great fires. An adjourned meeting will be held at the court room on Friday evening, Sept. 23, at which time a report will be made by the committee, and all who are interested in this important matter are earnestly requested to be present. —Court sets next Monday, and the parties most deeply interested, are on the ragged edge.

—Nick Ensley and M. B. Willis "took in" the reunion, at Chattanooga this week.

—Sam, Pete & Max have a new ad. this week. They are always up with the demands of the trade.

—Hon. W. W. Redfield, editor of the Norwalk, Ohio, Experiment, gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday.

—Rev. H. J. Norris, of this place, and Rev. C. W. Church, of Ft. Wayne, will exchange pulpits next Sunday.

—Round trip tickets to the fair at Indianapolis, Sept. 26 to Oct. 1, at reduced rates, from the Wabash depot.

—Charley Emanuel has set up in the law business for himself, and will hereafter be found in Peterson's office.

—Mrs. Mary Carr, of this place, died at the residence of Geo. Stahl last Monday, at the advanced age of 78 years.

—Sam Beck, of Waterloo, was in town the other day. He is now engaged in shipping apples and all kinds of fruit.

—Ike Hirschler, of Butler, has fixed up a new saloon and lunch room, and will be pleased to have his friends call and see him.

—Dr. Littlefield and Col. I. B. McDonald, of Columbia City, had a fifty yard foot race recently, in which the Dr. came out victorious.

—Wm. Gengnagle, of Butler, son of N. F. Gengnagle, died on Sunday, Sept. 18, 1881, of consumption. Aged 24 years 9 months and 17 days.

—Dr. Wilbarger has arrived with his family, for permenant location, in the town of Auburn. Office on seventh street, above Pommert's barber shop.

—See Isaac Ochs' advertisement in this week's paper. Mr. Ochs challenges any house in this part of the state to compete with him in prices and goods.

—We call attention to the fair of the M. E. church next week. The ladies deserve a liberal patronage for the efforts they are making. Let them not be disappointed.

—J. Kahn & Co., of Waterloo, are talking to the public this week through our columns. Take a look at their mammoth advertisement. It is of interest to all.

—Mrs. W. B. Clock will go east next week for new goods. She expects to open out a full line of millinery goods in the brick building north of the post office.

—T. C. Mays, the jovial Tom, came home Tuesday. He looks as if the climate agreed with him, and everything is prospering with him. We are glad to note his prosperity.

—While engaged in putting in a culvert from Kiblinger's corner to the public square, Marshal Scott resurrected an old crossing that the oldest inhabitant had forgotten.

—And now comes Kiblinger, the hardware man, with his new stock of stoves. Get ready to put your house in order for the coming winter. Don't buy till you call on him, and get prices.

—Edward Hecke, of Buena Vista, Adams county, Ind., who was stabbed by Dr. F. B. Arthur, a short time ago, has since died from his wounds, and the doctor has left for parts unknown.

—A letter from F. K. Blake, Dixon, Ill., states that the new Normal school already enrolls over eighty students. We predict for Mr. B. and his coadjutators in the work a grand success.

—Tom Scott is an extra good teamster, but when he tries to get two horses to pull a hundred feet of street crossing, with the stringers across the underside, the majority against him is too heavy. He needs more faith or another team of horses.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

As a freight train on the Philadelphia and Erie division of the Pennsylvania railroad was passing over a bridge which spans a creek in Crawford county, Pa., the bridge, which had been weakened by flames from burning trees close to the woodwork, gave way, precipitating the entire train into the ravine beneath. The engineer and fireman were killed, and two tramps, who were stealing a ride in the cars, are also supposed to have perished. The loss of merchandise was very great.

The will of the late Lorenzo Delmonico has been probated. He leaves a fortune of $2,000,000, of which his wife gets $400,000 and his house and stables with all they contain, $600,000 goes to his nephew, Charles C. Delmonico, and the interest on $100,000 goes to his brother Siro.....Ambrose E. Burnside, United States Senator from Rhode Island, expired of spasms of the heart, at Bristol, R. I. He was born at Liberty, Ind., in 1824, and graduated at West Point in 1847. He was a Lieutenant of artillery in the Mexican war, and in 1860 became treasurer of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. He was Colonel of the First Rhode Island regiment at the Battle of Bull Run, served at Antietam as a Major General, and superseded McClellan in command of the Army of the Potomac just before the defeat at Fredericksburg. He served three terms as Governor of Rhode Island, and was sent to the Senate in 1875.

A solitary highway robber in the White mountains stopped a family carriage driven by Frank W. Andrews, of Boston, and secured $200 and a breastpin, but was courteous enough to return some railroad tickets. He then immediately halted the Glen House stage, with four persons on the driver's seat, fired on the passengers and was run down by the horses. A passenger fired a pistol, when the robber escaped to the woods.....Forest fires in South and West Jersey have created immense destruction to valuable woodlands. The drought is the greatest known for many years in the State, and has proved highly destructive to grain and fruit crops. The loss is estimated at thousands of dollars.

THE WEST.

A Kansas City dispatch says that six of the Glendale train-robbers have been captured. They prove to be young farmers living in the immediate vicinity of the outrage, and the idea that the James brothers were in the raid has been quite generally abandoned. Matt Chapman gave to a Sheriff the names of the robbers, and has himself been placed in jail at Independence as a witness.....Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas, of Chicago, who has for several days been under investigation as a heretic, has been found guilty on all the charges, and will be deprived of fellowship in the Methodist church until he can be formally tried at the annual conference at Sycamore, Ill.

A Kansas City reporter, named Nunnelly, had a thrilling experience with a party of the Jesse James gang of outlaws. About midnight some strange party representing himself as a newspaper man came to Nunnelly and stated that he had a startling piece of news, which could be obtained in a very short time if he would follow him. He did as he was bidden. On the way to a point about a mile south of Kansas City the unknown man asked Nunnelly what he knew regarding the James boys, and was told by him that he was acquainted with them, and had served on Pinkerton's detective force in pursuit of them on several occasions. Suddenly the interrogator interrupted by informing Nunnelly that he was Jesse James, and that he proposed to kill him. At this time five men rose mysteriously from the side of the road and covered the victim with revolvers, compelling him to throw up his hands. The gang started to take Nunnelly along with them, but he broke away and ran for his life through the dense underbrush, and made his escape. The gang followed and fired a number of shots at the fleeing journalist, none of which took effect.

When the steamer Gen. Sherman arrived at Standing Rock to transfer Sitting Bull's party to Fort Randall, the noted Sioux declared he would never go on board alive. He was promptly overpowered by the soldiers, bound hand and foot, and carried up the gang-plank. The other Indians had displayed some insubordination, but quietly followed when their chief had been subdued.....There is a strong sentiment in Arizona in favor of the expulsion of the savages from the Territory.....The Southern Ute Indians are said to be preparing to take the war path.

Bernard Behr, a German resident of St. Louis, whose fondness for whisky made him poor, dressed himself in his best clothes, bade his wife good-by, went into the garret of his house, put one foot in a bucket of water, cut himself in the calf of the leg, and sat there until he bled to death.

The good work of raising aid for the sufferers by the great fires in Michigan, and of distributing supplies throughout the burnt district is going forward vigorously and systematically. The subscriptions in Detroit foot up over $15,000; Bay City has raised $2,500; East Saginaw, $3,000; Saginaw City, $1,500; Pontiac, $1,500; Jackson, over $2,000; Rome, $3,000; Adrian, $3,000; Grand Haven, over $1,000. Other Michigan towns and cities have contributed in proportion, and further subscriptions are coming constantly.

Prof. King and seven companions ascended from St. Paul in a balloon on the 12th inst., intending to make an air voyage to the Atlantic coast. The balloon was weighted with 800 pounds of provisions and instruments and two tons of ballast. They crossed the Mississippi at an altitude of 4,200 feet, enjoying a glorious sunset, and obtaining a magnificent view of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Soon afterward the wind died out, and they descended six miles from the starting point.

A portion of the property stolen from the passengers on the Chicago and Alton road, near Glendale, Mo., has been recovered. It was found in a cave some miles from the scene of the robbery.—The Chicago Tribune reports that the railroad managers "feel quite confident that all those who participated in the robbery will be bagged this time, and that henceforth train-robberies will be of much less frequent occurrence in that unsavory locality. The best sign about the matter is, they say, that the more respectable people in that section are getting aroused, and seem determined to make an end to the depredations and finish the depredators. They are also full of praise about the work done by Gov. Crittenden since the robbery occurred. The Governor himself has gone to the scene of the robbery, and is spurring on the officers of the law to do their whole duty, and to see that none of the bandits escape.".....Three hundred stands of arms and 15,000 cartridges have been shipped to Tucson, Arizona, from Fort Union.....The business portion of the town of Beaver, U. T., except a co-operative store, burned.

The following appeal for aid in behalf of the sufferers by the late forest fires has been issued by the Citizens' Relief Committee of Detroit:

An Appeal for the Destitute.—To the People of the United States: The counties of Huron and Sanilac, and parts of the counties of Tuscola and Lapeer, in Michigan, have been visited by dreadful calamities. Forest-fires driven by high winds swept over more than 1,800 square miles of this region. In a portion of it the destruction was only partial. In the greater part of it the ruin is complete. More than 300 people were burned to death in the flames or suffocated in the smoke. Many others who escaped were severely burned, and yet survive in great suffering. More than 15,000 people were made shelterless. The greater part of these lost all they possessed. Their houses, barns, fences, crops, agricultural implements, furniture and clothing were entirely consumed, and they are absolutely destitute and dependent upon the generosity of the humane for the necessaries of life. Immediately that the magnitude of the disaster was known, the Mayor of Detroit, by proclamation, called a meeting of citizens to aid the sufferers. At this meeting all the prominent commercial, manufacturing and banking houses of the city were represented. They appointed a relief committee, consisting of the Hon. William G. Thompson, Mayor of the city; James McMillan, President of the Michigan Car Company; Edward K. Norton, President of the Detroit Board of Trade; Martin Butzel, of the firm of Heineman, Butzel & Co.; George McMillan, of the firm of G. & R. McMillan; and R. W. King, of R. W. King & Son. It is needless to say that these gentlemen are among the most honorable and enterprising citizens of Detroit. This committee immediately organized and appointed well-known, reliable business men of the burnt district as agents for the distribution of relief. The citizens of Detroit immediately contributed to this committee a large sum of money, and the work of raising contributions goes steadily on. Detroit and Michigan will give liberally, but the wants of sufferers are beyond their capacity to relieve. We therefore appeal to the generous throughout the United States to assist us in discharging this duty of humanity to the destitute sufferers. They need food, clothing, bedding, furniture, shelter, cattle, seed for crops, agricultural implements, table-ware, kitchen utensils, medicines and a multitude of other necessaries. All individual societies, corporations, committees and organizations are earnestly invited to send their contributions, whether money or supplies, promptly, directed to the Hon. William G. Thompson, Chairman of the committee, Detroit, Mich. All contributions will be acknowledged in the Detroit daily papers. (Signed by the committee.)

The Northern Pacific road has 868 miles of track in operation, and reports a balance in the treasury of $969,129. The capital stock is now $91,312,588. To complete the line between Lake Superior and the Pacific coast 816 miles of track are required.....At the Kansas City, (Mo.) fair-grounds a fire broke out, which created a panic, in which several persons were injured and a large amount of property destroyed.....The twelfth annual meeting of the Northwestern Association of Underwriters was held in Chicago last week, under the Presidency of Mr. Jasper M. Dresser, of Lafayette, Ind.

The twenty-mile equestrian race at Chicago Jockey Club track, between Miss Cook, of California, and Miss Jewett, of Minnesota, was won by the former in 45 minutes and 16 seconds. Miss Jewett's horse, while on the last mile, jumped the fence and threw her violently. Her injuries were not serious.

THE SOUTH.

There was a great hanging bee at Fort Smith, Ark., just on the borders of the Indian Territory, on the 9th inst. Five murderers were executed—three white men and two Indians. One of the white men was Pat McGowan, who served in the Union army during the war as a member of the Twelfth Illinois cavalry. He murdered a man named Latta, who had been a partner with him in working a leased farm. The other white men hanged with him were George W. Padgett, a cattle-driver of Texas, who killed a man in a quarrel, and William T. Brown, a Missourian, who shot a man named Tate, in the Indian Territory. The two Indians executed were young Creeks, convicted of having killed white men in the Indian Territory.

A railroad accident near Anchorage, Ky., killed seven persons and injured many others, among them Alexander H. Alford, an attorney of Louisville.

A serious disturbance on the levee at New Orleans originated in epithets bestowed upon the drivers of cotton-floats. A police sergeant was beaten with clubs, and fired on the crowd, killing a negro named Hawkins. Bullets flew thick around the officers, and the entire force was called to the scene by the fire-alarm. Women shot at policemen from the windows, and the newly-engaged laborers were forced to quit work. The militia were ordered out just as the rioting ceased. Several cotton bales were set on fire.

A mob numbering nearly a hundred men rode into Dardanelle, Ark., and, surrounding the jail where two murderers (Taylor and Bruce) were confined, overpowered the guards, secured the keys of the prison, and, taking the prisoners named from the iron cage, put ropes about their necks and dragged them into the streets. The wretched prisoners were dragged through the streets by their captors, and to a patch of adjacent timber, where the ropes were flung across the limb of a tree, and they were left dangling in the air.....A murderer named Ramsey was taken from the Owingsville (Ky.) jail and put to death by an armed mob.....William Mason, a farmer living near Cotton Plant, Woodruff county, Ark., while returning home got into an altercation with three men who were working on the road. It appears the latter ordered him to turn aside, and, when he refused, overturned his wagon. Mason then drew a revolver and killed two of the men and badly wounded the other.

New Orleans telegrams, of the 14th, represent the labor troubles as assuming a serious shape. James Wilson, the driver of a cotton-wagon, was stoned by a mob and retaliated by shooting John Linsky. At the Natchez piers twenty men armed themselves and went to work. Rioters boarded the ship Callego and fired at screwmen in the hold. Acting Governor McEnery, at the request of the Mayor, put the city under martial law, placing Gen. Benham in command, and ordered all military organizations to be ready for service. The British Consul demanded protection for three vessels lying at the levee, and the Spanish Consul sent to the Minister at Washington an account of an outrage on a Spanish steamer.

A terrible tragedy is reported from Booneville, Logan county, Ark. Two planters, Robert and William Hambey, brothers, while riding home from town, through a lonely, secluded strip of country, were fired on by assassins concealed in the bushes on either side of the road. Robert dropped from his horse and died instantly, two bullets having pierced his heart. William was fatally wounded.....The labor riots in New Orleans were brought to an end by the cotton factors conceding the wages demanded of the employes.....Leland Leatherman, Mayor of Arkansas City, Ark., and James Rucker, a lawyer of the same place, fought a duel at Texeno, Miss. Rucker was fatally and Leatherman slightly wounded.

POLITICAL.

The Republicans of San Francisco elected Blake for Mayor by 2,092 majority, and Sedgwick for Sheriff by 3,405. Grady, the Democratic candidate for Tax-collector, won by a majority of 396.

The Massachusetts Democratic Convention will be held at Worcester Oct. 5.....In a special election in the Second Maine district for a representative to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator Frye, ex-Gov. Dingley (Republican) was elected by a majority of about 4,500.

The coming political contest in Pennsylvania for State Treasurer is likely to be a three-cornered one. The Republican State Convention nominated Gen. S. M. Bailey, a strong Cameron man. State Representative Wolfe, who is bitterly opposed to the Camerons, has announced himself as an independent Republican candidate for the office.

WASHINGTON.

The mail for Guiteau, the assassin—which, however, he never sees—contains some curious messages. The following, written on a postal card, was sent from Baltimore:

> Yes, do come to our little fun on Oct. 10, 11 and 12? Your passage will be paid, but we cannot guarantee you a ticket "home." We assure you quite a "time." Should your "guardian" consent to your coming a private conveyance will meet you at the depot, thence you will be drawn through the city, and never before in your life will you have experienced such a time. Your body will be paraded upon a pole and carried in the procession of the Orioles.
> COMMITTEE.

Also this from Annapolis:

> I will take one volume of the description of Washington jail life and the hanging of Guiteau, written by yourself.
> T. McInnes.

A postal card from Boston had a drawing of a skeleton, on the left a gallows with a man hanging, and the words: "I will pay any man who will get Guiteau's carcass to set with me. I will cut it in ten thousand bits." Guiteau is represented behind the bars, calling: "Let me out and I won't shoot the President again."—The wretch had a narrow escape from death a few mornings since. As the guard at the jail was being relieved, Sergeant Mason fired at the assassin, the bullet coming within a few inches of his head. It is believed that Mason was suffering from the effects of strong medicine taken for chills.

Sergt. Mason's attempt to shoot Guiteau is not viewed with a very alarming amount of abhorrence or even indignation. Assistant Adjutant General Ruggles is credited with saying that Mason will be turned over to the civil authorities of the District of Columbia. He will perhaps be tried on a charge of shooting with intent to kill. A conviction on the charge is highly improbable. If tried by court-martial Mason may be subject to some punishment for violation of military discipline. This probably will be the extent of his punishment. But it may be that he will not be punished in any way. It would not be difficult to convince a jury—to convince a court-martial even—that Mason was not in his right mind when he shot at Guiteau.

In some of the departments at Washington subscriptions are being raised to procure counsel for the defense of Sergeant Mason. Some of the postoffice clerks have gone to the extent of signing a petition asking for Mason's promotion in the army as a recognition of his daring, and of the fact that he seems to abhor the employment of American soldiers in guarding an assassin.

It is stated in a Washington dispatch that "Secretary Kirkwood is minded to break up the system of absenteeism inaugurated by Eastern Governors of Western Territories. Two flagrant cases have forced themselves upon his attention. Fremont, of Arizona, and Ordway, of Dakota, have been absent from their respective capitals, furthering their interests at the East, for many weeks. Fremont has just returned to Arizona in obedience to sharply imperative orders. Like orders will be issued in like cases in the future, and something will probably be done to prevent the appointment of Eastern politicians to Territorial positions which they unlawfully convert into sinecures.

GENERAL.

The Census Bureau at Washington has issued a bulletin containing statistics of the fisheries of the great lakes. The tables show that, distributed in the various States bordering on the lakes, there are 5,050 fishermen, 49 steam tugs, 1,607 vessels and boats, 44,544 gill nets, 143 seines, and 273 pile-drivers engaged in fisheries, the value of the apparatus and accessories used being $1,345,975. During 1879, 68,742,000 pounds of fish, valued at $1,652,900, were taken. Of this quantity 16,793,540 pounds were salted, 2,821,650 pounds frozen, 1,721,770 pounds smoked, and the rest sold fresh. There were produced also $42,360 worth of caviare, isinglass and oil.

The steamer Columbia foundered in a gale which prevailed on Lake Michigan on the night of the 10th inst. The disaster occurred off Frankfort, Mich., about midnight. Fifteen persons were drowned, including the Captain, second mate and first and second engineers. The steamer was bound from Chicago to Collingwood, Canada, laden with grain. She shifted her cargo and sank within fifteen minutes after. The passengers and crew got away from the steamer in small boats, but the boat containing the Captain and engineers was capsized. Several other vessels were wrecked in the same storm, among them the David Dows, the largest sailing vessel which ever navigated the lakes. She was bound from Chicago to Buffalo, with a cargo of 91,000 bushels of corn, and went ashore on what is known as Middle Ground, near Pelee island, in Lake Erie. It is feared that the entire crew are lost.

Guiteau called the attention of his guards to the fact that he was 40 years of age the other day, and intimated his readiness to receive presents. He is working up the plea of insanity.

The Governor of Michigan has issued the following:

> To the people of the United States:
>
> Portions of four counties of this State, lying principally between Saginaw bay and Lake Huron, have been devastated by forest fires. A drought almost unprecedented in this section of country had prepared the way for the calamity, and houses, barns, fences, crops, cattle, agricultural implements, household furniture, clothing and human life have been destroyed by its ravages. In some townships the destruction is complete, and only a picture of ruin is left. It is known that more than 200 lives have been lost by burning and suffocation. Many individuals have become helpless through injuries and exposure, and some are blind. The number of men, women and children left without shelter is estimated at 15,000. The benevolence of the citizens of the State responded promptly to the first necessities of those afflicted people, but ample time has now elapsed, and sufficient details have been received to make it evident that a wider appeal is needed. The destitution prevailing in the suffering counties is appalling. Entire neighborhoods are involved in the common calamity, and cannot help each other. The sufferers have no provisions except such as are brought from a distance, and no utensils to cook with. The necessaries of life, both large and small, have been destroyed. They need shelter, clothing, cooking stoves, kitchen utensils, beds and bedding, wagons, harness, plows, hoes, tools of all kinds, seed for future crops, and whatever helps to make men self-supporting. They have a good soil, are near to markets, and before this dreadful disaster befell them were a thrifty, prosperous people. Timely help will enable them to go through the hardships of this coming winter and to become again an independent community. At present they are penniless, needy, sick and suffering, and many of them in debt. I appeal under circumstances like these to the people of other States and ask them to co-operate in their abundance with citizens of Michigan in relieving this destitution. Nothing will be wanting here in duty to the afflicted sufferers, but the demands are too great for the people of the State to meet alone.
>
> An organization for the relief of the sufferers by these fires exists at Detroit, the commercial metropolis of the State, and systematic plans of relief have been established. The committee having them in charge is composed of well-known, competent and responsible citizens. Money and supplies sent to its Chairman, the Hon. Wm. G. Thompson, Mayor of Detroit, will be faithfully applied.

Then Prof. King gave it up, ripped the balloon, and let out the rest of the gas.

Cotton, Corn and Tobacco.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 16.

The cotton reports of Sept. 1 show a very heavy decline in the condition since the last report, owing to the protracted drought which prevailed in all sections of the cotton belt. The condition as reported is 72, a decrease of 16 per cent. during August, and, as compared with the returns of the same date last year, 19 per cent. less. The number of counties and the State averages are as follows:

North Carolina, two counties, average 72.
South Carolina, twenty-two counties, average 68.
Georgia, fifty-five counties, average 71.
Florida, fourteen counties, average 87.
Alabama, thirty-three counties, average 80.
Mississippi, thirty-seven counties, average 74.
Louisiana, fifteen counties, average 76.
Texas, sixty counties, average 65.
Arkansas, thirty-one counties, average 55.
Tennessee, twenty-one counties, average 62.

The general average condition of corn Sept. 1 was 60, being 17 per cent. lower than the month previous, and 31 per cent. lower than last year at the same date. From Missouri and Kansas come serious complaints of ravages by the chinch bug, which were added to by the prevailing drought. The injury to the corn prospect is shown by State averages, which are 58, 42 and 55 respectively.

Tobacco returns give a very serious decline in the prospect for the crop, being some 20 per cent. less than a month since. With the exception of the States north of the Delaware river, and Wisconsin in the West, the universal complaint is drought. Kentucky and Illinois each report but little over half a crop, while Tennessee and Missouri report less than two-thirds. The average for the whole country is only 65, against 83 last month, and 84 for the same date last year.

The cause of the low condition existing in almost every section of the country is drought. New England has been less affected by it than any other section east of the Mississippi, and reports an average of 90. In Wisconsin, Minnesota and most Territories it has been more seasonable weather, and the condition of the crops is correspondingly better; but in all other sections the reports show the effects of an unusually dry season.

THE MICHIGAN FOREST FIRES.

DETROIT, Sept. 12.

The forest fires in the lower peninsula of this State have been quite generally quenched by rain after ravaging thirty-six townships, and the extent of the awful calamity is beginning to reveal itself. The devastation is even more wide-spread than had been feared by the most despondent. It seems, from present reports, that about thirty-one townships in Tuscola, Sanilac and Huron counties have been swept over by the flames. In this district are about fourteen villages utterly destroyed, and the surrounding country shorn so close by the fire as to leave the ground cleared like a newly-sown field. No estimate of losses or deaths can be made with any degree of accuracy, but news from trustworthy sources leads to the belief that the estimate on 200 lives lost is very low, and that 300 is nearer the reality. The awful details are beginning to come to hand. They are of a character to make strong men shudder. Communication with the burnt district has been again opened and assistance is being rapidly furnished. Many persons are still missing in the burned districts, and the exact loss cannot be known for some days. Among reports of burials are the following:

Paris township	29
Austin	16
Minden	8
Bingham	9
Delaware	8
Argyle	1

It is said that twenty-seven dead have been found in the country between Bad Ax and Port Hope. A dispatch from Ludington estimates that the probable loss of life is from 300 to 400 in Sanilac county alone. The towns of Watertown, Flynn, Elmer, Moore, Argyle, Evergreen, Greenleaf and Eaton have suffered fearful loss in lives, and the destruction of property in these townships is immense. Everything is gone, and the people are congregated at these places.

In some localities whole families have perished in the flames, and on the eastern and north border of the county their condition is pitiful in the extreme. The facts are more horrible than heretofore reported, and many have suspended business to attend to the unfortunates. On the other side of Cass river, the condition is deplorable, and the sufferers are without homes, food or clothing. Immediate relief is contributed liberally, but the outlook for the future is dark indeed. Men who have grown old clearing land, and were enjoying the fruits of their labor in comfortable homes, have lost everything and been made paupers.

The territory burned over is peopled by at least 50,000 inhabitants, one-half of whom have settled here within ten years. The conditions which made the fire so destructive were these: Fully two-thirds of the timber over the entire burned tract was destroyed by the great fire of 1871, and was piled up in miles of windfalls, or, if standing, was mere kindling-wood. The settlers preferred burned lands as being easily cleared, and hundreds of new houses were surrounded by great tracts of fallen timber. The roads were lined on either side by it, and many who perished were caught on these roads and hemmed in by labyrinths of this burning hemlock, black ash and pine. There had been no rains over this region since spring to wet down any depth. Even swamps which were usually covered with one or two feet of water had become dry as tinder. For weeks there had been no heavy winds. The prevailing winds had been from Lake Huron, with which fires did not run. On the day of the great fire there was not a square mile in all the burned region that did not hold more or less fire. Monday morning opened with a cloudless sky, the mercury gradually rising to 100 and over. The wind was south, running to southwest, and by noon increasing to a fifty-mile gale. At noon in many places lamps had to be lit, and a sickening sense of fear and impending calamity overspread the whole population. About 4 o'clock the wind assumed the violence of a tornado. The flames were of a ghastly bluish hue, giving no light, but licking up timber, houses, barns, stacks, animals and people with a resistless fury, and this at places were no fire was known to be for miles around in the morning. On Tuesday the extent of the horror began to be known—dead men, women and children at what had been their doorsteps, at their gates in the fields, and on the highways, some untouched by fire, others charred and blackened. One poor woman, in the agony of childbirth, was half-burned. The living, with burned feet, ears or hands, and many women and children entirely naked, were separated from the rest of the family, blind, hopeless and despairing.

In Sanilac county, Cato, with a population of 100, suffered a clean sweep of every building. William Cole was burned. In Tyre, which had a population of fifty, one dwelling alone is left. Deckerville, with a population of 150, lost two mills, six stores and dwellings. At Anderson, with a population of 100, a clean sweep of all the buildings was made. At Cumber, which had a population of fifty, only one dwelling is left. A clean sweep was made of Richmondville, with a population of 100, and seven lives were lost. The following is a summary of the losses by townships: Washington, 30 homes; Watertown, 40 homes, 5 lives; Elmer, 30 homes; Moore, 40 homes, 14 lives; Argyle, 40 homes, 13 lives; Austin, 60 homes, 9 lives; Marion, 25 homes, 16 lives; Delaware, 40 homes, 7 lives; Minden, 80 homes; Bridgehampton, 40 homes. Lamotte, Evergreen and Green have suffered undoubtedly in lives and property in the same proportion, but no particulars are at hand. Flynn, 30 homes; Speaker, 25 homes; Maple Valley, 20 homes; Sanilac, 10 homes. Lexington, 20 homes; Elk, 25 homes.

In Huron county, in the village of Bad Ax, the population of which was about 300, the court-house and one store only were saved. In Verona, with a population of 100, a church and hotel were saved. A clean sweep was made of Huron City, population 200. The same fate befell Umbly, population 150; and Parisville, population 100. At Port Hope, three mills, a salt block and lumber, and six dwellings were burned. The townships of Bingham, Paris, Bloomfield and Rubicon are nearly a clean sweep. There are eighty-five dead in these townships, and many missing—with no hopes. Reports hourly increase the number, and every township has suffered nearly as much. R. B. Noble, banker, of Lexington, who has a good knowledge of the country burned, estimates the loss of property in Huron and Sanilac counties at $3,000,000. The insurance among the farmers was mostly in a mutual company, whose members are the principal sufferers, and, of course, unable to pay assessments.

Relief has commenced to flow in from various quarters, and subscriptions are being taken up in all the commercial cities. In answer to a request for tents, the Secretary of War urges the construction of temporary buildings, and Gov. Jerome has telegraphed him to order one thousand army blankets. Secretary Windom has instructed the Collector of Customs at Port Huron to pass free of duty all contributions from Canada. The residents of the burned district were mainly insured in the Farmers' Mutual Company, of Huron, Sanilac and Tuscola counties, and probably not over 20 per cent. will be realized.

DETROIT, Sept. 12.

A committee from Port Huron, Mich., visited Minden and Sand Beach and ascertained the probable amount of wheat required by the sufferers to do their winter seeding, and a sufficiency will be promptly furnished. In the vicinity of Bad Ax gangs of men have been assigned to the duty of burying cattle which perished in the flames. It appears that 200 persons were gathered in the Court House at Bad Ax, which was only saved from destruction by a long line of men passing water from the pump in pails. The steamer Saginaw has reached Sand Beach with 300 bushels of oats for the starving stock at Vernon and Bad Ax. The latest reports from Sanilac county give the known loss of life as 200; Huron county, 123, but a large part of Huron county has not yet been penetrated by the relief forces, and it is feared many more lives have been lost. Supplies are now sent by rail to Minden, and by boat to all regular ports on Lake Huron. The Detroit and Port Huron committees have agents on horseback exploring the burnt districts, and reporting localities where aid is most needed. In spite of the great quantities of provisions and other help sent from all parts of the State, and tens of thousands of dollars subscribed, the sufferers in some parts of the burnt district are reported starving and in dire extremity.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 12.

The condition of the President is much less favorable. During yesterday and the day before a marked rise in temperature and pulse and an increase in respiration were observed, the pulse reaching at times as high as 130, the temperature 100.6, and the respiration 26, the latter being the most frequent that has been registered for many weeks. The occurrence of these grave symptoms in the face of the fact that the atmospheric temperature and general conditions have been as favorable as could be desired has given rise once more to serious apprehensions. The right bronchial tube is congested, and it is feared that an abscess is formed in the lungs. The secretions pass away involuntarily. The bullet wound is granulating and discharges freely, and the bed-sores are healing. The weather at Long Branch makes heavy clothing necessary to comfort. The surgeons attribute the febrile rise each evening to a malarious affection. Col. Rockwell admits that the President has for some days been troubled with temporary bewilderment, at which times he said nothing to his attendants. Dr. Agnew hopes the accumulation in the lungs may be thrown off, but should an abscess be manifest it would be necessary to cut for it.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 13.

The condition of the President during the past twenty-four hours has been much more favorable than on the two preceding days. At the evening dressing his pulse had fallen to 100 and the temperature to 98.6. So favorable was the report of the physicians, Drs. Bliss and Agnew, that the Cabinet officers, with the exception of Secretary Kirkwood and Attorney General MacVeagh, left for the White mountains for a few days' much-needed recreation. The parotid gland has practically healed, and he has less trouble with excretions from the lungs. Dr. Bliss stated quite positively last night that there was no danger of the formation of a pus cavity in the lungs. Dr. Bliss says he is satisfied that the bullet by which the President was wounded has become encysted, and that the passage made by the ball is closed and healed for about three and a half inches from the location of the ball and within nine inches of the surface. Postmaster General James was admitted to the sick-chamber, and stated that he was struck with the extreme emaciation of the President, although the conversation showed great strength and clearness of mind.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 14.

The President made a decided gain yesterday. The day was fine and the air was pure and bracing, and tended to the patient's progress toward recovery. The reports of the surgeons were of a very reassuring character, and everybody about the Francklyn cottage, physicians and attendants, seemed to be happy. The patient was placed in a reclining chair where he might have a good view of the ocean. He remained there half an hour, and seemed to enjoy it very much. The parotid trouble has practically disappeared, the wound is looking healthy, and the physicians are now agreed that the bullet has become encysted. The only unfavorable symptom seems to be the frequency of respiration, which is taken by some as indicating that the condition of the lungs is not as good as could be wished. The President himself is not quite satisfied as to the condition of his lungs, and remarked to one of his attendants yesterday that he had a long siege before him.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 15.

There was no very decided improvement in the President's condition yesterday; in fact, it is probably more correct to say that he barely held his own. He was removed to a reclining chair, where he rested about an hour and a half. During a portion of this time he slept. He had more refreshing sleep than usual, and took of rather more food than on the previous day, seemed to be more cheerful, and certainly looked better; yet the temperature and pulse at the evening dressing was by no means reassuring, and the respiration rose to 21. The physicians, notwithstanding, maintain that the patient's symptoms are favorable. Dr. Bliss alleges that the pus cavities in the parotid are mere skin eruptions, and he manages to explain away any other unfavorable symptoms that may appear.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 16.

The President again spent some time in his reclining chair yesterday. He called for porter-house steak, and three teaspoonfuls were given him in a minced state. The temperature of the patient averaged 98 at the lowest to 99.2 at the maximum, with corresponding respiration from 20 to 22. The physicians, in yesterday's bulletin, admitted that the patient is suffering from blood poisoning, and has been suffering therefrom for several weeks. They announce, however, that in spite of various "septic accidents" the patient has made some progress toward convalescence since his transfer to Long Branch. Dr. Hamilton thinks five weeks will be required to overcome the effects of poisonous blood.

Spotted Tail.

Spotted Tail possessed uncommon ability, but his mind did not reach far beyond the narrow circle of traditional Indian ideas. He kept good watch over the interests of his tribe, as he understood them. But a question concerning the boundaries of the Sioux reservation appeared to him more important than the question how his people could be best put to work. He was a brave man and a strong fighter in his day. But ever since 1868 he could be depended upon as an advocate of peace and good understanding with the white men. He was at times pretentiously dignified in his bearing and jealous of the outward signs of authority. When years ago a Government commission visiting the Sioux nation sent for him to meet them at a certain point, he replied: "If I had anything to say to you I would go to you. But if you have something to say to me you must come where I am." In the autumn of 1877 a large delegation of Sioux visited Washington and had a council with the President in the famous East room of the White House. Spotted Tail, when asked to let the President know what he had to communicate, said that he would not speak until all the other chiefs had spoken. So they made their speeches one after another, standing up before the President with great solemnity. When they had spoken, Spotted Tail rose and asked one of the attendants by gesture to put his chair immediately in front of the President. This done, Spotted Tail gravely sat down and talked to the President, not in the usual oratorical style, but in a more familiar way, as if conversing with an equal.—New York Evening Post.

A PORTION of the Mammoth cave in Kentucky is hereafter to be used for the purpose of raising mushrooms, an enterprising Frenchman having suggested the idea to the manager of the property.

THE oldest German opera, a musical play, composed by Johann Gottlieb Staden, of Nurnberg, has been published for the first time by a firm in that old Bavarian city. Staden was organist to the Grand Duke of Brandenburg in 1609.

THE recently-destroyed town of New Ulm, Minn., is being rapidly rebuilt, and in a short time few traces of the tornado's path will be left. The cash contributions have amounted to $37,138, and the new houses built by direction of the relief committee are now nearly all completed.

MR. PARNELL is now among the waxen treasures of the Messrs. Tussaud (Madame died long ago). "A lady of rank" is alleged to have lately gazed awhile on this "counterfeit presentment" with profound interest. Then taking off a heavy gold chain, with cross attached, she reverently kissed it, and placed it on the image.

FISH stories being in order, a Virginia paper relates the following: "The handsome little fat-back is among the fattest and richest fish caught in Tidewater, Va. To secure them it is necessary to go at night in a flat-bottomed skiff with a light. The fish, on seeing the light, jump out of the water into the boat. Mr. Thomas Simpson, of Drummondtown, tried his luck the other night, and, getting into a large school, the fish jumped into his boat so fast that it sank, losing all his fish, and compelling him to swim for his life. He reached the shore in safety."

THE value of electrical inventions has received a fresh illustration in the case of the schooner Vermillion, which was wrecked in Lake Erie in 1843. The vessel was loaded with copper ingots of the value of $60,000, but her precise location far down in deep water was for thirty-four years a mystery. It remained for electricity to solve the mystery. With a newly-invented electric indicator on board a cruising schooner evidence of the proximity of submerged metal was at last obtained, and divers were sent down to search. They landed plump on the deck of the sunken vessel, and reappeared at the surface bearing one of the copper ingots. The entire recovery of the valuable cargo in undamaged condition is now a question of a few days only.

A LARGE hotel, to be conducted on the American plan, is about to be erected on the site of the late Duke's Theater, in Holborn, London. In announcing this fact, the London World takes occasion to describe some of the distinctive features of the American hotel, as it appears to the eyes of Johnny Bull. It is, to many thousands of people, a dwelling-house, where they can obtain all the comforts and conveniences, with ample attendance, at smaller cost than that of the separate establishment. At a cost of 10 to 14 shillings per day the guest has his comfortable room and a well-supplied table without care on his own part, can obtain telegraphic communication with any part of the civilized world, order a carriage, secure seats at the theater or opera, get shaved, shod, clothed, washed and cured (if sick), all without leaving the building. In fact, by availing himself of the facilities usually presented in the stores, etc., on the street floor, "the wayworn traveler may enter a wreck, and emerge in a few hours an Adonis on the American plan."

THE report of the British Postmaster General shows an increase of 14.8 per cent. in the number of registered letters for the postal year ended March 31, and a decrease of 2.2 per cent. in number and 2.7 per cent. in amount of money-orders for the same period. The money-order system has not come up to public expectation either in this country or Great Britain. It is a clumsy contrivance. There are too many forms to be observed; the delay in getting the order or the "advice" is often considerable, and the loss of time in proportion. The utility of the money-order is much diminished in this country by permitting the clerks in large cities to keep bank hours. Laboring men and women who have to go to the office in person to get orders cashed or written lose part of their valuable time merely to save the postal clerks from inconvenience. The money-order system is, in a measure, a failure. It will eventually be superseded by the introduction of negotiable postal checks and an extension of the registry system, which is now almost an absolute protection against loss, and is more expeditious and economical and simpler than the money-order.

ACCORDING to the veracious foreign correspondents, 'is 'ighness Halbert Hedward, and his most gracious mother her Majesty the 'Queen, have had a regular old out-and-outer. The privacy of the royal house has been so far invaded as to secure the facts. The royal family of England is intermarried with all the petty Kings and Princes of the continent, and, according to custom, when any poor relation dies the whole household must go into mourning. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg died a few days ago, just when the Goodwood races were in full swing, and when the Prince of Wales was enjoying himself very much indeed at the mansion of the Duke of Richmond. Instantly the Queen telegraphed to the Prince, desiring him to return to London. The Prince sent back word that he could feel just as sorry for the departed second cousin at Goodwood as at Marlborough House. The Queen insisted on his not going to the races. The Prince replied that he must, whereupon the Queen, in a great rage, telegraphed positive orders to the Duke of Richmond not to allow any dancing at Goodwood House during the races. Thus Wales went to the races during the daytime, but had to content himself without disporting the light fantastic toe, which he loves to wield when there are moderately light, fantastic ladies about. When the Prince next met the old lady she gave him a piece of her mind, and but for his age and size would doubtless have warmed his royal trousers.

THERE is a baby in Philadelphia, the pride and hope of a letter-carrier, which was born on the day President Garfield was shot. By some mysterious phsyco-physical sympathy the infant's health has closely followed the fluctuations in the President's condition. The physchological reporter, of the Philadelphia Times thus describes the phenomenon: "The day upon which the President's physicians gave up his case there was a regular panic in the letter-carrier's house. The letter-carrier's baby had only been able to take liquid nourishment, and on that day it soured on its stomach and everybody began to believe it was going to die. But the President got better next day, and the letter-carrier dismissed his doctor. From that hour the baby became famous in the neighborhood. Instead of rushing off to see the bulletins the people came to see how the letter-carrier's baby was getting along. The other night the baby howled and the neighbors put their heads out of the windows and said: 'The President is worse.' And so the official bulletin from the White House showed the next morning. The next day the letter-carrier's baby was very low, but rallied with the President and cried for liquid nourishment, which it took in the natural way and retained. The White House showed a similar condition of affairs there. The face of the letter-carrier's wife would then brighten beautifully, and she would say to the curious neighbors: 'The President's condition is more favorable than it was at this hour yesterday,' whereupon the patriotic people of that region would be greatly rejoiced."

How to Tell a Good Potato.

Here is a good place to impart what is a secret to the vast majority of people, and it is one well worth knowing. It is simply how to tell a good potato; that is, as well as can be done without cooking it, for sometimes even experts are deceived. Take a sound potato, and, paying no attention to its outward appearance, divide it into two pieces with your knife and examine the exposed surfaces. If there is so much water or "juice" that seemingly a slight pressure would cause it to fall off in drops, you may be sure it will be "soggy" after it is boiled. These are the requisite qualities for a good potato which must appear when one is cut in two: For color, a yellowish white; if it is a deep yellow the potato will not cook well; there must be a considerable amount of moisture, though not too much; rub the two pieces together and a white froth will appear around the edges and upon the two surfaces; this signifies the presence of starch, and the more starch, and consequently froth, the better the potato, while the less there is the poorer it will cook. The strength of the starchy element can be tested by releasing the hold upon one piece of the potato, and, if it clings to the other, this in itself is a very good sign. These are the experiments generally made by experts, and they are ordinarily willing to buy on the strength of their turning out well, though as stated above these tests are by no means infallible. The anti-Chinese element of society will not like the information that a very large percentage of the potatoes consumed in this market are raised by Chinamen, but such is the case. The "River Reds," our cheapest potato, which is grown along the banks of the Sacramento river, are raised almost exclusively by the heathen, who ship them to the commission merchants, from whose stores they go to hotels, boarding-houses and private families all over the city, and a few good seasons make the Chinamen rich—from a Mongolian standpoint.—San Francisco Call.

Whittier's First Published Poem.

The possession of the manuscript of the first poem which Mr. Whittier ever published leads the Portland (Me.) Transcript to recall the young poet's sensation when he first saw his production in print. He was working one day with his uncle repairing a stone fence when the postman in passing tossed him a copy of the journal to which many weeks before he had sent his poem. Tremblingly young Whittier opened the paper to find the verses at the top of the first column. He was so delighted and bewildered that he stood looking at it for a long time, and is sure he did not read a word. At length his uncle called him back to his senses by bidding him keep at work.

SOME TIMELY REFLECTIONS.

Republican Hatred of Tilden.

[From the Buffalo Courier.]

We hate the persons whom we have injured with a more intense hatred than those who have injured us; and doubtless one explanation of that constant persecution with which the Republicans follow Samuel J. Tilden may be found in that contemptible trait of human nature.

The Republican party cheated Mr. Tilden out of the Presidency of the United States, and earnest Republicans can never forgive him for having been a martyr to their party iniquity. He is a Democrat who took a leading part in crushing the worst municipal ring in the country, even though its managers were prominent members of the Democratic organization. Chosen Governor by a large popular majority, he dared to administer the affairs of the State for the good of the people, opposed corruption, reduced expenditures, and cut down taxation, exhibiting such an example of wisdom and economy in the management of public affairs that a venal or extravagant administration will not be possible in New York for years to come.

Nominated for the Presidency, he carried on a great canvass, depending for success more upon an appeal to his own record as a reformer than to party prejudices and passions. He received a majority of the popular vote, but had to undergo the humiliation of seeing his opponent inaugurated in his place. Not only was the foremost political honor of our times snatched away from him, but the glorious opportunities of the Presidential office, which would have turned to services of untold good in his hands, were squandered on a good-natured imbecile, who was not merely incapable of reforming old abuses, but had not even ability enough to keep his own officials from stealing the public money. In the course of his public career, Mr. Tilden had never condescended to mere partisanship, and had incurred the distrust of many Democrats on account of his seeming disregard of the interests of the party; but he met no generous consideration from Republicans at any point in his career. Whenever he accomplished an acknowledged public good his motives were aspersed. His achievements as a ring-breaker were declared to be tricks to aid him in gaining the Governorship; his virtues as a Governor were interpreted as politic devices to win the Presidency. Old slanders were revived against him, and the United States Government officials were employed to blacken his good name by prosecuting vexatious tax suits. Even when he was swindled out of the Presidency he was pursued into private life with the vilest defamation. His personal peculiarities were criticised, his character for truth and honor was made a mere mock. The supposed feebleness of his health was a thing to jibe and jeer about. The revelation of the fact that some of the Returning Board rascals in Florida and Louisiana, whom the Republicans bought and paid for, had offered themselves to Tilden's agents, and would have concluded a bargain with them if he had not stepped in and forbidden the purchase, was treated as proof positive that he had attempted the crime which he would not allow his friends to commit even in the interest of right, and which Republican leaders perpetrated in the interest of wrong. For the four years during which another man exercised the powers of the office to which he had been elected, and pocketed the salary to which he was entitled, he had to endure the meanest abuse. The Republican press acted on the theory that he was to be a candidate in 1880, and that it was necessary to destroy every remnant of his reputation in order to justify the fraud of 1876. Even when Mr. Tilden withdrew from public life, and another man became the representative of the Democracy, the political bloodhounds could not be called off, but kept baying after him all through the canvas of last year. Now again, in obedience to their guilty instinct of hatred, Republican newspapers begin the new canvass with an attack on Tilden. Once more they have set him up as a possible Presidential candidate; and, in their fear lest he should be nominated by the Democracy in 1884, they are bent upon doing what they can to make the next three years of his life miserable. Was there ever an American so wronged as this man, whose only crime has been that he made ordinary politics look shameful by furnishing the people an example of pure and efficient government?

We began by saying that men hate those whom they have wronged; we close by saying that men hate those they fear. This Republican hatred of Tilden may, therefore be not only a tribute to his political virtue, but an indicion of his political strength.

No More Race Discrimination.

The Republican determination to treat Lieut. Flipper like a white man is very marked, and shows that the party is rapidly outgrowing its race prejudice. When Whittaker tied himself up in a bow knot, bit off his ears, and laid it to three cadets in buckram, the entire Republican press of the country took up his cause, and denounced the Superintendent at West Point for not swallowing the story as readily as they did. District Attorney Townsend, of New York, appeared for the young man and won the sympathies of the entire party by the heat which he displayed and the abuse which he showered on the unbelievers who trusted not the story of Whittaker. And even when by two exhaustive trials it was satisfactorily shown, to the apprehension of every sane man in the country, that Whittaker was his own victim, the same party press stood by him and declared that he was persecuted on account of his color.

But for poor Flipper there isn't a teardrop in the Republican eye or a sympathetic throb in the Republican heart. The party seems to have given him what the unfeeling would call the "cold shake." Yet the circumstances of his case are really less condemnatory than were those in Whittaker's. There is nothing against him, apparently, but the fact that a colored woman, who did his cooking and hung her clothes in the same closet with his, was found in possession of a lot of checks which seemed to be the same as checks that he claimed to have transmitted to headquarters. There was some loose money found in his room and a lot of clothing and jewelry, mostly for women's wear; but the checks were the worst item.

How quickly the Republican press and District Attorney Townsend would dispose of this incriminating item if they manifested the same zeal they displayed in the Whittaker case. How clearly they would show that the woman forged the checks and hid her clothes and jewelry in Flipper's room in order to throw suspicion on him and divert it from herself. How plainly they would make it appear that she never had done any cooking for him, or, if necessary, that she had never known or seen him prior to the alleged embezzlement. A tenth part of the interest and legal acuteness squandered in the Whittaker case would present Flipper before his fellow-men, and the other citizens of the United States, as an injured and maligned individual, suffering indignity because he wears "the bronzed livery of the sun." Yet no such interest or acuteness is forthcoming. He is treated as negligently and coldly and indifferently as if he were merely a white man.

Clearly the party of great moral ideas has taken a great stride, since the Whittaker case, away from race discrimination. As to the cause, it were idle to speculate. It may be disgust at the outcome in Whittaker's case. It may be the new ties formed in Virginia and Mississippi. Whatever the cause, the effect is a noteworthy one.—Detroit Free Press.

"THE hen is a frugal housekeeper," said the old Dominique; "she finds her nest and then she makes her own spreads." "And the chicks have to shell out before she scratches a single worm for them," said the Bantam. "Yes indeedy," said the Dominique, "the chick comes down the first thing." "He has to," said the Spangle, "feather or no." "How can the hen make him come down?" asked the April chicken, who was just too fresh for anything. "Son," said the Spanish cock, solemnly "I cannot tell a lie; she did it with her little hatch it."—Burlington Hawkeye.

NOTHING is more disgusting in society than to see a woman affect public devotion to their husbands which is only public, and, perhaps, there is no phase of married life that is more closely watched. People can not act well in public a part which they are not in the habit of acting at home.—Boston Herald.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable diseases resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Life's Vicissitudes.

A well-known man about town, who finds his chief delight in the study of human nature, and who believes that Denver offers a better field for that too rarely practiced art than any other spot on the face of the earth, told a Tribune representative a good many entertaining and amusing stories in a pleasant hour's chat, the other day.

He was seated in a comfortable chair that allowed him to loll back and rest his feet on the window-sill, smoking his cigar and lazily and dreamily watching the smoke as it went up in little rings and was than caught by the wind and sent scurrying out of the window and blown away into nothingness.

"Did you ever think much of the vicissitudes of life?" he asked, suddenly, knocking the white ashes from the end of his cigar, and looking so earnestly into his companion's face as to really frighten him into a philosophic mood.

The latter answered that he had rarely given the subject consideration, save when vicissitudes themselves made it imperative.

"We all have our little experiences, continued the student of human nature. A smile crept into his face as he went on, examining the burning end of his cigar critically: "I read a little scrap in a newspaper one time that amused and interested me exceedingly, not so much because of its alleged funniness, but because the writer had suggested some good ideas without knowing it. He was telling of two men who met accidentally in the cars. One said to the other, 'Have I not met you somewhere before?' And then the fellow spoken to, went on to tell him that he probably had met him somewhere, saying, 'Three years ago I was secretary of a young men's christian association. After that, I commanded a ship for a while, then worked in a restaurant, kept a hotel, ran a newspaper, and last summer I traveled with Barnum as a cannibal.'

'Life is full of vicissitudes,' remarked his companion, to which the fellow of many experiences responded, laconically, 'She am; very full, indeed.'

'I think of that little yarn every now and then,' continued the gentleman, laughing quietly to himself, 'as I look around me in Denver and see poor devils whose experiences have been almost as remarkable as those of the chap in the story. You have often read in the New York papers of noblemen's sons serving in the big restaurants like Delmonico's and the Brunswick as waiters? Well I know that such things often occur. A man can make a big tumble in a very short time. Talking about waiters, it was only a few days ago that there was a real live Countess—a Swedish one—washing dishes and making herself generally useful in the American House. Funny, ain't it? I tell you this is the country to live in if you want to have high-toned people do the ordinary work. It was not long ago that I had my boots blackened by a little codger whom I afterward learned was the runaway son of a Chicago millionaire. The vicissitudes in that little fellow's life are beginning early.

'I sat here at my window the other day—you see I have a good view up and down the street for a good ways—and counted no less than half a dozen people as they passed whose histories I knew were peculiar enough to form the interesting plots of as many novels. One man passed with a big bundle of handbills under his arm. Though thoroughly respectable in his appearance, one would never dream in passing him that years ago he was a wealthy man, mayor of one of the largest cities in the east, and with a political future as bright as any man ever had. I don't know how he came down. He tumbled all the same. He could probably tell you something about the vicissitudes of life.

'There goes a man,' said the student of human nature, leaning out of the window, and pointing out a middle-aged man who was moving along with the busy throng with a step that told as plainly as words that ambition had ceased to be a motive power, "who was at one time a member of congress from the state of Illinois. He was considered an able man with a great future. Today he would be glad to get a case in the police court that would pay him a fee of five dollars.

'You'd never imagine that Jay Gould had any poor relations, would you? It seems hard to think so. One would think that a man so rich as he, and owning dozens of railroads, in the offices of which sinecures are as plentiful as blackberries in July, would look after all his relations. And yet right here in Denver a nephew of Jay Gould, the railroad prince, makes his bread by driving a street car. He ain't at all proud, and would probably own without blushing, if you were to ask him, that Jay was his uncle.

'A good-natured, although dignified old fellow who sells jugs and earthenware to Denverites, was a dozen years ago minister to a foreign court. He has evidently forgotten—or given up as dead and not worth thinking about—the past. Vicissitudes have not ruined a happy disposition and a belief that life is worth living.

'There are half a dozen other men in Denver who have found that for some people at least there is a system of equalization or leveling in this world—that is, they get a sorrow for every joy. A man who was once secretary to Chevalier Wyoff now sells beer in a Denver saloon. Life is short, ain't it? The only wonder to me is that so much can be crowded into it.'—[Denver Tribune.

How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large porportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SODID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

Ancient Saw Mills.

The saw mills of half a century or more ago were very crude and inefficient in comparison to the better class of saw mills of the present day; and, in fact, to what they have been for the last thirty years or more. But during this last period, the march of improvement has been so rapid and radical, that what would have been considered a first-class mill in ever respect, twenty-five or thirty yea ago, would be ranked as far behind the times at the present time; especially for the larger class of mills, by which extensive forest are rapidly devoured, as by an herd of insatiate monsters. As an example of the saw mills of the period first mentioned, I select for description the one of which I have the earliest recollection. It was built a little over sixty years ago. It was located on, and received its power from a small branch of the Susquehanna river, which diverged abruptly from the main channel, encompassing about two-thirds of the boundary of a large island, returning to the main channel as abruptly as it departed, about a mile and a half below the point of departure. A timber am was built across the branch at the mill, by which in favorable stages of water, a head of from three to four feet was secured for operating the saw mill, and a grist mill contiguous thereto.

The saw mill contained two water wheels, as was usual in those days, and still is to some extent at present, in small mills intended for local or neighborhood custom. In this mill the saw was driven by what was termed a side vent reaction wheel, of about six feet diameter, revolving horizontally on an upright wooden shaft. A large wooden cog wheel, with wooden cogs, shanked and fitted into mortises in it, and projecting from its lower face, was attached to the upper part of the shaft, by arms secured in mortises made through it. The crank was supported in wooded bearings on beams, which were termcrank bents, which were some three or four feet apart, and located about midway the length of the mill, and forming a part of the frame thereof. On the crank was a fly wheel and a cast-iron spur pinion of coarse pitch, into which the cogs of the aforesaid wooded wheel meshed, to drive the crank; the wheel and pinion performing the office of bevel gear, though in a comparatively imperfect manner. The gig wheel was of the same kind as the one mentioned, but only about three feet in diameter. It had a wooden trudle-head on the upper end of its shaft, which meshed into wooden cogs in the face of the rag wheel, by which means the carriage was gigged back for a new cut of the saw. The sash, or saw gate as it was termed, was placed in rabbits in the corners of the fender posts, and held there by four wooden hooks having one shoulder and a side tension each, which latter was secured in mortises extending from front to rear through the fender posts, the shoulders or hooks projecting over the face of the side pieces of the saw gate, to hold it in place in the rabbits in the fender posts. Thus the wooden saw gate was guided in its operations in wooden ways, with tallow as a lubricator in warm weather, and lard in cold weather; notwithstanding the rate of motion was only about from 80 to 125 strokes of saw per minute, the friction of the outer edges of the stiles of the sash, when sprung out by a heavy strain on the saw, would be so great as to raise what the fire-fiends might deem a very promising degree of smoke, causing them to dance with demoniacal glee, in high anticipation of a fiery jubilee.

I have seen many an old sash stile, with pretty thoroughly charred surfaces, and the rabbits in the fender posts ditto. To give an appreciative idea of the wonderful rapidity of the sawing done in that mill, when the head of water was considerable below par, I have known the sawyer to hoist the gate for a cut through a 16 feet log, and go to his meal fifteen or twenty rods away, and keep a child at the door to watch and tell him when the saw was nearly through the log, and on warning being given, he would leave his meal and go and gig back and start the saw for a new cut, and then return to the house and finish his meal, and get back to the mill in time for the next gig and set. How is that for fast sawing? O! the millions of feet such a mill would saw if you only gave it time enough. But, however captivating to the modern sawyer the picture may be, however much be may sigh over the departure of those good old easy-going mills, and in imagination fancy himself remanded back in the whirligig of time, and comfortably snoozing in the old mill, after a spree of the night before, while the saw is leisurely gnawing its way through the log; or anon reading the news, or some romantic story of love in a cabin or a castle; it may not matter so much which, for in reality, happiness may not so much more abide in the latter than in the former, as many suppose. I must awaken him from his comfortable reverie, while I give him an account of the provisions for the ease and comfort of sawyers, as connected with some of the old mills, and especially with the mill under consideration. I refer to the log-way. In this case the log-way was about 150 feet long; extending from the front side of the mill, slightly ascending until it struck the gently inclined ground. This log-way was made of five or six strings of timbers laid on bents of various heights, the sills of which rested on the ground; the bents near the mill being eight or ten feet high. By this beneficent contrivance the sawyer was furnished with a fair amount of healthful out-door exercise, in rolling in logs along this convenient little log-way; and to further fill in his time and keep him from snoozing and dozing while waiting for the saw to arrive in the neighborhood of the tail dog, or rather vice versa, he could fill in his odd spare time by butting or squaring off with an axe the ends of the logs, many of which were cut with an axe, and one end left cut slanting from each side, pointing the log in the form of a stunt wedge. No one will doubt but what these varied exercises, temperately indulged in, were healthful I command the consideration of the subject to the modern sawyer. —[Geo. Walker, in the Lumber World.

An Easy Way.

Readers, we love an easy way. And who does not, when it can be secured with the exercise of only a little forethought. We appreciate all those elegancies and comforts, which tend to make life pleasanter, and we believe it our duty as a chronicler to help our fellow-mortals in finding out, where the best and easiest way lies. At this time, when the eyes of the east and the Old World are turned toward the undeveloped lands of the great west, rich in agricultural, mineral, sporting and healthy resources, it seems inevitable that there must be among those whom we reach in our weekly visits, some individuals, who, in common with us, are interested in finding the easy ways and the best route to reach that Eldorado of promise.

To the pleasure-seeker and tourist, the prospector and the emigrant, the farmer and the invalid in search of health, no railway in the country can offer better advantages than the CHICAGO, BURLINGTON AND QUINCY R. R., whose network of lines extends from the great chain of American lakes, beyond the Missouri river, and down to the lower Mississippi valley, connecting with all the main lines leading to the shores of the Pacific ocean and the Gulf of Mexico.

A trip over the "Burlington route" is a realization of all that human ingenuity can conceive for comfort and luxury. And the general public, not slow to recognize superiority and decided conveniences, have made it necessary for the management to add train after train for the accommodation of an ever-increasing traffic, and they can now count twenty-eight (28) passenger trains in and out of Chicago every day. In the matter of fast through trains, the C., B. & Q. stands pre-eminently in the lead of all western roads. Safety and rapidity are allied to comfort and luxury.

For smoothness of track, rapidity of transit and immunity from danger, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad is unsurpassed, if equalled by any other line in the west. The substantial rock bed, and fine steel rails on all the tracks, place accident from insufficiency of construction almost beyond a possibility, while the arrangements for arrivals, departures and travel of trains are so perfect as to place accident from any dificiency in these matters equally beyond probability, if not beyond possibility.

The arrangements for the comfort of passengers are equal to those for their safety, and there the master hand of the Burlington management shows itself in a decided manner.

The day cars are models of elegance.

The famous C., B. & Q. dining-cars, equal in table appointments to the best hotels of the country, are luxuriously fitted up. Passengers can enjoy their meals leisury, while being whirled across the country, free from the old ten or twenty minutes style of rushing to the ordinary dining station and swallowing in a hasty manner whatever could be secured to merely satisfy hunger. Now the latest delicacies of the season and well-prepared dishes, under direction of a master of the culinary art, are served up to tempt the most fastidious epicures, with all the time any one may desire to take in a full complement, and enjoy every morsel; and the pleasure and comfort of a first-class meal, at a very moderate price, are added to the contemplation of pleasing scenery, while this enjoyment and leisure in no way impedes progress toward destination.

The lovers of the fragrant weed are not forgotten in the distribution of accommodations, and the after-dinner cigar can be enjoyed in a style of oriental splendor in the gorgeous smoking-cars, only a step away.

Keeping sight of social duties, the daily observance of which should be a part of every life, the gentlemanly managers of the C., B. & Q. have provided handsome and elegantly fitted parlor cars, where the sexes can enjoy the society of each other in a pleasant way, arrangements being such that conversations can be carried on in groups or tete-a-tete, innocent parlor games can be indulged in, adding to other advantages that of friendly and agreeable visiting.

Nature's sweet restorer, the exacted tribute to Morpheus, gently sleep and repose, is the last luxury added to the long list provided for the railroad passengers of modern days on the "Great Burlington Route." It is the only line running the celebrated Pullman 16-wheel palace sleeping cars, entirely new, built specially for this service, having all of the latest improvements, peerless for beauty of finish and luxurious appointment, and providing that most desirable of requisites, complete isolation for each sleeper.

And thus, while on the wing, proceeding rapidly toward the end of his journey, is the passenger provided with all the luxuries of home life, in a style and manner equal, if not superior to that of the most elegant homes of our land, while everywhere are found the most courteous attendants, whose special object seems to contribute in every possible manner to the exceptional comfort of every one. Traveling from the east to the west on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, you traverse one of the finest sections of country the sun ever shone upon; you pass through a large number of the industrial towns and villages of the great west, and the best settled, and most thickly populated portions of Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, making sure connections and fast time.

Friends, we have found an easy way. Our ticket reads: via the "Great Burlington route," and if you intend to follow the course of the "Star of Empire," see that yours is also by that route, and our word for it, you will thank us for the excellent advice.

The Power of the Press.

In no way is the power of the press more surely shown than in the universal knowledge that has in less than a year, been diffused throughout fifty millions of people of the wonderful curative properties of that splendid remedy, Kidney-Wort. And the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific have shown their intelligence and their knowledge of what is in the papers, by already making Kidney-Wort their household remedy for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and bowels. —[Herald.

THE NATION'S CALAMITY.

End of the Long Struggle of the President for Life—The Sufferer's Last Moments Marked by Visions of That Happy Home at Mentor—A Blissful Dream of Long-Gone Joys That Robbed the Hour of Half its Terror.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 19.

President James A. Garfield died at the Francklyn cottage, at Elberon, at 35 minutes after 10 this evening. His death was so sudden and unexpected that when the family was summoned the President was unconscious. From this he did not rally. He died a few moments after Mrs. Garfield entered the room. From what can be ascertained, his death was from sheer exhaustion. At the President's bedside, holding his poor, emaciated hand in her own, and watching with anguish unutterable the fast-vanishing sands of life, sat the faithful, devoted wife during the closing hours of the President's career. Around him were other weeping friends and physicians, lamenting their powerlessness in the presence of the dark angel of death. Toward the last the mind of the sufferer wandered. He was once more back in Mentor, amid those scenes where the happiest hours of his life were spent. He sat in the dear old homestead again with the loved ones around him, his aged mother so proud of her big boy, his faithful wife and beloved children. It was a blissful dream that robbed death of its terrors and rendered the dying man for the moment unconscious of the cruel rending of his once-vigorous frame that was constantly going on. The moan of the restless ocean mingled with the sobs of the loved ones as the lamp of life flickered and went out forever.

Nearly every one around the President clung to hope to the last, and refused to believe the approach of death until the shadow deepened and the destroyer's presence could be no longer unfelt.

Flags hang at half-mast from every house on Ocean avenue, and the gayety of this favorite watering-place is followed by the deepest gloom.

The struggle is over, and death is the victor. This morning the physicians thought that the President was a little better. He seemed to have some appetite, and no indication of any chill or any disturbance was noted. The insidious nature of these attacks was again made manifest soon after 8 o'clock. The President had been very quiet, and seemed comparatively comfortable. Suddenly he complained of chilliness, and, although his body was wrapped in warm flannels, and within half an hour he had been bathed in hot alcohol, it was found that his feet and hands were cold, and, in a moment, there was marked rigor. He shivered and every muscle in his body was rigid. The pulse went up to 140, and even higher, but it was so thready and feeble that it was impossible to count the beats. After it had passed that figure there was great danger that he would sink into a comatose state after the rigor had passed, and every exertion was made to induce reaction. Hot flannels were applied to the feet and poultices of raw onions cut fine and steeped in alcohol were placed upon his stomach. In addition cooling lotions were applied to the head, and the arms and limbs were rubbed vigorously. The result was that a reaction was established much sooner than the physicians expected. After fifteen minutes had elapsed, Dr. Bliss noticed increasing warmth in the feet, and at the same time the rigidity of the muscles was observed to be relaxing. It was evident that the rigor was passing away in about half the time which the first one had lasted. That one, in spite of the most vigorous treatment, had only yielded under half an hour.

The vitality of the President once more astonished the physicians—so much so that Dr. Agnew said, when he came from the sick-chamber, as he has said before: "The vitality of the President is something more remarkable than I have ever met with in all my practice." This was said to Mrs. Garfield and Private Secretary Brown, and the great surgeon also added that "if it was not for his wonderful evidence of constitutional strength, he should feel as though it was folly to indulge in any hope." After the rigor had passed the President fell asleep, and, although his pulse was still beating above 120, yet his temperature had not decreased more than a tenth of a degree or so below normal point.

He awoke in about twenty minutes, and the first words he said showed that the mind was more active than his bodily strength. He said to Dr. Bliss: "Doctor, I feel very comfortable, but I also feel dreadfully weak. I wish you would give me the hand-glass and let me look at myself."

Gen. Swaim said: "Oh, no, don't do that, Mr. President, see if you can't get some more sleep." "I want to see myself," the President replied. Mrs. Garfield gave him a hand-glass. He held it in a position which enabled him to see his face. Mrs. Garfield, Dr. Bliss, Dr. Agnew, Gen. Swaim and Dr. Boynton stood around the bed, saying not a word, but looking at the President. He studied the reflection of his own features at length. He wearily let the glass fall upon the counterpane, and with a sigh said to Mrs. Garfield: "Crete, I don't see how it is that a man who looks as well as I do should be so dreadfully weak."

In a moment or two he asked for his daughter, Miss Mollie. They told him that she would come to see him later in the day. He said, however, that he wanted to see her then. Thereupon Rockwell went to the beach where Miss Mollie was sitting with Miss Rockwell, and told her that her father wanted to see her. When the child went into the room she kissed her father and told him that she was glad to see that he was looking so much better. The President said: "You think I do look better, Mollie?" She said: "I do, papa."

And then she took a chair and sat at the foot of the bed a moment or two. After Dr. Boynton noticed that Miss Mollie was swaying in the chair, he slipped up to her, but before he could reach her she had fallen over in a dead faint. In falling her face struck against the bedpost, and when they raised her from the floor she was not only unconscious, but also bleeding from the contusion which she had received. They carried her out where she could get the fresh breeze from the ocean, and, after restoratives were applied, she speedily recovered from the faint. The room was close, the windows were closed, and Miss Mollie had not been very well, and all three causes combined with the anxiety, induced the fainting fit. The President, they thought, had not noticed what had happened to his petted child, for he seemed to have sank into the stupor which characterized his condition most of the time. But when Dr. Boynton went back into the room he was astonished to hear the President say: "Poor little Mollie. She fell over like a log. What was the matter?" They assured the President that the fainting fit was caused by the closeness of the room, as well as the delicate constitution of the girl, and when he had that assurance he again sank into a stupor or sleep, which lasted until the noon examination. This stupor was not a healthy sleep. The President frequently muttered and rolled, and tossed his head upon the pillow.

After the noon examination there was very little change in the President's condition, except that it was noticed that there was more mental confusion. The fear of a rigor about that hour was not realized, but there was a fear that a rigor would occur in early evening. At the same time the President was doing so well, comparatively, that the physicians entertained a slight hope that the evening, and possibly the night, would pass without any recurrence of the rigors. The Cabinet, who are all here with the exception of the Secretary of State and Secretary of War, asked the physicians for an honest prognosis of the case. They were told that the case was almost hopeless; that a person who had less vitality than the President has shown would be pronounced by the attending physicians to be beyond hope. Dr. Agnew said that the President's condition was bad as bad could be, but that he was not yet quite prepared to say that there was absolutely no hope. At the same time the Cabinet heard that which satisfied them that the President was now suffering from acute pyæmia.

At the evening bulletin his condition was thought a trifle more comfortable. There was a feeling of congratulation on all sides that he had escaped another rigor, which had been anxiously feared since the chill of the morning. Dr. Boynton, during the early evening, talked even a little hopefully, and the people about the hotels prepared to retire at the usual hour, having almost no fears of ill news before morning. At 10 o'clock Secretary Brown's cottage was dark and deserted. A few of the more vigilant newspaper-men sat talking of the case on the Elberon piazza. Dr. Boynton was among them. At twenty minutes past 10 a colored messenger called Dr. Boynton out in the dark and whispered to him excitedly. The Doctor turned back to the gang of reporters. "The President is sinking rapidly," he said, and disappeared in the gloom across the lawn toward the President's cottage. In a minute the scene had changed. There was a hurrying about the house, and the word was quickly sent the length of Long Branch that the President was greatly worse. At 10:30 Capt. Ingalls came across from the cottage slowly, as if nothing was wrong, and, when questioned, answered very quietly:

"I was just sent for by the officer of the guard, to send one of my men to the camp surgeon for mustard for an application to the President's body." The reporters went out on the lawn as far as the guard lines to wait for tidings. The report that mustard had been sent for led to the report of another rigor. The reporters were nearly all out on the dark lawn, and there was a suspense. Suddenly, with a rush, the reporters came across the lawn, their boots sounding upon the hard piazza like horses stampeded. In an instant the little telegraph office in the Elberon was surrounded, and there was a shower of bulletins thrown upon the two paralyzed operators. "He is dead," was all that could be heard.

The President had been dead half an hour when, at 11:10, Windom, Hunt and James arrived from West End. They went into the hotel office and were met by MacVeagh, who led them away to the cottage. It was then learned that the President had not died in a rigor. He had suddenly shown signs of failing, and messengers were sent out for all of the doctors and attendants. Every possible application was used to revive him from the stupor which was apparently overtaking him. The end was plainly at hand, and presently he sank away. He was dead. The first report was not believed, when it was confirmed, and the messengers who hurried away in carriages and on horseback were called for confirmation of the distressing news by people along the wayside. The guests at the hotels who had retired were at once aroused.

Attorney General MacVeagh, as soon as possible after the death, came to the office of the Elberon and made the following statement as to the death-scene. He said: "Dr. Bliss at 9:30 went to the cottage to make his final examination before he retired. He found the pulse, temperature and respiration exactly as they were when the evening bulletin was issued. There had been no change of any kind. There was every promise of a quiet night. All of the doctors retired at once for the night, as did all of the attendants except Gen. Swaim and Col. Rockwell. They remained, and nothing transpired until about 10:20. Then the President said: "I am suffering great pain. I fear the end is near."

The attendants sent for Dr. Bliss, who had retired to Private Secretary Brown's cottage. Dr. Bliss came very rapidly. When he entered the room he found the President in an unconscious state, and the action of the heart had almost ceased. Dr. Bliss said at once that the President was dying, and directed the attendants to send for Mrs. Garfield and Drs. Agnew and Hamilton. The President remained in a dying condition until 10:25, when Dr. Bliss pronounced life extinct.

J. Stanley Brown, the President's Private Secretary, gives the following description of the death scene: When Mr. Brown entered the room, Mrs. Rockwell and Miss Lulu, who had just come in with Mrs. Garfield and Mollie, left the room and stood in the hall just outside the door. Dr. Bliss stood at the head of the bed, feeling the pulse. As he came in, taking his place among the people present, Drs. Agnew and Hamilton were trying to revive the President with hypodermic injections of brandy. Col. Rockwell then went out a moment and returned with Mollie Garfield. As the President passed into the sinking condition and began to breathe in great, slow gasps, Col. Rockwell went quietly to the windows and closed them. Mr. Brown walked to Mrs. Garfield, and she leaned upon his arm as the President slowly breathed his last. Mrs. Garfield was calm, save for the convulsive shudders that at times overmastered her. Mollie came up to her a moment later, and her mother put her arm around her as the little girl sobbed bitterly. Her weeping and the President's gasping breath were the only sounds in the room. Then Gen. Swaim came to Miss Mollie, fearing her grief would be too much for her mother, and led her away out of the room. There was a period of gasping, and then the President ceased to breathe. Mrs. Rockwell then placed her arm around Mrs. Garfield and led her away. As Mrs. Garfield left the room she turned and said to Mr. Brown, as she wrung his hand: "I shall depend upon you."

Public Sorrow.

The intelligence of the death of President Garfield was received everywhere throughout the country with expressions of the profoundest sorrow. The tolling of bells, draping of buildings, closing of places of amusement, and in some cities an almost total suspension of business, are but a few evidences of the depth of gloom produced by the sad event. Nor has this feeling been confined to any one section or party. North and South, East and West, the great public heart was buried in one common grief over the loss of the great and good President, and one common sympathy for the stricken mother and wife and children in their terrible bereavement.

The New Executive.

How the news of the death of President Garfield was received by Vice President Arthur, is thus chronicled in a New York dispatch:

There was no unusual stir about the house. The servant at the door informed the reporter that Gen. Arthur had received nothing later than the evening bulletin. "The President is dead," said the reporter. At that moment Gen. Arthur appeared in the hall. "The President is dead," the reporter repeated to him. "Oh, no; it can not be true; it can not be; I have heard nothing."

"The dispatch has just been received," said the reporter.

"I hope, my God, I do hope it is a mistake." Gen. Arthur's voice broke at the last words, and his eyes filled with tears. He then retired to the back room, where Messrs. Elihu Root and Daniel G. Rollins were awaiting him. "They say he is dead," said Gen. Arthur. A deep silence ensued. A moment afterward a telegram was received. Gen. Arthur broke it open slowly. After reading it he buried his head in his hands, and remained in this position for a long time. Meanwhile the dispatch was handed slowly around. It read:

"It becomes our painful duty to inform you of the death of President Garfield, and to advise you to take the oath of office as President of the United States without delay. If it concur with your judgment we will be very glad if you will come here on the earliest train to-morrow morning.

"WILLIAM WINDOM,
"Secretary of the Treasury.
"W. H. HUNT,
"Secretary of the Navy.
"THOMAS L. JAMES,
"Postmaster General.
"WAYNE MACVEAGH,
"Attorney General.
"S. J. KIRKWOOD,
"Secretary of the Interior."

By 12 o'clock the sound of cabs rattling up in front of the house filled the street. A few moments after receiving the news of the President's death Gen. Arthur's son hastened up the steps. He remained a few moments in the room with his father, but the latter was still too much affected by the news to speak. It was 12:30 o'clock when Gen. Arthur received the formal notification of the President's death, signed by the Cabinet. He had not then decided what steps to take. He was again completely unnerved and again buried his face in his hands.

The Death-Bed—An Affecting Scene.

The death-bed scene of the President was a peculiarly sad and impressive one. The following persons were present when the great man breathed his last: Drs. Bliss and Agnew, Mrs. Garfield and her daughter Mollie, Col. Rockwell, O. C. Rockwell, Gen. Swaim, Dr. Boynton, Private Secretary J. Stanley Brown, Mrs. and Miss Rockwell, Executive Secretary Warren Young, H. L. Atchison, John Ricker, S. Lancaster and Daniel Spriggs, attendants, the last named colored. At 10 o'clock the patient was sleeping. All around was quiet, and the last preparations for night had been made. Mrs. Garfield and Miss Mollie were in their cottage, near by. At about 10:15 the President was wakened from his sleep by a pain in the region of the heart. He exclaimed to Gen. Swaim: "I am suffering great pain." These were his last words. Dr. Bliss, who was at hand, was summoned. Even then the President had begun to fail. Gen. Swaim did not appreciate the crisis which had come. Dr. Bliss felt for the President's pulse. It was hardly perceptible. "My God! Swaim," he exclaimed in a whisper, "he is dying! Send for Mrs. Garfield." His heart then was but weakly fluttering. Drs. Agnew and Hamilton were sent for, and the former reached the room in time for the end. The other attendants all arrived immediately after Mrs. Garfield and her little daughter Mollie. Mrs. Garfield had nerved herself for the end, which she had for some hours dreaded as inevitable. She went at once to the side of her dying husband and took his hand in hers. The President was helpless and speechless, but, as his wife sat down by him, he turned his face toward hers slightly and fixed his eyes upon his wife's, and so he sank into unconsciousness, his eyes still bent on her face. With one hand she held her husband's, and her other hand lay on his heart. There was no word uttered. Drs. Agnew and Bliss stood by the bedside. Mollie, restraining her sobs, was at her mother's side. The watchers and attendants stood by, and Dr. Boynton sat at the President's head, fanning him. The pulse became entirely imperceptible. The applications which had been brought to be applied as restoratives lay untouched. The end was plainly at hand. When another minute had come the great-hearted man was dead, and lay free from pain and strife. His eyes were open but vacant, the pupils still bent on the face of the stricken wife. Broken-hearted Mollie turned and sobbed. The effort with which Mrs. Garfield herself kept back her tears was seen in the fixed lines of the face as she arose and went from the room. At the door of her chamber she broke quite down. For the first time she sobbed aloud, and in this first burst of grief she shut herself alone in her chamber. She remained thus alone for perhaps three minutes, and what new strength she got in the brief communion was seen in her brave and resolute face as she came back to the bed where her dead husband lay. Dr. Hamilton, with a woman's gentleness, had closed the eyelids. Mrs. Garfield, soon by the bed, took up the lifeless hand that had held her heart, and there she sat for nearly three hours. Drs. Agnew and Boynton and Gen. Swaim remained in the room for some time until, at last, Secretary Brown and Warren Young alone were left to keep the vigil till daybreak. Nothing was ever more pathetic than the peaceful death of the once strong man—the passing away of a nation's leader, his helpless hand lying in his wife's, to whom he was ever more than President.

The Autopsy—Its Strange Developments.

The autopsy is the most marvelous feature in the President's case. It shows that the surgeons had absolutely no knowledge of the character of the wound, or the location of the ball. What was called "the track of the wound" was, in fact, a burrowing pus cavity. The catheter, that was following the track of a supposed tortuous wound, was being pushed into a pus cavity. The ball which Dr. Hamilton, even, thought he could locate within half an inch proved to be a mere ball of pus walled up. The metal which the induction balance discovered was the same accumulation of pus. The doctors all knew within an inch where the ball was, and could have reached it immediately with a knife. Yet it was two feet, by the surface of the body, from where they thought it was, and behind the heart, instead of being in front of the groin. The ball never went downward and forward. It went sideways across the backbone. The shattered rib, which was not known to the consulting surgeons until July 23, was the obstacle which deflected the bullet, and caused it to locate where no one ever suspected that it was, and where it remained, a permanent danger to the heart. The doctors, however, congratulate themselves that the lung was not seriously affected—that there was no metastatic abscess. The case illustrates how great the skill of good nursing is, for it shows that the President was kept alive for eighty days solely by good nursing, while he had a mortal wound that was constantly poisoning the system. But the autopsy shows how greatly the most eminent surgeons may err—plainly spoken, that the doctors knew very little about the wound or the course of the ball. The post mortem was made the day after death, in the presence and with the assistance of Drs. Hamilton, Agnew, Bliss, Barnes, Woodward, Reyburn, Andrew H. Smith, of Elberon, and Acting Assistant Surgeon D. S. Lamb, of the Army Medical Museum of Washington. The operation was performed by Dr. Lamb. The physicians, in their official report of the autopsy, say:

"It was found that the ball, after fracturing the right eleventh rib, had passed through the spinal column, in front of the spinal canal, fracturing the body of the first lumbar vertebra, driving a number of small fragments of bone into the adjacent soft parts, and lodging just below the pancreas, about two inches and a half to the left of the spine, and behind the peritoneum, where it had become completely encysted.

"The immediate cause of death was secondary hemorrhage from one of the mesenteric arteries adjoining the track of the ball, the blood rupturing the peritoneum and nearly a pint escaping into the abdominal cavity.

"This hemorrhage is believed to have been the cause of the severe pain in the lower part of the chest complained of just before death.

"An abscess cavity, six inches by four in dimensions, was found in the vicinity of the gall bladder, between the liver and the transverse colon, which were strongly interadherent. It did not involve the substance of the liver, and no communication was found between it and the wound.

"Along the suppuration a channel extended from the external wound between the loin muscles and the right kidney almost to the right groin. This channel is now known to be due to the burrowing of the pus from the wound. It was supposed during life to have been the track of the ball.

"On examination of the organs of the chest evidences of severe bronchitis were found on both sides, with broncho-pneumonia of the lower portions of the right lung, and, though to a much less extent, of the left.

"The lungs contained no abscesses and the heart no clots.

"The liver was enlarged and fatty, but free from abscesses, nor were any found in any other organ except the left kidney, which contained, near its surface, a small abscess about one-third of an inch in diameter.

"In reviewing the history of this case, in connection with the autopsy, it is quite evident that the different suppurating surfaces, and especially the fractured spongy tissue of the vertebra, furnish sufficient explanation of the septic condition which existed."

The Dear Old Mother.

President Garfield's mother slept at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Larrabee, at Mentor, on the night that death overtook her son. Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock the following telegram came:

"ELBERON, N. J., Sept. 19.

"Mrs. Eliza Garfield:

"James died this evening at 10:58. He calmly breathed his life away.

"D. G. SWAIM."

Mrs. Larrabee's first thought was as to her mother. The latter was sleeping calmly, and they did not awake her. Not until 8 o'clock did the old lady awake, having slept since 11 p. m. At that time Mrs. Larrabee crossed the door with a heavy heart, and found her up and dressed reading the Bible. It was thought best not to break the news until Mrs. Garfield had eaten breakfast. Oddly enough, the old lady did not insist upon hearing the news until she had finished eating. Then, taking the fatal telegram from the shelf, she was about to read, but Miss Ellen took it from her trembling hands.

"Grandma," she said, "would you be surprised to get bad news this morning?"

"Why, I don't know," said Mrs. Garfield.

"Well, I shouldn't," said Mrs. Larrabee; "I have been fearing and expecting it all the morning."

"Grandma," said Ellen, "there is bad news."

"Is he dead?" asked the old lady, tremulously.

"He is."

The quick tears started in the sensitive eyes. There was a violent paroxysm of grief. No expression of frenzy told of the anguish within.

"Is it true?" she asked. "Then the Lord help me, for if he is dead what shall I do?" She was rendered weak and a little nervous by the announcement, and was obliged once or twice to repair to her room, where, in solitude, she might begin to comprehend the awful truth. But she was not contented to remain there, and soon returned to the sitting-room. About 9:30 o'clock Mrs. Garfield was found sitting in the rocking-chair waiting for the news. The morning paper she read with eagerness.

"It cannot be that James is dead," she murmured. "I cannot understand. I have no further wish to live, and I cannot live, if it is so."

BREAKING THE NEWS TO THE SONS.

The orphaned sons at Mentor were not informed of their father's death till after breakfast the next morning. For a time they wept bitterly, but afterward grew quiet, and bore their affliction with almost philosophical calmness.

A dispatch from Williamstown, Mass., says: "When Harry Garfield left Williams College for Elberon he left word that his brother, James A. Garfield, who is confined to his room with a severe attack of malarial fever, contracted at the White House, should not be informed of his father's death until he was better. The tolling of the church bells and the excitement aroused the suspicions of James, and it was thought best by his attending physician that he be informed of the truth. A burst of grief followed, but he is now bearing the trial bravely, though he is still in a precarious condition. He will be removed this afternoon to President Hopkins' house. The college went on as usual this morning. Memorial services will probably be held in a day or two."

Announcement to the Nations of Europe.

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 20.

To Lowell, Minister:

James A. Garfield, President of the United States, died at Elberon, N. J., at ten minutes before 11 o'clock. For nearly eighty days he suffered great pain, and, during the entire period, exhibited extraordinary patience, fortitude and Christian resignation. The sorrow throughout the country is deep and universal. Fifty millions of people stand as mourners at his bier.

To-day, at his residence in the city of New York, Chester A. Arthur, Vice President, took the oath of office as President, to which he succeeds by virtue of the constitution.

President Arthur has entered upon the discharge of his duties.

You will formally communicate these facts to the British Government, and transmit this dispatch to the American Ministers on the continent for like communication to the governments to which they are respectively accredited.

BLAINE, Secretary.

President Arthur—His First Cabinet Meeting.

Gen. Arthur arrived at Long Branch on the afternoon of Sept. 20. He was met at the station by Secretaries Windom, Hunt and Kirkwood, Postmaster General James and Attorney General MacVeagh. Secretaries Blaine and Lincoln accompanied him from New York. President Arthur looked quite sad and careworn. His face was pale. He was driven to Attorney General MacVeagh's cottage, and was soon joined by the Cabinet officers. At this, the first Cabinet meeting in which the new Executive participated, two questions were discussed, one being the matter of funeral arrangements, and the other the complications that had arisen in regard to an inquest on the body of the President. It had been discovered that, under the laws of New Jersey, it would be impossible to hold an inquest without the presence of the assassin Guiteau. As bringing him to Long Branch was out of the question, a conflict of interest seemed likely to arise. After considerable discussion, in which Gov. Ludlow, of New Jersey, Marana Caleby, the Sheriff of the county, and the Attorney General of the State participated, it was finally decided that they would be obliged to dispense with the inquest altogether. The State officials agreed, and thus the disputed question was avoided. The other matter with regard to funeral arrangements was an almost equally delicate subject. From all parts of the country, from the municipal corporations of the large cities, and the Governors of nearly all the States, had come in the unanimous request that the people be permitted a view of the murdered President. In conflict with this was the decided wish of Mrs. Garfield that there should be no display, and this desire in the minds of the Cabinet finally bore down all other considerations, and the decision was reached to have the obsequies and the removal to Cleveland as unostentatious as possible.

Removal of the Remains from Long Branch to Washington.

The remains of President Garfield were exposed to public view in one of the lower rooms of Francklyn cottage, at Long Branch, on Wednesday, Sept. 21. He was laid out in the suit of clothes which he wore on inauguration day. His left hand was laid across his breast, after the manner he had in life. This was done in order to make his resemblance as near to life as possible. The body was so greatly shrunken that artificial means had to be resorted to to give the clothes an appearance of fitting. In addition to the natural shrinking from his illness, the operation connected with the autopsy had left the body in an even more emaciated state. The face was so changed as to be scarcely recognizable.

At half-past 9 o'clock religious services were conducted by the Rev. Charles J. Young, of the First Reformed Church, Long Branch. There were present, besides the family and their attendants, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, members of the Cabinet, their wives, and a few personal friends, numbering in all not more than fifty. As the minister stepped up to the head of the coffin, just as he was going to begin, Mrs. Garfield leaned toward Col. Rockwell and either spoke in a very low whisper to him or indicated her desire by a gesture only. The Colonel raised his hand to bid the minister wait, and said in a low tone:

"Mrs. Garfield wants to look into the coffin before the service."

Immediately the widow, taking her daughter by the hand, arose, and descending the steps without aid, both stood hand-in-hand for what seemed a very long time, and gazed at the face of the dead man. Miss Mollie's feelings were beyond her control, but her mother was as motionless in attitude and feature as a statue. "I stood and gazed at her in wonder," said the Rev. Mr. Young to a friend. "It was a marvelous sight to see that woman standing there, looking into that coffin, holding herself under such control. But of course her face was like marble. I never saw anything like it, for except Mrs. Garfield's there was not a dry eye in the room."

Immediately after the conclusion of the services, Mrs. Garfield, accompanied by her son Harry, Col. Swaim, Col. and Mrs. Rockwell, and Dr. Boynton and C. O. Rockwell, left the cottage and boarded the first coach. The members of the Cabinet and their wives followed and took seats in the second coach. Mrs. Garfield was heavily veiled, and passing to the train exhibited the same fortitude which has characterized her manner throughout.

Just before the train was ready to start, the Governor and other State officers of New Jersey, accompanied by members of the Legislature, arrived, and acted as a guard of honor.

A few minutes before 10 o'clock the casket was removed from the cottage and placed in the third coach. The attendants and others who accompanied the party took seats in the fourth car. At exactly 10 o'clock the train started from the cottage, moving from the grounds very slowly.

The route to the national capital was found to be decorated with mourning emblems, the people standing with uncovered heads, and every church bell tolling in honor of the illustrious dead. Everywhere along the line there were touching manifestations of popular grief. The flags in the grounds of the rich were at half-mast, and were intertwined with mourning emblems. The houses of the poor showed, from the doors and windows, the depth of the national grief. Through Jersey the farmers were assembled at the crossings, as they had been two weeks before, to witness the same Presidential train, which then bore the living, but which now carried back the living and the dead Presidents. Every switchtender had placed some mourning token about his house. The workmen in the cities that were passed suspended their labor as the train went by. The most touching incident of the day occurred at Trenton, near which is Princeton College. The students had telegraphed early in the morning to Secretary Blaine a request that the train might go slowly through Trenton, as they wished to tender some flowers. Their request was heeded. As the cortege approached Trenton, the train slowed down, and it was soon seen that the students, ranged on either side, had strewn the track with flowers. The speed, too, had been so slackened that a large basket of choicest flowers were received by some one in the baggage car. They were intended for Mrs. Garfield.

As the train rolled into the depot at Washington every head was uncovered and a solemn silence was observed by the immense crowd which had gathered. Officers of the army and navy to the number of 120 formed in single rank facing the train. Mrs. Garfield, assisted by Secretary Blaine and her son Harry, was the first to descend from the carriage. She was heavily veiled. She entered the state carriage in waiting for her, and was followed by her daughter Mollie, her son Harry and Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell. The other members of the funeral party were President Arthur, Senator Jones, of Nevada, Gen. Grant, Gen. Beale, Gen. and Mrs. Swaim, Col. Rockwell, Col. Corbin, Dr. Bliss and daughter, Dr. Boynton, Dr. Agnew, Dr. Hamilton, Attorney General MacVeagh, wife and two sons, Secretary Lincoln, wife and son, Secretary and Mrs. Hunt, Postmaster General James and Mrs. James, Secretary and Mrs. Kirkwood. The coffin was borne from the depot to the hearse on the shoulders of eight soldiers of the Second artillery. The Marine Band played "Nearer My God to Thee" as the coffin was borne to the hearse.

After the coffin had been placed in the hearse the remainder of the party entered their carriages and took places in the procession.

The funeral procession moved slowly up the avenue. A mass lined the sidewalks all the way from Sixth street to the east front of the Capitol, and along this portion of the route the crowd was apparently as great as upon the occasion of the President's inaugural procession. As the procession moved up the avenue scarcely a sound was heard, save that from the feet of the moving men and horses. Hats were removed, and heads bowed as by a common impulse of deep and unfeigned grief as the procession moved on toward the Capitol. Here, at the east front, a vast assemblage had congregated to view the funeral cortege. At the foot of the steps there was a double file of Senators and Representatives, headed by their respective officers, waiting in respectful silence to escort the remains into the rotunda. At precisely 5:10 the head of the procession, moving around the south side, arrived at the east front of the Capitol, the arms of the military being reversed, and the bands playing a dead march. The order was then given to carry arms, and the troops came to a front face, while to the muffled beat of the drums the hearse and its attendant train of carriages drew slowly up in front of the escort. A hush came over the multitude, and heads were reverently uncovered as the coffin was carefully lifted from the hearse. The officers of the army and navy drew up in parallel lines on either side of the hearse, and the Marine Band played again, with much sentiment, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," as, with solemn tread, the remains of President Garfield were borne into the rotunda and placed upon the catafalque, the Senators and Representatives preceding and ranging themselves on either side of the dais. Close behind the coffin walked President Arthur and Secretary Blaine, who were followed by Chief Justice Waite and Secretary Windom, Gen. Grant and Secretary Hunt, Secretary Lincoln and Attorney General MacVeagh, Secretary Kirkwood and Postmaster General James, Col. Rockwell and Gen. Swaim, and Gen. Corbin and Private Secretary Brown. At 5:25 the lid of the coffin was opened, and the face of the late President was exposed. Noiselessly President Arthur and Secretary Blaine approached and gazed upon the face of the dead, and then slowly and sadly passed out of the hall. A line was formed by Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, and, one by one, those present advanced and gazed at the emaciated and discolored face. The public at large were then admitted, and hundreds of persons testified by their reverential conduct and mournful countenances the sorrow which they felt on looking upon the features of their murdered President.

At Washington—Lying in State.

The remains of President Garfield lay in state at the Capitol during Thursday and Friday, Sept. 22-3, and were viewed by a continuous stream of citizens. At daybreak on Thursday laboring men, with the implements of their trades in hand, looked upon the coffin. After early breakfast the rush began, and it continued all day. The sun poured down with its relentless heat, but it could not disperse these thousands who had gathered to pay the last token of respect to the dead.

The people in some parts of the line were four abreast; in others two abreast. They moved at an ordinary pace. There were men, women and children, black and white, of all ages and conditions. The city swell marched side by side with the Virginia negro. Finely-attired ladies did not disdain to march by the side of women clad in rags. The majority of the people in line were from the country. Every train that arrived from the South, West and East was crowded and specials were run from interior points. The procession was orderly. There was no pushing or other disturbance. When the portico leading to the rotunda was reached every man and boy in line lifted his hat. At the catafalque the members of the guard of honor assisted the people to obtain a good view of the dead President, and preserved order. Decomposition, which set in soon after the autopsy was performed, was not prevented by the embalming. A liberal sprinkling of powder over the face could not conceal the marks of decomposition. The face was of a dusky hue, sprinkled with black and yellow spots. The air-tight casket prevented the escape of disagreeable odors. At 6 o'clock Thursday evening the casket was closed by the undertakers. This action met with general approval. No one would have been able to recognize the features of Gen. Garfield living in the features of the dead. There was no abatement in the crowd, however. They poured in by the thousands, as eager to gaze upon the coffin as they had previously been to look upon the face of the dead. Floral decorations were scattered about the coffin and placed upon the floor of the rotunda. On the foot of the coffin rested an immense wreath of white rosebuds. Attached to it was a card bearing the following inscription:

> Queen Victoria to the memory of the late President Garfield, an expression of her sorrow and sympathy with Mrs. Garfield and the American nation.

The wreath was placed upon the casket by Mr. Hitt, Assistant Secretary of State. It was prepared by telegraphic direction of the Queen at the British Legation.

One of the most beautiful of the decorations was a piece prepared at the White House conservatory, representing "The Gates Ajar." It stood on the floor near the head of the coffin.

Friday witnessed a renewal of the scenes of Thursday, though the crowd was somewhat diminished. There was a constant stream of people pouring into the Capitol from early in the morning until noon, when preparations were begun for the funeral services.

The Repudiators in Virginia.

Just before the attack on the President's life, he was visited by Gen. Wickham and a delegation of the best Republicans in Virginia, who had given to the party a character and standing which it does not enjoy in any other Southern State. They protested in the strongest terms against the corrupt coalition which Republican officeholders like Lewis, Brady and Rives had formed, as ruinous to the party, and destined, if successful, to strike a serious blow at the public credit.

On that occasion the President answered the address by saying: "No Republican should touch any party tainted with repudiation." Subsequently the Republican Convention met at Lynchburg, and, being controlled by the ring of officeholders, it was sold out deliberately to the Mahone repudiators, who had previously put a ticket of their own in nomination. A more disgraceful bargain in politics was never before witnessed.

A faction of 31,000 mongrels, calling themselves Readjusters, absorbed the distinct Republican organization, which had given Garfield 84,000 votes last November. This foul transaction rested solely upon the bargain and sale by which the Republicans had obtained Mahone's vote in the Senate, and had thereby procured control of the Senate committees for the time being.

Messrs. Hoar and Dawes and other Republican Senators attempted to justify this infamous business by pretending that they were favoring a movement to regenerate the South, when they were only striving to secure preferment for themselves and their political associates by the aid of Mahone. They allowed him to dictate the nominations for Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, upon condition that he in return for that bribe would give them the committees. This contract was fully revealed in the debates at the extra session.

The canvass in Virginia is now in active progress. All the disguises of "free elections, fair count and public schools," which Dawes, Hoar and others rang the changes upon in the Senate, are thrown off by the coalition candidates. The only issue they discuss is the Riddleberger bill by which $13,000,000 of honest debt, incurred by civil war and expended for public improvements, are openly and undisguisedly repudiated out and out, while no trustworthy provision is made for the remainder of the admitted debt, nor for the payment of interest upon it.

If the Mahone ticket should succeed, with the Legislature in the hands of the Repudiators and a venal Court of Appeals to do their bidding, the debt of the State would become a great job. Indeed, that is one of the strongest elements of the campaign on Mahone's side, for success means addition, division and silence between a gang of brokers, who would negotiate the arrangement, and the Mahone ring, who would dictate the terms and pocket fortunes.

While the President is lying at death's door, advantage is taken of his infirmity to dishonor the declaration that "no Republican should touch any party tainted with repudiation." The large power of the Postoffice Department is turned over to Mahone. Honorable Republicans, white and black, faithful to all their trusts, have been turned out of office, for no other reason than that they refused to support the coalition organized by Marshal Lewis, and Brady and Rives, Collectors of Internal Revenue, the conspicuous managers of the Lynchburg surrender.

The patronage of the Treasury and of the Interior Department has been turned over in the same way, so that Mahone goes before the people of Virginia substantially with the support of the Cabinet. Superadded to this influence he is backed by the powerful Chesapeake and Ohio railroad corporation, of which Huntington, of the Pacific Central monopoly, is the directing mind. Mr. Huntington wants votes in the Senate, and Mahone belongs to the combination of which the former may be properly called the representative man. He it was who knew how to conquer the prejudices of French, late Auditor of Railroad Accounts, and thus to save the Central Pacific millions justly due the Government, at least until the Supreme Court shall decide against him, if the treachery of French should be finally reversed.

The administration stands before the public in this Virginia contest as openly supporting repudiation and corporate monopoly, both of which are distinctly represented in the person of the jobber Mahone. And it will be held to account for this shameful interference in a local election.—New York Sun.

Republican Love for the Boy in Blue.

The devotion of the Republican party to the boy in blue has often been the theme of admiring comment. In Chicago, for instance, all the Federal officeholders, every last one of them, would have been boys in blue if they had ever happened to have been in the army. Congress passed a law to show the party's devotion to the gallant defenders of their country, requiring that preference be given in the departmental appointments to Union soldiers, but was careful at the same time not to affix any penalty for the violation of the law. Somehow, the Union soldiers themselves do not appreciate this discrimination in their behalf. Largely because it is wholly theoretical. They have formed an association in Washington for the purpose of ascertaining why the law is practically a dead letter. They have found it out. Of the heads of departments not one was ever seriously a Union soldier. Bob Lincoln went down to City Point once and looked on in a perfunctory way for a few weeks. The others remained safely at home, and, now that they have charge of departments in which the boy in blue is to have the best show, they proceed to look after their cousins, their sisters and their aunts. In tracing the cause for the neglect of their comrades, the association of Union soldiers finds that there are 500 families employed in the Government service of Washington, fathers, wives, sons, daughters, all on the pay-roll of single departments, and this in violation of the law prohibiting the employment of married women. Old Kirkwood, of the Interior, has six relatives in that department. Postmaster General James has seen that the Jameses do not suffer. Green B. Raum has twelve relatives in the Department of Internal Revenue, including two brothers and one son. Hunt, of the Navy, has put three sons of his in that department and one in the Pension Bureau. French, of the Treasury, has twelve relatives under him. Tyner, of the Postoffice, has four. The officers of the soldiers' association report this as one of a hundred like cases: "A certain United States Senator has a 'lady friend' who has been on the pay-roll of the Postoffice Department for several years, but who has not been at the department two weeks altogether since her appointment. She has been receiving $75 per month right along. When the administration changed and Mr. James became Postmaster General, this Senator sent word to his friend, advising her that she had better report for duty, which she did; and, subsequently, the Senator succeeded in having her salary raised from $900 to $1,200 per year. The appointee reported at the department regularly for a few days, and then discontinued going to her office except to draw her salary on the first day of each month, which she has continued to do ever since." There are 1,454 Washingtonians employed in the departments, nearly every one of whom was a babe in arms during the war. It would be bootless to go through the whole list. Enough has been presented to demonstrate the deep love of the Republican party for the gallant boy in blue.—Chicago Times.

How Prices Are Fixed.

There is a discussion among some Iowa papers whether or not Liverpool fixes the price of American grain. Certainly Liverpool fixes the price of what American grain it buys. So does Glasgow. There may be no relation at all between the price of wheat in Chicago and New York and the price at Liverpool. Then, again, the market may be such that there will be a great intimacy between the price of wheat in the American and English market. Liverpool fixes the price of American wheat in this general sense that the price of commodities between all countries that have an interchangeable trade tend to an equilibrium. And, as Liverpool is the great market exchange of Christendom, the equilibrium in prices finds its usual mercantile expression there. But the price is made not by Liverpool, but by the whole area of supply and demand. If Liverpool miscalculates and fixes a wrong price for itself, New York and Chicago would not be governed by it, but would fix what would seem to them a right price. That will control price as to all that go to New York or Chicago market. And it may be above or below the Liverpool price. But it is true that sooner or later, although New York and Chicago may fix the price of grain above or below the Liverpool price, the price in all three places will gravitate to a uniformity. Not, we repeat, because Liverpool makes the price for New York and Chicago, but because it indicates that equilibrium between supply and demand which fixes price in Liverpool, New York, Chicago and everywhere.—Keokuk Gate City.

Truth and Honor.

Query: What is the best family medicine in the world to regulate the bowels, purify the blood, remove costiveness and biliousness, aid digestion and tone up the whole system? Truth and honor compels us to answer, Hop Bitters; being pure, perfect and harmless. See another column.—Toledo Blade.

Why We Commence Dinner With Soup.

The rationale of the initial soup has often been discussed; some regard it as calculated to diminish digestive power, on the theory that so much fluid taken at first dilutes the gastric juices. But there appears to be no foundation for this belief. A clear soup disappears almost immediately after entering the stomach, and in no way interferes with the gastric juice, which is stored in its appropriate cells ready for action. The habit of commencing dinner with soup has without doubt, its origin in the fact that aliment in this fluid form—in fact, ready digested—soon enters the blood and rapidly refreshes the hungry man, who, after a considerable fast and much activity, sits down with a sense of exhaustion to commence his principal meal. In two or three minutes after he has, taken a plate of good warm soup, the feeling of exhaustion disappears, and irritability gives way to the gradual rising sense of good-fellowship with the circle. Some persons have the custom of allaying exhaustion with a glass of sherry before food—a gastronomic no less than a physiological blunder, injuring the stomach and depraving the palate. The soup introduces at once into the system a small installment of ready-digested food, and saves the short period of time which must be spent by the stomach in deriving some nutriment from solid aliment, as well as indirectly strengthening the organ of digestion itself for its forthcoming duties.—Sir Henry Thompson.

He Took an Interest.

A traveling man sends us a joke that we do not remember of seeing in print. Two commercial agents met at the depot with their gripes, when one said: "Hello, John, where have you been?" John said that he had been laying off, but now he had an interest in the business, and was going on the road again. The friend congratulated him on having gained the proud position of partner in one of the largest houses in Milwaukee, which was making money hand over fist, when John broke in by saying: "No, I am not a partner, but the old man told me if I didn't take more interest in the business he would bounce me, so I have concluded to take an interest in it hereafter. Good day."—Peck's Sun.

Drawing the Line at Snores.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur Hall, an English clergyman, being annoyed by snoring during his preaching one day, stopped in his sermon and said: "I do not object to a quiet nap on a hot day, and am flattered at being able to contribute to anybody's repose. But, while proud at being able to give the beloved sleep, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I draw the line at snores. There is a man snoring in the congregation, and I shall be obliged if somebody will waken him."

Do Garter Snakes Eat Fish?

Well, if you will allow me a point and consider crayfish in the category, I can answer yes. While on the Upper Allegheny, not long since, I stepped out upon a log which projected into the river and began washing my hands in the water. Suddenly I perceived a quick movement in the river just beneath my hands, which was followed by the appearance of a large, healthy crayfish, which seemed to rise out of the water in a strange sort of way, which I could not understand, but in a moment more the mystery was solved by the head of a snake popping up and showing that it had just caught the crayfish by the tail.

I kept perfectly quiet, while the snake watched me for a minute or two, and then, concluding that I looked too good-natured to hurt it, it commenced on its meal. It was a garter snake about sixteen inches long and slender for its length. I could not see what it could possibly want with a crayfish, for I did not suppose it was insane enough to imagine that it could swallow such a bunch of shell and claws. But it went right at it as though it understood its business. Swaying its head (which remained on a level with the surface of the water) from side to side, it worked its jaws as though with a suction motion, rubbed its throat occasionally upon a little stone in the water, and the tail and part of the body of the crayfish was soon comfortably past the Rubicon.

But now came the tug of war, for there was the head and shoulders and huge large claws which were now to be disposed of. The snake seemed to realize that it had need of all its powers in order to complete its enterprise. It paused for a rest and a breathing spell, and I could readily imagine that it was spitting on its hands for the finish. Then it commenced again, and such a swelling and swaying and contorting would have made a circus clown sick with envy. And all this time the poor crayfish didn't offer a single objection. It simply looked out into space with a vacant stare, and didn't seem to have the least interest in the proceeding. It had doubtless been crossed in love at some not-distant period, and considered the world a hollow mockery, from which it was a blessing to be freed.

Gradually its shoulders were drawn into the cavity, then its head sank slowly out of sight, and the last thing we saw of that crayfish was one of its huge, sharp claws illustrating a dissolving view, as it was drawn into its living grave. Then that snake's jaws closed like a rat trap; it worked its body, pushing its victim down further—just as you have seen a boy work his throat when choking on an overdose of dry sponge cake—licked its lips with its tongue a few times, winked its eye at me, as though to say, "There, you can't do that, old man," and then wriggled away under the log to digest its well-earned meal.—Forest and Stream.

Baby Saved.

We are so thankful to say that our baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The parents, Rochester, N. Y. See another column.—Buffalo Express.

A Well Always Full of Ice.

About half a mile from Brownsville, Minn., is the natural ice well. On visiting it we found a shaft about twenty feet deep, and we could plainly see ice upon it. We then visited a shaft a few feet distant, and immediately upon entering it a cloud of steam, caused by the cold air coming in contact with our heated bodies, rushed forth. This shaft was excavated for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, the cause of the ice forming in the well, some of the inhabitants believing in the theory of a large cave being connected with it. After reaching the depth of 180 feet without result, drifting was abandoned. Before the shaft was made it is claimed that the well filled with ice to within six feet of the top. A thermometer marked 30 degrees Fahrenheit. About six feet back from the mouth of the tunnel the floor and sides are in many places covered with ice. A strong current of air constantly flows from the excavation that is very preceptible 100 feet distant. With the thermometer at 90 degrees an atmosphere below the freezing point is pleasant to contemplate, even though dangerous to investigate.—LaCrosse Chronicle.

It would be supposed from its popularity that only one substance is now known to the world for the relief of rheumatism, and that is St. Jacobs Oil.—St Louis (Mo.) Dispatch.

The Fourteen Wonders of the World.

The seven wonders of the world, in ancient times, were the pyramids of Egypt, the Pharos of Alexandria, the walls and hanging gardens of Babylon, the Temple of Diana, the statue of the Olympian Jupiter, the Mausoleum of Artemesia and the Colossus at Rhodes.

The seven wonders of the world in modern times are the printing-press, the steam-engine, the telephone, the phonograph, telegraph and electric light.

The so-called "seven wonders" of the ancients were mere trifles compared with those of the present time. The Brooklyn bridge, for example, would make the hanging gardens of Babylon a mere toy, while the whole seven wonders put together would sink into insignificance could their builders have seen a lightning-express train at full speed.

The Opium Habit.

The use of opium has been greatly increased in this country within the past few years. The Catholic World gives some statistics of the trade in Albany, N. Y., which show that twenty-five years ago that city, with a population of 57,000, consumed annually 350 pounds of opium and 375 ounces of morphia. Now, with a population of 91,000, the quantity of opium sold is 3,500 pounds, and 5,500 ounces of morphia. The deductions are that, while the city has increased 39 per cent., the sale of the drug has increased 900 per cent.

The Mound-Builders.

It appears that every known trait of the mound-builder was possessed also by the Indian at the time of the discovery of America. It hence becomes unnecessary to appeal to any other agency than the Indian. It is poor philosophy and poor science that resorts to hypothetical causes when those already known are sufficient to produce the known effects. The Indian is a known adequate cause. The assignment of the mounds to any other dynasty was born of that common reverence for the past and for the unexplainable, which not only unconsciously augments the actual, but revolts at the reduction of these works to the level of the existing red-man.—Popular Science Monthly.

How Savages Swim.

Nature, in an article in regard to the swimming of savage people, says: "The Indians on the Missouri river, when they have occasion to traverse that impetuous stream, invariably tread water just as the dog treads it. The natives of Joanna—an island on the coast of Madagascar—young persons of both sexes, walk the water, carrying fruit and vegetables to ships becalmed, or it may be lying-to in the offing miles away. Some Croomen, whose canoe upset before my eyes in the seaway on the coast of Africa, walked the water to the safe-keeping of their lives with the utmost facility, and I witnessed negro children on other occasions doing so at a very tender age. At Madras, watching their opportunity, messengers with letters secured in an oilskin cap plunge in the boiling surf and make their way, treading the water, to the vessels outside, through a sea in which an ordinary European boat will not live.

The Two Sexes.

There is nearly always something of nature's own gentility in all young women, except, indeed, when they get together and fall a giggling. It shames us men to see how much sooner they are polished into conventional shape than our rough masculine angels. An uncouth boy requires, heaven knows what assiduity, to move three steps, we do not say like a gentleman, but like a boy with a soul in him; but give the least advantage of society or tuition to a peasant girl, and a hundred to one but she will glide into refinement before the boy can make a bow without upsetting the table. There is sentiment in all women; and that gives delicacy to thought and taste to manner; with men it is generally acquired; an offspring of the intellectual quality; not, as with the other sex, of the moral.

A CORRESPONDENT of an English journal asserts that he has himself observed two spider showers—the fall of gossamer spiders in large numbers from a considerable height in the atmosphere—one in September, 1875, and the other in September, 1880. The first occurred on a cloudy morning, after a single peal of thunder, but no rainfall. "About 10 a. m.," states this writer, "I noticed small spiders running over my coat-sleeves, and had to brush off several trails of gossamer wed. Looking around, I found that the brick walls, houses, branches of trees, etc., had these webs dangling from them, and that other gossamer webs were continually falling from above, and adding to the accumulation. By midday a long fence was festooned from point to point of its triangular rail tops, with a ribbon-like ladder of gossamer, along which ran the spiders."

A TOUGH HORSE STORY.

The Cincinnati Enquirer lately published the following horse story, which we give just as it appeared: "A curious instance of sagacity in the horse occurred recently in the stables of Mr. A. Toughman, situated on North Elm street. Mr. T. has for a long time been in the habit of using ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great German Remedy, in his extensive stables. Among Mr. T.'s many horses is a great, powerful Canadian draught horse. This animal in course of time got so that that he knew the ST. JACOBS OIL bottle very well; so well, in fact, that one day recently on Mr. T.'s return from business, upon entering the stables he caught him licking the sore shoulder of a beast which stood beside him; the animal, giving a wise survey to his licking work, turned his head and caught up with his teeth from the box used as its receptable a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL. He threw the bottle on the floor with violence enough to break it, and then deliberately licked up the ST. JACOBS OIL and applied it to the cut. Readers, we have seen the laws of association belied by beings with less sense than Toughman's horse. The word has passed among us, and when we see a man who won't try the Oil, we say, 'He is worse than Toughman's horse.'" To many this may appear as a very "tough" story; and were there not proofs innumerable of the efficacy of the Great German Remedy they would be justified in so designating it. The testimony, however, is plentiful and pointed, and is from people whose long experience in matters appertaining to horseflesh entitles their opinions to profound consideration and respect.

GENTLEMEN:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. Waterloo, Ind., Sept. 23, 1881.

On Wayne street, Waterloo, Friday, there was a wonderful exhibition of courage. Bro. Baxter (Press) and a gentleman from the country, were comfortably seated upon a board, placed upon the head of a barrel filled with cider, when from a jolt or otherwise, a plug flew out of the barrel head. A forcible stream of cider rushed forth, carrying Bro. B. aloft with immense velocity. Fortunately Bro. B. losing his balance, returned to the ground with much less injury than could possibly have been anticipated. In the mean time, his companion was brave enough to attempt to arrest the column of cider by means of his thumbs for plugs. When Bro. B. recovered from the terrible shock, rallied to his assistance; having first procured a wooden plug. It was really grand to witness the determination depicted upon his countenance, as he coolly and deliberatly walked up to the barrel amid the groans of the teror-stricken lookers on.

Memorial Services at Auburn.

Agreeably to the proclamation of the president, appointing Monday, September 26, for memorial services, in honor of the deceased president, arrangements were made for its proper observance in Auburn. At two o'clock the procession was formed with the veterans of the old soldiers' club at the head, and proceeded to the Presbyterian church. Here, the meeting was called to order by Rev. S. B. Ward; song by the choir; scripture reading by Rev. L. Rice; hymn by the choir; prayer by Rev. P. J. Ward; scripture reading by Rev. H. J. Norris; hymn; discourse by Rev. P. J. Ward; hymn; benediction by Rev. Rettig. The people then returned to the soldiers' hall, where speeches were made by W. L. Penfield, Charles Emanuel, Hon. E. D. Hartman, Rev. Norris and Prof. Myers. The following resolutions were then adopted:

WHEREAS, The people of the United States have for many weeks prayed, with tearful eyes and sad hearts, that the threatened calamity might be averted, but,

WHEREAS, God, in his inscrutable providence, has at last seen fit to cast the shadow of death over our land, by claiming the spirit of our wounded and suffering comrad, James A. Garfield, the nation's beloved president, anxiety has given place to anguish, hope has yielded to affliction—he is dead. And,

WHEREAS, It is befitting that we, the members of the Union Soldiers' association, Post No. 1, Indiana Encampment, in common with our comrades throughout the land, should express our deep sorrow and grief, and place upon record a recognition of the great calamity that has befallen our beloved country, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That in the untimely death of our chieftain, James A. Garfield, the nation has suffered an irreparable loss, and that the people, not only of whom he was the chosen head, but of the whole civilized world, have abundant reasons to be overwhelmed with deepest grief.

RESOLVED, That we recognize in the life and services of James A. Garfield the grandest type of manhood and American citizenship, which illustrates what may be achieved under the glorious institutions bequeathed us by our fathers. His heroic and brilliant career from the humblest walks of life to the summit of fame, the chief executive of the grandest nation on earth, has made him the ideal of every true American.

RESOLVED, That while we, with the fifty millions of our countrymen, bow our heads in the most profound grief and sorrow, we condemn the assassin who has caused the nation's affliction, and pray that he will receive the full penalty of the law, without delay.

RESOLVED, That our most tender sympathies are with the heroic widow, afflicted children and aged mother of our lamented president, and pray God to bless and comfort them in their great affliction.

RESOLVED, That in token of our sentiment, and in respect to his memory, our hall remain draped in mourning for a period of six months.

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be published in the county papers, and a copy forwarded to Mrs. Garfield.

Suicide.

On Wednesday of last week, Daniel McClellan, of Troy township, this county, committed suicide by cutting his throat with an ordinary pocket knife. Deceased was a well-to-do farmer, an honest man, and nearly sixty-six years old when he took his life. He had been in poor health for seven years, and had no doubt contemplated the taking of his life for some time. He was a strong believer in religion, and had, previous to his death, told some of his neighbors that all he was waiting on, was the Lord's permission to kill himself. He leaves a wife and thirteen children. Coroner Latson was notified and held an inquest over the remains, and returned the following verdict:

I, the undersigned, coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, and legally qualified to inquire into the true presentment, make in what manner and by whom, Daniel McClellan came to his death, in Troy township, DeKalb county, Indiana, on the 21st day of Sept., 1881. After having heard all the evidence and examined the body I do find that the deceased came to his death by his own hands cutting his throat with a pocket knife.

Given under my hand and seal this 22 day of Sept., 1881.
J. J. LATSON, Coroner.

Court Items

Monday—This being a legal holiday court simply called and adjourned.

Tuesday—Judge Tousley was present, but his health is such, that it was impossible for him to discharge the duties of Judge for the term he therefore sent for H. G. Zimmerman, of Albion, to come and hold court for him which he did, and is now occupying the bench by appointment from Judge Tousley.

Mr. Zimmerman is a man of good legal attainments and is conducting the business of the court in a manner which seems to be satisfactory to the bar and all others interested. The time yesterday was taken up in calling the docket and attending to exparte business.

They can bring their pails or cups and get it by the pint or quart, or in any quantity to suit. He will also have seats provided free under an awning, for the use of those who purchase their tea and coffee of him. Hot meals at all hours and at reasonable prices. In addition to the regular first-class bill of fare, Mr. Hough will serve up a large fat venison from the north woods of Michigan. Call on him at his stand.

Improvement in Clover Threshing.

Frederick Keller, who lives east of town one mile, and owns one of J. I. Case & Co's. celebrated Agitator threshing machines, has put in his machine one of the company's new clover huller attachments, which works to perfection; having threshed a few days since for Samuel Miller, on the farm of A. J. Ralston—one of our townsmen—56 bushels of clover seed in less than eight hours. And the seed was cleaned and hauled to market as it came from the machine. Who can beat it for nice work? Said agitator and clover-hulling attachment was purchased of N. & G. Ensley, Auburn, Indiana.

Painful Accident.

On Tuesday of this week, Mrs. Jos. Dilgard, living on Van Buren street, left her house for a short time, leaving her six-months-old baby with some older children, she was horrified on returning, to find that the older children had gone to a closet to get some playthings, and there found a loaded shot-gun, which they got out on the floor, and accidently discharged it in some way, shooting the baby in the foot, considerably lacerating it. The wounded foot was promptly dressed by Dr. Sebring, assisted by Dr. Sears and Mrs. Dr. Swartz. Five shot were extracted, and the child is doing well.

—We hear some farmers grumble, that the town would lose trade, &c., by removing the hitching posts on Main street in front of the public square. The town has placed substantial posts upon each side and at the east end of the square, which is sufficient to accommodate double the amount of teams that ever comes to this place upon ordinary occasions. There are two tanks of fresh water upon each side of the square which the farmer can drive to and water his horses; and besides these advantages we have two vacant feed yards only a short distance from the square and hitching rings and posts all over the town. Before these posts were taken away we had a dirty, filthy mud-hole along this side of the street, compelling pedestrains to almost entirely vacate it, on account of the mud splashed by the stopping of horses. Not only this but many other reasons can be given, and the larger part of our citizens uphold the action of the street commissioners.

—We have received the first number of volume two of a new serial, published in Waterloo, by A. C. Gruhlky and Scott D. Judkin. Its title, is "Idle Hours," and it is devoted to charades, puzzles and general reading. Considered as an amateur paper, it is a decided success and is very creditable to its publishers. Having ourself whiled away many "idle hours" over puzzles, some of them by contributors to this little journal, we can do no less than wish the publishers success in their enterprise.

—John Downend, of Butler township was in town Monday. Mr. D. is one of the old reliable subscribers of the COURIER and we are always pleased to meet him.

The day at Waterloo.

The line of march was formed at 1:30 First came the Waterloo band, followed by the Rifles in full uniform. Next to these were the old soldiers, followed by the citizens generally. Arrived at the fair ground, the audience were seated in the grand stand which was completely filled. The building was finely draped and tastefully decorated. The meeting was called to order by the president, A. R. Stevens. The band then played a dirge, followed by the singing of the national requiem by the choir. After some remarks by Mr. Stevens, Judge Best was introduced, and delivered the address in his usual able style. He alluded in a special manner to the usual spirit of fairness of the deceased president as shown by his manly and patriotic course in the Milligan matter, and referred feelingly to Garfield in his home and family relations. The choir then sang "Go to the Grave." Remarks were then made by R. Wes. McBride. He alluded, among other things, to the promotion of Garfield, which was won at the battle of Chickamauga just eighteen years before, and now to that great promotion from earth to heaven. The audience then sang, "Nearer my God to Thee." General Blair followed in a brief sketch of his acquaintance with the president, and alluded to their meeting on the fatal field of Chickamauga, and testified personally to Garfield's good qualities of head and heart. Mr. Stevens, then in a few brief remarks introduced Robert Patterson, the only member of Garfield's old regiment, the 42nd Ohio, residing in this part of the country. Mr. Patterson was listened to with the most marked attention. He drew a vivid and feeling picture of his dead commander as he knew him when the regiment was organized and mustered in. He followed its course through camp and field until his Colonel was separated from the regiment and assigned to other duty. He recalled many acts of kindness and thoughtful attention that Garfield had bestowed upon his men, everyone of whom loved him as a brother. In concluding he exhorted the young to follow the example so nobly set for them. The choir then sang, "Jesus Lover of my Soul." Dr. Chamberlain was called and made a very feeling address. In these sad hours we must not let prejudice bias our minds, or warp our judgment in regard to any of the material facts connected with this great crime. While he had from the first believed the wound would be fatal, he did not believe in blaming the physicians, who had done all for the president that they could do. He believed that skillful treatment had prolonged the president's life until a better state of public feeling had been developed in regard to the inevitable change in the government. This delay had been of great advantage by enabling the people to form a calmer and better judgment of president Arthur, than they would have done, had the bullet of the assassin done its work at once.

The following resolutions were introduced by F. W. Willis and unanimously adopted, after which the meeting adjourned:

WHEREAS We, the citizens of Waterloo and vicinity, meet at this hour with deep and profound sorrow and regret, to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of our eminent and respected chief magistrate, James A. Garfield, and

WHEREAS, The first four months of his administration, in the midst of the hope and encouragement of the nation inspired by his great abilities, his wise statesmanship, his patriotism and his wisdom, party spirit had ceased and sectional differences had been quieted by his honest efforts to promote the interests and conserve the rights of the whole nation, had won their entire confidence, esteem and admiration by his unbiased character, his good views and his noble and statesman-like qualities, and

WHEREAS, It becomes our duty as American citizens to pay this tribute of respect to the honored dead, we mingle our sorrow with the sorrow of the nation, which rests like a pall upon all sections of the land and finding a responsive sympathy in all lands of the civilized world, Therefore be it

Resolved, That we extend our sympathies to the aged mother, the wife and relatives of the late president in their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and requested to be published in the county papers.

Obituary.

Samuel Bear was born in Perry county, Pa., Feb. 11, 1813, and died in Fairfield township, DeKalb county, Ind., Sept. 18, 1881. Of a family of twelve children, comprising six sons and six daughters, he was the fourth from the oldest. He lived with his father (Samuel Bear) on a farm until his tenth year, when the family removed near Waterloo, Seneca county, New York. Three years later they removed to the vicinity of Lockport, where they located on a tract of one hundred acres, which they cleared up. Here the deceased was married to Miss Elisabeth Dysinger, Aug. 9, 1836. In Nov. following he removed to Seneca county, Ohio, and lived upon a rented farm until the autumn of 1855, when he made the final removal to DeKalb county, Ind. Mr. Bear leaves behind him a family of eight children, all settled in the vicinity. He was a quiet unobtrusive farmer, held in high esteem by his neighbors, as was shown in tokens of esteem and sympathy during his last sickness. He was a kind father and a provident husband. He gave his children, to the extent of his ability, the advantages of education. While clearing up his farm he had to labor hard, but he never kept his children at home while school was in session. Not a member of church, he was none the less liberal in his contributions to religious purposes, and always gave the minister of the gospel a hearty welcome at his home. His life was one of almost constant labor; he never seemed contented unless at work. Years of toil began to tell on him. July 5 a stroke of paralysis gave premonition of danger. Up and around again, he seemed to realize that he looked upon the fields where he had worked so long, as upon a task completed. He was struck down the second time, Sept. 8, and gradually sunk in death. His funeral took place at Fairfield Center, Sept. 15. He was followed to the grave by a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors. Rev. L. Rice and Rev. J. Miller officiated. May the Lord comfort, by the oil of His grace, the bereaved companions and children.

L. RICE.

By the above report it will be seen that Mr. Joseph Abright continues as Depositary for the society. He will keep on hand at his store a supply of the Parent Society's Bibles and Testaments for sale at cost of publishing in New York. The astonishingly low price at which the Scriptures are sold in our county should insure large sales the coming year. Donations will be made to those unable to buy.

Pastors of churches throughout the county are requested to give notice from their pulpits where the depository is kept, to aid in supplying the destitute in their localities, and to forward collections annually to Mr. Abright, the Treasurer. JOHN TREESH, Secretary.

—Mr. Davy, of the oil regions of southern New York, is spending a few days visiting his brother-in-law, J. M. Goetschius. He will visit Chicago, and take in the sights there before he returns to his home.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Rome, N. Y., was visited by two conflagrations, within twenty-four hours, the losses aggregating $140,000.

During a quarrel at Boston between Harry Forbes and George W. Townsend, a well-known marine diver, Forbes shot Townsend through the neck and then shot himself in the head and fell dead. As he fell he rolled over on his stomach and, strange to relate, when he was found his heart and lungs had been ejected from his mouth and lay on the floor mingled with a volume of gore.... At Rockland, Me., Charles Smith, crazed by jealousy, killed his wife, infant son and mother-in-law, and then vainly attempted the life of an old lady residing in the house.... A collision occurred between two eastward-bound freight trains on the New York, Lake Erie and Western railway, eight miles east of Elmira, N. Y. Five persons were killed, two instantly, and a sixth is fatally wounded.... Two men, named Lenahan and Harvey, took their families rowing on Lily lake, near Scranton, Pa. When sufficient whisky had been imbibed, one of the party rocked the boat until it capsized, a child of each being drowned in sight of crowds on the shore.... The board of visitors to West Point report that hazing has been crushed under rigid discipline, but lingers to some extent.

Supervisor Coates, a wealthy and influential citizen of Cranston, N. J., dropped dead on reading the head-lines of the morning paper announcing the death of the President.

THE WEST.

Snow fell in considerable quantities in several parts of Nebraska and in portions of Kansas, Iowa and Minnesota on Sept. 16. North of Fort Dodge, Iowa, two inches of snow fell. There was also a slight fall of snow in portions of Michigan, on the same day.

Deputy Marshal Holland, of Kansas City, and an armed posse went to the region of the recent Glendale train robbery and arrested J. W. Brassfield, an escaped convict from the Missouri penitentiary, whom they lodged in jail at Independence for participation in the Chicago and Alton affair.... Gen. E. A. Carr left Fort Apache, Arizona, on Sept. 18, to scout for fifteen days in the region of the Cibicu valley, where the main band of hostile Indians was supposed to be located.... The large three-masted schooner D. A. Van Valkenburgh, laden with corn from Chicago to Buffalo, ran on to the rocks at Whitefish bay, in Lake Michigan, and was so badly wrecked that scarcely anything was left of the vessel or her valuable cargo. Eight persons were drowned and one saved..... Ten men employed in cutting trees and clearing the track of a new railroad line near Multwora falls, Columbia river, Ore., got into a small boat to cross the river. The boat swamped and five of the occupants were drowned.

The Denver (Col.) Tribune has opened a subscription list for Sergt. Mason's benefit and heads the list with $100. The Times, of that city, has a list for a monument to Garfield in one of the public parks.... The Wiggins Ferry Company, of St. Louis, has sued the Chicago and Alton road for $500,000 damages for breach of agreement.

Mr. Cyrus N. Walls, of the Paris (Ill.) Republican-Beacon, who mysteriously disappeared while visitiing Chicago, on the 23d of July last, suddenly turned up in that city the other day. He walked into a hotel and asked for a room, but when asked to register said he did not know his name. A Terre Haute (Ind.) man met him afterward on the street and called him by name. It was the first time in two months that he had heard it. He says he was robbed of his money, stabbed by the robber, and then nursed by some unknown parties. His case is certainly an extraordinary one.

Two blocks of buildings in St. Louis, between Ninth and Tenth streets and Clark avenue and Walnut street, were swept away by fire, causing a loss of over $500,000. The Collier White Lead Company sustains half the loss.... The Atlanta rolling-mill, the only one in Georgia, and which was built soon after the war by Lewis Scofield, a Chicagoan, at a cost of $300,000, has been entirely destroyed by fire.

THE SOUTH.

A strange and horrible accident recently occurred in Fulton county, Ark. Dr. J. B. Hutchinson, one of the most influential men in the county, decided to clean out a forty-foot well on his premises, and descended into it for that purpose, leaving a neighbor named James Doney at the windlass above. When less than half-way down the doctor was overcome by foul air. He called twice for assistance and then became unconscious. Doney stopped the windlass and prepared to go to Hutchinson's assistance. In his haste to descend he missed his footing, slipped and fell, breaking his neck. Hutchinson's wife hastened to the scene and her frantic cries brought a planter named James Beavers to the spot. He promptly took hold of the rope and started down. Before reaching the bottom the foul air overcame him, and he fell upon the two victims who had gone before him. Mrs. Hutchinson, crazed with grief, continued to fill the air with shrieks and sobs, and soon quite a number of persons were attracted to the spot, and the bodies of Doney, Hutchinson and Beavers taken from the well.... Jane Campbell, a negress, murdered two children at Dyke's Mills, La., by beating out their brains with a pine knot. A mob of incensed citizens tied the murderess to a stake and roasted her alive.

Near Powder Springs, Ga., live two families, Cooper and Mitchell, between whom for many years a deadly feud has existed. It seems that Cooper's chickens have been wont to invade Mitchell's grounds. The other day the Mitchells determined to put a stop to it, and Mitchell and two nephews began stoning the fowls, when Cooper, armed with a shotgun, came to their rescue. The Mitchells then set upon Cooper with knives. A bloody rencounter ensued, in which Cooper was cut all to pieces and will die. In the fight, however, Cooper fired both barrels at the Mitchells, killing the uncle instantly and fatally wounding one of the nephews, who died in a short time. ....Simon Silverman, of Indian Bay, Tenn., was robbed of a ticket which drew the grand prize of $30,000 in the Louisiana lottery.

A duel between Gen. Peyton Wise and L. L. Lewis was fought in Forbes' wood, eight miles from Warrenton, Va. Gen. Wise received Lewis' shot unhurt, and fired his own pistol in the air.

GENERAL.

A large iron buoy was picked up some time ago on the west coast of Vancouver island. Recently it was identified as a Russian buoy from the mouth of the Amoor river, on the Asiatic coast, and must have been brought by a current to the place where it was found. The incident is accepted as a proof of Wilkes' theory of the existence of what is known as the Japanese current, which sweeps by the coast of Japan, turns eastward, and on nearing the American coast bends southward.

Sorrow at the death of Gen. Garfield is not confined to this country. In England, Germany, France and throughout the civilized world it is deep, profound, intense. Queen Victoria cables from Balmoral to Mrs. Garfield: "Words cannot express the deep sympathy I feel with you. May God support and comfort you, as He alone can." The English journals of every shade of opinion have only words of the warmest sympathy for the American nation, and of feeling eulogy for the nation's dead chief..... The subscription started by Cyrus W. Field for the benefit of Mrs. Garfield amounted, upon the 21st of September, to $190,000.

Director Swift, of the observatory at Rochester, N. Y., says that the very hour President Garfield was passing away a new comet made its appearance, and could be distinctly seen with the aid of a good telescope. Four comets are now visible to a person with a good telescope.

President Garfield, in conversation with Secretary Blaine at the White House on the evening of the 1st of July, said: "I have now completed four months of the administration, and everything is doing well. The Cabinet is every day becoming more welded. There never has been an unkind word said across that Cabinet table." This was the last conversation of any length on state affairs held by Gen. Garfield with any one.

Warden Crocker visited Guiteau in his cell, the morning subsequent to the death of President Garfield, and was instantly asked about the condition of the President. The assassin said he had felt very anxious about his victim for the past few days, and feared he was nearing his end. When the Warden informed Guiteau that the Chief Magistrate was dead, he sank upon his bed and appeared greatly agitated. He afterward remarked that he would not have committed the deed had he known the President was to suffer so greatly. The assassin has been in constant dread of mob violence.

The District Attorney at Washington holds that Guiteau need not be taken to New Jersey for trial, while his assistant has reached a conclusion directly the reverse. The Assistant Solicitor of the Treasury declares that the assassin can legally be tried and executed in the District of Columbia.... In a letter to George C. Gorham regarding the threats to lynch Guiteau, Gen. Sherman asks every soldier and citizen to remember that we profess to be the most loyal nation on earth to the sacred promises of the law. He admits, however, that shooting or hanging is too good for the assassin.

POLITICAL.

The New York Prohibition Convention, convened at Utica, adopted a platform, including a resolution of sympathy with Garfield, and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Stephen Merritt, New York; Comptroller, Jefferson Bissell; Treasurer, Fred Gates; Attorney General, George Brooks; State Engineer and Surveyor, John J. Hooker; Judge of the Court of Appeals, Walter Farrington.

Collector Robertson has made no material changes in the New York Custom House, although the demand for place has been unprecedented. He recently gratified his political associates by sending to Washington some temporary appointments, but Secretary Windom peremptorily refused his approval, declaring himself an advocate of permanent places.

Ex-Minister Christiancy, since his return to Washington, has been talking about his wife in a way which reflects no credit on Mr. Christiancy, and which was not intended to reflect credit on Mrs. Christiancy. He has referred to her as a perjurer, etc. This having come to the ears of the lady's brother, Dr. Lugenbeel, that gentleman called on Mr. Christiancy, but Mr. Christiancy refused to see him. Lugenbeel then wrote to Christiancy, telling him that unless he (Christiancy) "preferred to confine himself to assaults upon women, to warfare in print, and to similar methods involving no physical danger," Dr. Lugenbeel would be glad to meet him in Virginia at any place within twenty miles from Washington, etc. The ex-Minister declined the invitation because he did not wish "to achieve notoriety by assassination," etc. Mr. Christiancy wound up his epistle by saying that he would seek such protection as the laws of his country afforded. This was in reference to an unmistakable threat at the end of Lugenbeel's epistle. Christiancy acted on his threat, and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Lugenbeel. It is evident that we have not heard all of the Christiancy nastiness yet.

Sergeant Mason, who shot at Guiteau, has written an address to the American people, which has been published. His address is rather disconnected and incoherent, and was evidently prepared by himself. He admits that his act was unsoldierly, but maintains that he had justification for it. He refers to Guiteau as a miserable wretch who deserves no consideration such as a man is entitled to. Mason's address was written in reply to some newspaper article saying he would have been guilty of murder had he killed Guiteau. Mason denies this, holding that it would not have been murder for him to have killed a cowardly assassin who had shot down the President. Mason further says that he does not think soldiers should be required to guard a dog like Guiteau; that while he and other soldiers were outside, exposed to rain and bad weather, Guiteau, an assassin, was well housed and well fed; that jail guards are sheltered from weather and receive $100 per month for their service, while he and other soldier guards get only $13 per month. He refers particularly to his poor wife and children, and says he does not want to bear the brand of a would-be murderer for their sakes. Mason maintains that he did right, and says that his only regret is that he made a poor shot—that he did not kill Guiteau.

Chester A. Arthur took the oath as President of the United States Tuesday, Sept. 21. It was administered by Chief Justice Brady, of the Supreme Court of New York.

The Wisconsin Republican Convention met at Madison Sept. 21. For the gubernatorial nomination the names of Gen. J. M. Rusk, Hans B. Warner, Lieut. Gov. Bingham and Hiram Smith were presented. Gen. Rusk carried off the prize on the sixth ballot. S. S. Fifield was nominated for Lieutenant Governor on first ballot. J. Timme was agreed upon for Secretary of State, and E. C. McFetridge for Treasurer.... The Massachusetts Republican Convention renominated all of the present State officers by acclamation.

FOREIGN.

The Prussian wheat crop is fully 20 per cent. below an average, the rye crop from 25 to 30 per cent. below, and all other cereal crops are from 10 to 15 per cent. below. The hay crop will not be one-half an average crop. ....It is believed in London that France has proposed and England accepted a joint military commission to reorganize the Egyptian army.

Reports to the Department of Agriculture show that the general average condition of the potato crop Sept. 1 was 70, a decline of 22 per cent. since Aug. 1. The condition in September, 1880, was 90.... Thieves broke into the room of Senator Christiancy, in the National Hotel at Washington, and stole therefrom $6,000 worth of jewelry and diamonds which had been placed with him for safe keeping when United States Minister to Peru.

At the Methodist Ecumenical, in London, a resolution condemning the opium traffic, with an addendum calling on the Government to deliver the country from the guilt of supporting it, was passed. Upon a suggestion for a missionary conference to obviate the rivalry and confusion between different Methodist bodies in the work of conversion, Mr. Reid, of America, said he had only been able to find one case of collision of this kind, and it should not go forth to the world that there were dissensions.

MICHIGAN'S CALAMITY.

Proclamation by the Governor of the State.

The following proclamation has been issued by the Governor of Michigan:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
LANSING, Mich., Sept. 19.

To the People of the United States:

On the 15th inst., in behalf of the homeless sufferers by the late fires in a portion of our State, we asked the people of this country to contribute to their great distress. Since that time I have visited the burned district and traversed a great portion thereof, driving through the ruins. The knowledge thus obtained satisfied me that the former estimate of 200 persons having perished in the flames was correct, and the further estimate that there are 15,000 of these sufferers now dependent upon the generosity of the public was not exaggerated. The fire district covers a territory of about 1,800 square miles, about one-half of which escaped the flames and the other half is a blackened waste, the destruction of property being pretty evenly distributed over the whole territory. This is an agricultural county, with occasionally a village, or small business center, where were flouring-mills, saw-mills, stores, churches, etc., etc. Many of these places and their industries were wholly destroyed, and in the farming portions, in the track of the fire, nothing was left for man's use but the land. Barns, cattle-sheds and structures of every kind that remain are being utilized as temporary shelter for the homeless. Hospitals for the care of those who suffer from burns are already established. They are fairly supplied with volunteer physicians and nurses. Among the latter are some good Sisters of Charity who are doing most efficient work. The exposed and overcrowded condition in which thousands are now living will necessarily increase the sickness and add to the needs of medical treatment and provisions for the care of the sick. Food is furnished by those whose homes were spared and by those outside of the burned district. There is little suffering from hunger in the main. The want of bedding is one cause of real distress. Stations for the distribution of supplies are established at convenient points and under the supervision of efficient individuals and committees. Careful lists are being prepared by personal investigation of the loss of each family, with data, showing their necessities. These are to be used to insure a judicious distribution of supplies. The whole work of those to whom the contributions have been intrusted gives evidence of having been inaugurated and conducted with care, skill and fidelity. In this good work the people of Port Huron, from their proximity to the scene of disaster, were first upon the ground, being represented by a committee composed of some of the best citizens, prominent among whom was United States Senator Omar D. Conger. By the exertions of this efficient organization, aided by the managers of the Port Huron and Northwestern railroad, extra trains with relief reached the sufferers before any could come from more remote points. In conjunction with other organizations the work was begun, and it is being prosecuted yet. Most of the people whose destitution appeals to the benevolence of the public are purely agriculturists. They were in a thrifty condition, considering the time they had occupied these lands, but had no accumulated surplus. They are dependent upon the productions of their farms for support. There are few, if any, manufacturing industries near them to give them employment. The aid extended to the unfortunate by those whose homes were saved will soon exhaust the surplus of the latter. What these people require is aid to procure such necessities as will enable them to live and till their lands. They must have food until the harvests of 1882 are gathered. Anything short of this will fail to accomplish the undertaking. The first effect of this disaster was to stupefy and paralyze the energies of the people. The prompt encouragement received has stimulated them to new efforts to help themselves. With the bare land and their labor only left they will begin to build anew. Already many are constructing log houses, and every available team is being worked with vigor to put in wheat, the seed for which is furnished by the relief committees. They appreciate their condition and the necessity for labor, and will struggle hard to do their part as they have an opportunity. I have thought it due to the public, who have read the appeals heretofore made, to lay these results of personal inspection before them. The necessity for continued assistance to enable the sufferers to go through the coming winter and to become self-sustaining is in nowise abated. The well-known generosity of the American people has never been invoked in a more meritorious cause.

DAVID H. JEROME, Governor.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

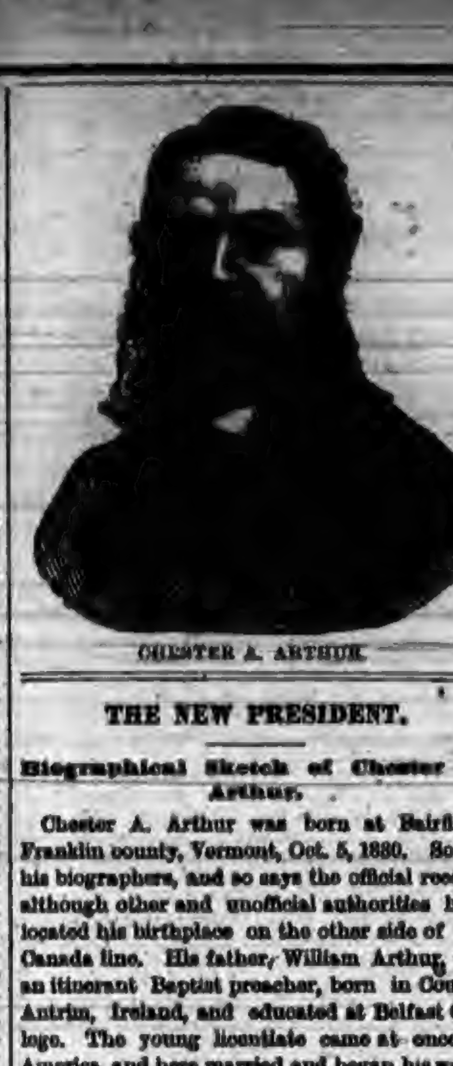
The Methodist Ecumenical Council closed its session at London with the adoption of an address to all the Methodists, which was read by Bishop Peck and signed by the representatives of every Wesleyan body, recommending the views favored at the various sittings, calling upon all to co-operate in the work of Christ; to maintain the traditional Methodist means for promotion of earnestness, and declaring that a call should go forth for a great spiritual awakening. The meeting of the next council in America in 1887 was authorized.

One of the most remarkable and gratifying features of the esteem in which the dead President was everywhere held is the expression of sympathy which this sad occasion has called out in Great Britain. The closing of exchanges and banks, the display of the flag at half-mast even in little towns and villages, the mourning flags upon the ancient cathedrals, the resolutions of sympathy, the gathering together of workingmen to express their sorrow, the meetings of merchants in the cities, the tolling of bells, an unprecedented tribute to a foreign ruler—all these manifestations of respect are remarkable, and were hardly to be expected. The Queen ordered the court to go into mourning for a week. More real sorrow could hardly have been expressed had death visited their own royal family.... Mr. Ellis Lever, of Manchester, England, has suggested to the American Consul in that city the establishment of an International College, to be known as "Garfield University," as a memorial to the dead President. Mr. Lever offers to contribute $5,000 towards the erection of the proposed university.

The deadly bullet taken by the surgeons from the body of President Garfield, at the autopsy, was handed to Private Secretary Brown, who will preserve it as a part of the evidence to be used in the trial of Guiteau.

The family of Senator Jones will not return from the Pacific slope before January, and President Arthur has accepted that gentleman's residence in Washington until that time. Meanwhile the White House will be thoroughly refitted.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat thus has its say about Maine: "The light penalty for drunkenness in Maine is thirty days in jail. They have a law that no medical student shall be allowed to graduate and practice medicine who has not had regular practice in the dissecting-room. Then they passed a law that no bodies, save only the bodies of executed criminals, should be cut up in dissecting-rooms. Then, as a climax to all this, they abolished capital punishment. That's the kind of a country Maine is."



CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

Biographical Sketch of Chester A. Arthur.

Chester A. Arthur was born at Fairfield, Franklin county, Vermont, Oct. 5, 1830. So say his biographers, and so says the official record, although other and unofficial authorities have located his birthplace on the other side of the Canada line. His father, William Arthur, was an itinerant Baptist preacher, born in County Antrim, Ireland, and educated at Belfast College. The young licentiate came at once to America, and here married and began his work, which, in a busy life ending Oct. 27, 1875, led him to many pulpits in Vermont and New York and to some in Canada, the town of Fairfield, Vt., being among them.

The early days of Chester A. Arthur's tuition were passed under the tutelage of his father. From his home studies he went to the wider field of instruction at Schenectady, N. Y., in the grammar school of which place he was prepared for entering Union College. At 15 years of age, therefore, in 1845, he entered Union, and, after a regular course, graduated high in his class. Like many another ambitious but impecunious student, young Arthur taught school in the vacations of college specially provided for that purpose. It is a coincidence that in these days of sturdy struggle the young student from Union College and a young student (Garfield) from Williams both taught school in North Pownal, Vt.

With $500 in his pocket, the frugal savings of a school-master's scanty pay, Arthur went to New York city and entered the law-office of Hon. Erastus D. Culver, and was in 1852 admitted to the practice of law. But clients did not then flock to his standard, and, with a young legal friend in like circumstances and frame of mind, two briefless young lawyers roamed the Western States for three months, seeking a place to locate. In the end, not satisfied with the advice of Greeley, the young men returned to New York and pooled their issues in the firm name of Arthur & Gardner. About this time Mr. Arthur made a happy matrimonial alliance, marrying the only daughter of Lieut. Herndon, U. S. N.—the brave Herndon who went down with the Aspinwall steamship Central American, which he commanded. Mrs. Arthur died in January, 1880, leaving two children, a son now in his 16th and a daughter in her 10th year.

The career of the young lawyer was made more successful by the interest he took in politics and the militia. He was at the front in caucuses and conventions, and on military parades. His earlier political instincts were with the Whigs, but with the decadence of that party he joined the multitude of American youth (at the North) in advancing the standard of the Republican party. He was, indeed, a delegate to the Saratoga Convention that organized the Republican party in the State of New York, and was a delegate in succeeding State conventions, year after year, until he had attained the Chairmanship of the State Committee and the nomination to the Vice Presidency.

Gov. Morgan, in organizing his military staff in 1861, named Mr. Arthur as Engineer in Chief. He had just before this held the position of Judge Advocate of the Second Brigade, New York city. A little later, Gen. Arthur was appointed Inspector General on the Governor's staff, and so continued during the first year of the great civil war—a year busy with the organization and inspection of volunteers for the field. On Jan. 27, 1862, Gov. Morgan advanced Gen. Arthur to the more important post of Quartermaster General, which position he held until the expiration of Morgan's term of office at the end of that year.

In July, 1862, Gen. Arthur was invited to be present at a meeting of Governors in the city of New York, held for the purpose of discussing measures whereby the Union armies could be kept with full ranks, and it is said he was the only person present who was not a Governor. In the same year he was on the staff of Maj. Gen. Hunt, in the Army of the Potomac, as inspector of New York troops in the field. With the end of Gov. Morgan's term of office, as already stated, Gen. Arthur's military career ended, and he returned to the law. Business of a most lucrative character now poured in upon him. Much of this work consisted in the collection of war claims and the drafting of bills for legislation. In consequence, a great deal of his time was spent at Albany or in Washington, where his successes won him a renown hardly second to that of any other lobbyist. He held for a short time the position of counsel to the Board of Tax Commissioners in New York city, at $10,000 a year, and in November, 1871, was appointed by President Grant to be Collector of the Port of New York.

On the 28th of January, 1879, John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, addressed a communication to President Hayes setting forth the necessity for a change in the New York Collectorship, saying that the Treasury Department stood ready to submit proof that "gross abuses of administration have continued and increased during his [Arthur's] incumbency."

The removal of Arthur and the appointment of Gen. Merritt as Collector of the Port followed.

The history of that memorable struggle at Chicago, which led up to the nomination of Garfield in June, 1880, is fresh in the minds of the people. After Garfield had been nominated, on the sixth day, the convention took a recess, with the tacit understanding that New York might, if it would, name a candidate for the Vice Presidency. The New York delegation, therefore, spent the intervening hour in caucus, with closed doors. Mr. Levi P. Morton, now Minister to France, declined to be considered as a candidate. Vice President Wheeler, Lieut. Gov. Hoskins and ex-Gov. Woodford were presented without favorable response. The sense of the caucus was so largely in favor of Arthur that, after half an hour's talk, all other names being withdrawn, it was determined to present his alone. When the convention reassembled, late in the afternoon of Tuesday, June 8, the nomination of Arthur was made in short order.

An Absurd Custom.

Shortly after the ascension of James the First, when Scotch gentlemen were beginning to feel at home in London, Lord Harewood gave a dinner-party, to which were invited a large number of courtiers, and officers both civil and military. After the bottle had circulated a few times, Gen. S——, an English trooper, and reckless bon vivant, arose and said: "Gentlemen, when I am in my cups, and the generous wine begins to warm my blood, I have an absurd custom of railing against the Scotch. Knowing my weakness, I hope no gentleman in the company will take it amiss." He sat down, and a Highland chief, Sir Robert Bleakie, of Blair Atholl, presenting a front like an old battle-worn tower, quietly arose and remarked: "Gentlemen, I, when in my cups, and the generous wine begins to warm my blood, if I hear a man begin to rail against the Scotch, have an absurd custom of kicking him at once out of the company. Knowing my weakness, I hope no gentleman will take it amiss." It may be needless to add that Gen. S—— did not on that occasion suffer himself to follow his usual custom.

THE DEAD PRESIDENT.

HIS EARLY LIFE.

James Abram Garfield was born Nov. 19, 1831, in the township of Orange, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, about fifteen miles from Cleveland. His father, Abraham Garfield, came from New York, but, like his mother, was of New England stock. James was the youngest of four children. The father died in 1833, leaving his family dependent upon a small farm and the exertions of the mother. There was nothing about the elder Garfield to distinguish him from the other plodding farmers of the rather sterile township of Orange. No one could discern any qualities in him, which, transmitted to the next generation, might help to make a statesman, unless it was industry; but his wife, who is still living at an advanced age, was always fond of reading when she could get leisure from her hard household duties, and was a thoroughly capable woman, of strong will, stern principles, and more than average force of character. Of the children no one beside James made the slightest mark in the world. The older brother is a farmer in Michigan, and the two sisters are farmers' wives. James had a hard time of it as a boy. He toiled hard on the farm early and late in summer, and worked at the carpenter's bench in winter. The best of it was that he liked work. He had an absorbing ambition to get an education, and the only road open to this end seemed that of manual labor. Ready money was hard to get in those days. The Ohio canal ran not far from where he lived, and, finding that the boatmen got their pay in cash and earned better wages than he could make at farming or carpentry, he hired out as a driver on the towpath and soon got up to the dignity of holding the helm of a boat. Then he determined to ship as a sailor on the lakes, but an attack of fever and ague interfered with his plans. He was ill three months, and when he recovered he decided to go to a school called Geauga Academy, in an adjoining county. His mother had saved a small sum of money, which she gave him, together with a few cooking utensils and a stock of provisions. He hired a small room and cooked his own food to make his expenses as light as possible. He paid his own way after that, never calling on his mother for any more assistance. By working at the carpenter's bench mornings and evenings and vacation times, and teaching country schools during the winter, he managed to attend the academy during the spring and fall terms and to save a little money toward going to college. He had excellent health, a robust frame, and a capital memory, and the attempt to combine mental and physical work, which has broken down many farmer boys ambitious to get an education, did not hurt him.

GARFIELD AT COLLEGE.

When he was 23 years of age he concluded he had got about all there was to be had in the obscure cross-roads academy. He calculated he had saved about half enough money to get through college, provided he could begin, as he hoped, with the Junior year. He got a life-insurance policy, and assigned it to a gentleman as security for a loan to make up the amount he lacked. In the fall of 1854 he entered the Junior class of Williams College, Massachusetts, and graduated in 1856 with the metaphysical honors of his class. A daguerreotype of him, taken about this time, represents a rather awkward youth, with a shock of light hair standing straight up from a big forehead and a frank, thoughtful face, of a very marked German type.

Before he went to college Garfield had connected himself with the Disciples, a sect having a numerous membership in Eastern and Southern Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky, where its founder, Alexander Campbell, had traveled and preached. The principal peculiarities of the denomination are their refusal to formulate their beliefs into a creed, the independence of each congregation, the hospitality and fraternal feeling of the members, and the lack of a regular ministry. When Garfield returned to Ohio it was natural that he should soon gravitate to the struggling little college of the young sect at Hiram, Portage county, near his boyhood's home. He became Professor of Latin and Greek, and threw himself with the energy and industry which were leading traits of his character into the work of building up the institution. Before he had been two years in his professorship he was appointed President of the college.

The young President taught, lectured and preached, and all the time studied as diligently as any acolyte in the temple of knowledge. He frequently spoke on Sundays in the churches of the towns in the vicinity to create an interest in the college. Among the Disciples any one can preach who has a mind to, no ordination being required. From these Sunday discussions came the story that Garfield at one time was a minister. He never considered himself as such, and never had any intention of finding a career in the pulpit. His ambition, if he had any outside of the school, lay in the direction of law and politics.

HIS MARRIAGE.

During his professorship Garfield married Miss Lucretia Rudolph, daughter of a farmer in the neighborhood, whose acquaintance he had made while at the academy, where she was also a pupil. She was a quiet, thoughtful girl, of singularly sweet and refined disposition, fond of study and reading, possessing a warm heart and a mind with the capacity of steady growth. The marriage was a love affair on both sides, and has been a thoroughly happy one. Much of Gen. Garfield's subsequent success in life may be attributed to the never-failing sympathy and intellectual companionship of his wife and the stimulus of a loving home circle. The young couple bought a neat little cottage fronting on the college campus, and began their wedded life poor and in debt, but with brave hearts.

In 1859 the college President was elected to the State Senate from the counties of Portage and Summit. He did not resign his Presidency, because he looked upon a few months in the Legislature as an episode not likely to change the course of his life. But the war came to alter his plans. During the winter of 1861 he was active in the passage of measures for arming the State militia, and his eloquence and energy made him a conspicuous leader of the Union party. Early in the summer of 1861 he was elected Colonel of an infantry regiment (the Forty-second) raised in Northern Ohio, many of the soldiers of which had been students at Hiram. He took the field in Eastern Kentucky, was soon put in command of a brigade, and, by making one of the hardest marches ever made by recruits, surprised and routed the rebel forces, under Humphrey Marshall, at Pikeston.

From Eastern Kentucky Gen. Garfield was transferred to Louisville, and from that place hastened to join the army of Gen. Buell, which he reached with his brigade in time to participate in the second day's fighting at Pittsburgh Landing. He took part in the siege of Corinth and in the operations along the Memphis and Charleston railroad. In January, 1863, he was appointed Chief of Staff of the Army of the Cumberland and bore a prominent share in all the campaigns in Middle Tennessee in the spring and summer of that year. His last conspicuous military service was at the battle of Chickamauga. For his conduct in that battle he was promoted to a Major Generalship. It is said that he wrote all the orders given to the army that day and submitted them to Gen. Rosecrans for approval, save one. The one he did not write was the fatal order to Gen. Wood, which was so worded as not to correctly convey the meaning of the commanding General, and which caused the destruction of the right wing of the army.

ELECTED TO CONGRESS.

The Congressional district in which Garfield lived was the one long made famous by Joshua R. Giddings. The old anti-slavery champion grew careless of the arts of politics toward the end of his career, and came to look upon a nomination and re-election as a matter of course. His overconfidence was taken advantage of in 1858 by an ambitious lawyer named Hutchins to carry a convention against him. The friends of Giddings never forgave Hutchins, and cast about for a means of defeating him. The old man himself was comfortably quartered in his Consulate at Montreal and did not care to make a fight to get back to Congress. So his supporters made use of the popularity of Garfield and nominated him while he was in the field without asking his consent. That was in 1862. When he heard of the nomination, Garfield reflected that it would be fifteen months before the Congress would meet in which he would be elected, and believing, as did every one else, that the war could not possibly last a year longer, concluded to accept. He often expressed regret that he did not help fight the war through, and said he never would have left the army to go to Congress had he foreseen that the struggle would continue beyond the year 1863. He continued his military service up to the time Congress met.

He was renominated in 1864, without opposition, but in 1866 Mr. Hutchins, whom he had supplanted, made an effort to defeat him. Hutchins canvassed the district thoroughly, but the convention nominated Garfield by acclamation. He had no opposition thereafter in his own party. In 1872 the Liberals and Democrats united to beat him, but his majority was larger than ever. In 1874 the Greenbackers and Democrats combined and put up a popular soldier against him, but they made no impression on the result. The Ashtabula district, as it is generally called, is the most faithful to its representatives of any in the North. It has had but five members in half a century.

When James G. Blaine went to the Senate in 1877 the mantle of Republican leadership in the House was, by common consent, placed upon Garfield. In January, 1880, Gen. Garfield was elected to the Senate to the seat vacated by Allen G. Thurman on the 4th of March, 1881. He received the unanimous vote of the Republican caucus, an honor never before given to any man of any party in the State of Ohio.

NOMINATED FOR PRESIDENT.

The circumstances of Gen. Garfield's nomination for the Presidency at Chicago are thus told by one of his many biographers: There were some indications as the thirtieth ballot progressed on Tuesday, June 8, that the lesser candidates were giving way. The next ballot demonstrated that the Grant lines could not be broken, and the Blaine lines were at this time wavering. It was apparent the convention was on the edge of a break. The next ballot, which was finished by half-past 12, was without exciting event. The close of the thirty-fourth was marked with some excitement growing out of a break to Garfield, Wisconsin casting for him sixteen votes. This was the beginning of the end. To make up this number, Washburne, Blaine and Sherman were drawn upon. When the result was declared, Gen. Garfield arose and addressed the Chair. The Chairman inquired for what purpose the gentleman rose.

"To a question of order," said Garfield.

"The gentleman will state it," said the chair.

"I challenge," said Mr. Garfield, "the correctness of the announcement that contains votes for me. No man has a right, without the consent of the person voted for, to have his name announced and voted for in this convention. Such consent I have not given."

This was overruled by the Chairman amidst laughter against Garfield, who had made the point on the vote cast for him by Wisconsin.

Then the thirty-fifth ballot was taken. It was apparent that the Blaine men had broken up. The ballot resulted as follows: Grant, 313; Blaine, 257; Sherman, 99; Edmunds, 11; Windom, 3; Washburne, 23; Garfield, 50.

The thirty-sixth ballot was taken amidst breathless excitement. It proved to be the last. It resulted: Grant, 306; Blaine, 42; Sherman, 3; Washburne, 6; Garfield, 399.

ELECTED AND INAUGURATED.

The campaign that followed the nomination of Garfield at Chicago and Hancock at Cincinnati was hotly contested. The first doubtful State, Maine, was carried by a fusion of Democrats and Greenbackers Sept. 13, against the Republican candidates; and it was believed for a time that the election of Hancock was assured. But the Republicans rallied splendidly in Ohio and Indiana, and carried both those States Oct. 12. Thenceforth no doubt was entertained of the ultimate triumph of the Republican candidate. The election Nov. 2 resulted in the choice of 214 Garfield and Arthur electors, and 155 Hancock and English electors. The Electoral Colleges voted accordingly Dec. 5. Gen. Garfield was declared elected by the two houses of Congress, sitting in joint convention, Feb. 9, and was inaugurated March 4.

HIS DOMESTIC LIFE.

Gen. Garfield had five children living, and had lost two, who died in infancy. The two older boys, Harry and James, were until lately at school in New Hampshire, and both entered Williams College a few days ago. Mary, or Molly as everybody calls her, is a handsome, rosy-cheeked girl of about 12. The two younger boys are named Irwin and Abram. The General's mother is still living, and has long been a member of his family. She is an intelligent, energetic old lady, with a clear head and a strong will, who keeps well posted in the news of the day, and is very proud of her son's career, though more liberal of criticism than of praise. His wife, who has been spoken of above, was in truth a companion of his joys and a sharer of his sorrows.

In person Gen. Garfield was six feet high, broad-shouldered and strongly built. He had an unusually-large head, that seemed to be three-fourths forehead, light-brown hair and beard, which was fast turning gray, large, light-blue eyes, a prominent nose and full cheeks. He dressed plainly, was fond of broad-brimmed slouch hats and stout boots, ate heartily, cared nothing for luxurious living, was thoroughly temperate in all respects save in that of brain-work, and devoted to his wife and children and very fond of his country home. Among men he was genial, approachable, companionable and a remarkably entertaining talker.

The Fireless Locomotive.

The following is the first intelligible description of M. Francq's much-talked-of fireless locomotive: "The construction is much like an ordinary locomotive, except that there is no fire. The boiler is a receptacle of extra strength, and the water contained in it is raised to a temperature of about 395° by the injection of steam at a pressure of 215 pounds. The steam is provided by a stationary boiler at one of the intermediate stations on the line. The fireless locomotive is thus charged with water capable of giving off a quantity of steam sufficient for a moderate journey. Of course the pressure of steam given off is at the first very great and gradually lessens; but the inconvenience which would arise from this constant change of pressure is overcome by the adoption of a reducing valve, by means of which the pressure of steam reaching the cylinders can be nicely regulated. These engines were tried and worked from Rueil to Port Marley, 6.51 miles, and from Port Marley to Marie de Roi, 2.15 miles; it is therefore evident that these engines are quite capable of covering journeys of length sufficient for tramway work, especially as the engine described draws a train of twenty tons."

A Country of Small Things.

Almost every variety of animal life in Japan inclines to the pigmy or diminutive order. The horses are small ponies, the native cattle are not much above half the weight of the Devon breed. The largest Japanese duck is small by comparison with the American wood-duck, our lightest variety of the species. Their geese are no larger than our mallards and canvas-backs. Their swine rate in size between the small chinas and the Guinea pig, and their men and women are considered large at the respective heights of five feet two inches and four feet ten inches. They are active, wiry and athletic, however, and can endure great hardships better than many weightier breeds.

HERE is an item which girls will do well to read carefully and reflect upon. A young lady in Elmira, N. DR. J. S. JEWELL, of Chicago, in writing upon the treatment of insane criminals in the current number of a journal devoted to the discussion of nervous and mental diseases, has the following very sensible words to say: "Whenever, in the case of murder or any other flagrant crime against society, the plea of insanity is set up and successfully maintained, then the penalty should be the incarceration of the criminal for life in a prison asylum. Under no circumstances should such a person be turned loose into society again after having manifested such dangerous tendencies. It is our hope that one of the results which may grow out of the event which has so shocked the nation may be the passage of simple, stringent, well-considered laws providing for the disposal in this way of all dangerous insane criminals. In this way only can society protect itself and justice considerately avoid blind and useless severity. If such a plan were adopted and rigorously carried into effect, the plea of insanity would be made more rarely than at present."

PRESIDENT ARTHUR.

He Takes the Oath of Office at Washington, and Delivers a Short Inaugural.

As the result of a conference between several of the highest Government officials, the oath of office was administered to President Arthur by Chief Justice Waite, in the marble room of the Capitol in Washington, noon of Thursday, Sept. 22. Among those present were ex-President Hayes, Senator Sherman, Rear Admiral Nichols, Gen. Grant and Hannibal Hamlin.

Within a few moments after taking the oath of office President Arthur loosened the upper button of his coat, took from the inside-pocket a small roll containing his address, which was written upon note paper, and proceeded to read his inaugural address, which is as follows:

"For the fourth time in the history of the republic its Chief Magistrate has been removed by death. All hearts are filled with grief and horror at the hideous crime which has darkened our land, and the memory of the murdered President, his protracted sufferings, his unyielding fortitude, the example and achievements of his life, and the pathos of his death, will forever illumine the pages of our history.

"For the fourth time the officer elected by the people, and ordained by the constitution to fill the vacancy so created, is called to assume the executive chair. The wisdom of our fathers, foreseeing even the most dire possibilities, made sure that the Government should never be imperiled because of the uncertainty of human life. Men may die, but the fabrics of our free institutions remain unshaken. No higher or more assuring proof could exist of the strength and permanency of popular government than the fact that, though the chosen of the people be stricken down, his constitutional successor is peacefully installed without shock or strain, except the sorrow which mourns the bereavement. All the noble aspirations of my lamented predecessor, which found expression in his life; the measures devised and suggested during his brief administration to correct abuses and enforce economy; to advance the prosperity and promote the general welfare; to insure domestic security, and maintain friendly and honorable relations with the nations of the earth, will be garnered in the hearts of the people, and it will be my earnest endeavor to profit, and to see that the nation shall profit, by his example and experience. Prosperity blesses our country; our fiscal policy, fixed by law, is well grounded and generally approved. No threatening issue mars our foreign intercourse, and the wisdom, integrity and thrift of our people may be trusted to continue undisturbed the present assured career of peace, fraternity and welfare. The gloom and anxiety which have enshrouded the country must make repose especially welcome now. No demand for speedy legislation has been heard; no adequate occasion is apparent for an unusual session of Congress. The constitution defines the functions and powers of the Executive as clearly as those of either of the other departments of the Government, and he must answer for the just exercise of the discretion it permits, and the performance of the duties it imposes. Summoned to these high duties and responsibilities, and profoundly conscious of their magnitude and gravity, I assume the trust imposed by the constitution, relying for aid on divine guidance, and the virtue, patriotism and intelligence of the American people."

The occasion will long be remembered as one of great historic interest. There were present one President taking the oath of office, two ex-Presidents, and an ex-Vice President among the spectators, while but a few feet away there was lying in state the remains of the late Chief Magistrate.

After the reading was over, which occupied less than five minutes, all the persons present advanced and shook hands with the President, and immediately the party mingled in general conversation.

All persons soon retired except the President and Cabinet, whereupon the doors were closed and they proceeded to hold their formal consultation.

The most important matter personally to the Cabinet officers was attended to without delay, and after some preliminaries each handed his resignation to the President. President Arthur gave no intimation as to the course he intended to pursue.

There was some discussion relative to the funeral arrangements. The Cabinet agreed that it would be best for the President to remain at the capital and not expose himself to the dangers of travel while his life only stood between a lawful head of the Government and possible confusion. In deference to this opinion the President decided not to accompany the funeral party to Cleveland.

The question of most importance to the public was that of a special session of the Senate, it having already been announced in the President's address that no extra session of Congress would be called. The propriety of convening the Senate was admitted by all the Cabinet, but a single opinion on the subject being expressed. It was agreed that it was an urgent necessity to have a President of the Senate as soon as possible, in order that the country might not be left without an executive head in case of the death of the President of the United States.

The new President, shortly after his formal induction into office, issued a proclamation designating Monday, Sept. 26—the day set apart for the burial of the lamented Garfield—as a day of humiliation and mourning, and recommending "all people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to render alike their tribute of sorrowful submission to the will of Almighty God, and to their reverence and love for the memory and character of our late Chief Magistrate."

A Young Speculator.

A farmer asked a boy what he would work for him for, one year. The farmer was close at a bargain, and the boy knew it.

Says the boy, "I will work for you if you will give me one grain of corn for the first week, two grains for the second, four for the third, and doubling each week until the fifty weeks or year is out."

"Good," said the farmer.

The boy began work, and took one grain for the first week, two for the second, four for the third, eight for the fourth, sixteen for the fifth, thirty-two for the sixth.

"Hold on," said the farmer "you are taking too many."

"Not at all," said the boy, "I am but carrying out the contract."

The farmer began to figure how many grains the boy would take in fifty-two weeks, and to his astonishment he found out he would be antitled to 1,456,593,257,469,808 grains. He could never pay it, and agreed to give him fair wages if he would let him off from the contract.

The Camel and the Needle's Eye.

The passage from the New Testament, "It is easier for a camel," etc., has perplexed many good men, who have read it literally. In Oriental cities there are in the large gates small and very low apertures, called metaphorically "needles' eyes," just as we talk of windows on shipboard as "bull's eyes." These entrances are too narrow for a camel to pass through them in the ordinary manner, or even if loaded. When a loaded camel has to pass through one of these entrances, it kneels down, its load is removed and then it shuffles through on its knees. "Yesterday," writes Lady Duff Gordon from Cairo, "I saw a camel go through the eye of a needle, that is, the low arched door of an inclosure. He must kneel, and bow his head, to creep through; and thus the rich man must humble himself."

Practical Knowledge.

The world little imagines how largely it is indebted to the laborious researches of scientific medical men for many of the most important truths relative to human health, happiness and life. As population increases, and the value of food is enhanced, the knowledge which chemistry has elicited is becoming more and more valuable in a practical point of view.

Some kinds of food are more nutritious than others, and if it should be found that articles which are cheapest have most nutriment and give the highest ability to labor, then knowledge becomes money to the poor. Tables vary, but some of the general results are as follows: One pound of rice, prepared for the table, gives 88 per cent. of nutriment, and, consequently, a relatively proportional ability to labor, compared with other articles of food. A pound of beef, costing 15 cents, gives only 26 per cent. of nutriment. According to these estimates, therefore, rice, as an article of food, is 100 per cent. cheaper, 100 per cent. more valuable to the common laborer than roast beef, yet countless numbers of the poor in the large cities strain a point daily to purchase beef at 15 cents a pound, when they could get a pound of rice for one-third of the amount, the rice, too, having three times as much nutriment as the beef, making a practical difference of 600 per cent., aside from the fact that boiled rice is three times easier of digestion than roast beef, the rice being digested in about one hour, roast beef requiring three hours and a half. There is meaning, then, in the reputed fact that two-fifths of the human family live on rice. We compile, therefore, the following tables for preservation, as being practically and permanently useful. All the economist requires is to compare the price of a pound of food with the amount of nutriment which it affords:

Kind of Food.	Mode of Preparation.	Percentage of Nutriment.
Oils	raw	96
Peas	boiled	93

How Black's Hair Is Black.

Judge Jere Black has long worn a black wig. Having lately donned a new one, which looks still darker, and meeting Senator Bayard, of Delaware, the latter accosted him with, "Why Black, how young you look; you are not so gray as I am, and you must be twenty years older." "Humph," said the Judge, "good reason; your hair comes by descent, and I got mine by purchase."

WHEN the Emperor of Russia yawns, those about him look in awe upon the wonderful Czar-chasm which he displays.

"BALL this evening, dear?" inquired Desdemona of Othello, when she saw him loading up his old navy revolver. "No, not this evening, love, s'm' other evening," he replied, as he reached for the pillow and wedged it down her œsophagus.—Shakespeare.

Prof. Harris' Radical Cure

FOR
NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box [No. 2] for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 22.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2,'79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

The Oriole.

BUSY PREPARATIONS, ENGAGEMENT OF THE FAMOUS GILMORE, MARINE AND OTHER BANDS. REMARKABLY BRILLIANT SPECTACLE PROMISED.

Every man, woman and child in Baltimore appears to be growing interested in the Oriole, and anxious to contribute something toward making it the most memorable success ever known in the country. That it will be, now passes without argument. The Oriole will be incomparably finer in every way than last year's celebration, and to the general public will have more interest in an hour than that had in a day. Not but what the Sesqui-Centennial was a perfect and an unparalleled success, but it was to a certain extent a local glorification of deep interest to Baltimoreans and of more or less attractiveness to strangers. On the other hand the Mardi Gras Pageant will possess remarkable attraction for all the guests as well as the citizens. Its features will be of a general character and the effects produced will be brilliant and dazzling in the extreme. There will be fully three miles of the most beautiful tableaux of majestic proportions and exquisite construction. The subjects portrayed will not be disclosed until the night of the pageant, lending a mystic character to it and increasing the interest. Those who have never witnessed a Mardi Gras can form no conception of its splendor and beauty. The novelty of having it under hundreds of electric lights will greatly enhance the effect and carry the beholder to the fullest realization of the most vivid imagination of the wonders of the Arabian Nights. The musical adjuncts to the pageant promise of themselves to be worth a journey to hear.

At the head of the pageant will be the famous Gilmore's band from New York in magnificent uniform and numbering sixty-five of the best musicians of the metropolis. The celebrated Marine band, of Washington, has also been engaged, as have all the Baltimore bands, and those of adjacent cities. In addition to take part in the Oriole pageant, Gilmore's band will give a grand open air concert on Wednesday afternoon, and play for the mask ball and Carnival in the evening. What, with the reception to the French visitors and the great military, fire and civic parade, Monday, the 10th; the Mardi Gras, Tuesday, the 11th; and the Carnival and other features on Wednesday, the 12; the Baltimore Oriole will certainly eclipse any similar celebration known in the United States. The B. & O. R. R. has not only made a rate of one half fare from all stations on its main line, divisions and branches, but is making extensive preparations to afford every accommodation for all who attend.

SKILL IN THE WORKSHOP.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. Holloway's Pills.

Never dispair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's Pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. Read the advertisement elsewhere.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HAYDOCK surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. Boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. HOLLOWAY & CO., N. Y.

How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large porportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SODID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

For sale by all Jewelers. Ask for Illustrated Catalogue, and to see warrant.

W. L. BRAUN.

Eloquent Tributes.

The following selections, taken at random from our exchanges, are worth preserving, not only for their literary merit, but as showing the universal sorrow over the untimely death of the president. Representing as these selections do, men of both political parties, they are all the more interesting, as showing the utter obliteration of all party lines in all that regards this sad affair. Any one not acquainted with the political bias of the papers credited, would never be able to tell the one from the other. The list could be greatly extended, but we have room for only these, and they were taken from those nearest at hand. We would gladly make the list include all our exchanges, but for the reason just stated. We omit the papers of this county, for we suppose our readers will most likely see these in the original papers:

Elected by the vote of the American people in a campaign of singular bitterness, his mildness, his firmness, his honesty of purpose quickly won the respect of those who were politically his opponents. What his career might have been is the subject of useless conjecture. We know, from the past, that it would have been like the path of the just, "Shining brighter, unto the perfect day." He is dead. But while the American language is spoken by men breathing the air of American freedom his name will be held in pleasant memory. Many things are greater than life; if any thing be greater than death it is the memory of a life sacrified for a great principle; and the corpse of the murdered president is wreathed with the crown of a civic martyr.—[Michigan City Dispatch.

The American people are bowed down with grief, while every heart is sad and tears dim the eyes of the multitude. It is not the first, though the saddest occasion of the kind in the history of our country. With the fortitude of a warrior, the dignity of a conqueror and the innocence of an infant he endured all, even unto the end. All past estrangements have been obliterated and partizan feelings fled like the morning dew from the sunshine, and the American people all, in a land where birth is nothing, mourn him as a king, a hero, a conqueror and a christian. —[Churubusco Herald.

Twice has the assassin filled our nation with grief. Twice the land of the free has been called upon to mourn for its chief magistrate by the assassin's bullet. A great calamity has befallen us, lamentable in its nature. The deed is in itself a terrible thing to contemplate. Fifty million people unite in condemning the murderer. Democrat and republican, with the same sincerity of feeling for our country's good, with the same deep-seated interest in the perpetuation of state and nation alike, unite in the hope that the reins of government have fallen in good hands; that with Heaven's help the present administration may prosper as never an administration prospered.—[Columbia City Post.

In no city in all this land has the news of President Garfield's death met with more unfeigned sorrow and regret than in Fort Wayne, a city boasting of a democratic majority of 1,500 and the county seat of the banner democratic county of the state. The News cannot let this opportunity pass without calling attention to the loyal spirit displayed by men of all shades of political belief in mourning over the death of the president of all the people—and not of a party or a faction. In this is the hope of our country. To day we have seen a solid democratic council in special session, presenting their deep regret at the death of a republican president. We have seen a democratic mayor, democratic courts, democratic commissioners and democratic lawyers mingling their sorrow with their republican neighbors and fellow-citizens at the death of a man whom they opposed at the polls. All honor, say we, to the democracy of Fort Wayne.—[Fort Wayne News.

Though less agitated than had the assasin's bullet been suddenly effective, the fifty millions of people who claimed him equally as their president are not less sorrowful. Affliction, though tempered by composure, is not less deep. On the second of July the merits of our president were weighed by many in scales of prejudice. After eighty days of dreadful distress, sympathy has come to be the only passion, and the heart-throbs of the whole nation are as one.—[Porter County Vidette.

The announcement of the death of President Garfield will no doubt be received with more unfeigned sorrow and sincere sympathy than was ever manifested on the demise of any other man in the history of the world.—[Goshen Democrat.

We have no heart to write a word about the tragic "taking off" of our loved president, James A. Garfield. We feel too sad over the result, and so much has been said that is better than any thing the editor of the Indianian could say, that we refrain from saying any thing more than that in our heart of hearts, we sincerely mourn the loss of one whose past life has been such a bright example to the struggling youth of this country, and whose future promised to make so brilliant a page in its history.—[Indianian.

In Albion, upon the receipt of the sad news, the court house and nearly all business houses and offices, and a large number of private dwellings, were draped in mourning, and for a half hour at noon the several church and court house bells were tolled. Democrats and republicans alike joined in these manifestations of sorrow, illustrating another saying of the dead president, that "the flowers that bloom over the garden walk of party politics are the sweetest and most fragrant that bloom in the gardens of this world."—]Albion New Era.

The announcement came late Monday night that "President Garfield is dead!" Nevertheless, the announcement has cast a deep gloom of sadness throughout the length and breadth of our land. The news flashed like lightning all over the country, and by sunrise yesterday morning the sad, solemn words were on the lips of every citizen, and sorrow depicted in his countenance. Bells were tolled in all the cities, towns and villages. Business houses and public buildings were draped in mourning and signs of heartfelt grief, were seen on every hand. —[Angola Herald.

James Abram Garfield, president of the United States, has at last succumbed to the fell destroyer, death, with, whom he had so tenaciously contended for about two thousand consecutive hours, a portion of which time the grim monster was so driven to the wall as to inspire the hope that the stricken president would eventually wear him out; but, alas! the most sanguine hopes of the millions were doomed to disappointment, and now a nation is bathed in tears as it never was before. In fact a world weeps as it never wept before. But in the language of our late beloved ruler who now lies dead, "God reigns and the government at Washington still lives."—[Columbia City Commercial.

To-day there is a north, a south, an east and a west, but they are one and inseparable. The tolling of the bells is heard among the palmettos and the pines of the Carolinas, as well as on the prairies of Illinois or among the mountains of New England. In every city, town and hamlet in the land the emblems of mourning and sorrow are seen. Flags draped and hanging at half-mast flutter in the soft September breezes that blow over every state from Maine to California and from Minnesota to Texas. His untimely fate is mourned alike by the rich and the poor, the learned and the ignorant, and his memory will be cherished by generations yet unborn.— Steuben Republican.

A mighty people mourn the great calamity. From Elberon to the remotest outposts of civilization there is grief. Prayers have been offered, and if they shall have the effect of subduing men's passions and of clothing all the people in their right mind, they will not have been unavailing. In the presence of the calamity, we can but repeat:

> "What shadows we are, and > What shadows we pursue," and after paying fitting tributes to the memory of the dead, press forward to the fulfillment of our duties, the high importance of which death does not modify.—[Ligonier Banner.

"How are You, My old Friend?"

Asked a bright looking man. "Oh! I feel miserable; I'm billious and can't eat, and my back is so lame I can't work." "Why in the world don't you take Kidney-Wort? that's what I take when I'm out of sorts, and it always keeps me in perfect tune. My doctor recommends it for all such troubles." Kidney-Wort is the sure cure for biliousness and constipation. Don't fail to try it.—[Long Branch News.

Obituary.

DIED.—September 24, 1881, at Waterloo, DeKalb county, Indiana, at the residence of his son-in-law and daughter, Dr. J. U. and Mrs. Sarah S. Winslow, Col. John Nelson Sloane, aged eighty-five years, nine months and eighteen days.

And so has joined that innumerable throng, another of the patriots of the west, and one of those who have so largely contributed to its development.

Col. Sloane was born at Bridgewater, Oneida county, New York, Dec. 6th, 1795. At the age of twenty-one, inspired by that feeling of enterprise for which he was always conspicuous, he left his native county in June, 1816, on horseback for the then far off wilds of Ohio. After a tedious and not unadventurous journey, he arrived at Abbott's Corners, the then county seat of the old county of Huron, in the state of Ohio, in August, and at the time when the first session of court in that county was being held. Remaining there several weeks, he visited among other points, Bloomingville, at that time the most flourishing town in that section of the state. He also visited Ogontz, the site of the present city of Sandusky, then only an Indian village. The winter of 1816 he taught school in the village of New Haven, Huron county, Ohio, and the same year was induced to engage with Col. Hector Kilbourne in the building up of a town near Columbus, Ohio. In 1818 he was married at Lyme, then Strong's Ridge, Huron county, Ohio, to Cynthia Strong, who died at Waterloo in February, 1873. In 1821, Col. Sloane located at Sandusky, Ohio, where he resided until 1857. During his entire residence in Sandusky, with characteristic energy he always took a leading part in all public improvements. Liberal with his time and money, he entered actively into every movement tending to the advancement of the town, and much of its present prosperity is due to his efforts at this time. In the establishment and opening of the Columbus turnpike, which helped to make Sandusky at an early day an important point of of shipment, he was an efficient factor. In private enterprise he was untiring, and made many extensive, lasting, and for the time valuable improvements. He was largely interested in real estate, and in company with Messrs. Elutherus Cooke and Mason Converse, built the first brick business block in the city, and himself completed and occupied the first large stone residence. He was extensively engaged in mercantile pursuits, at which he accumulated for those days a fortune, and in this connection became interested in the lake commerce, being one of the few who foresaw the great importance this means of communication was to become, and foretold its great development. In 1831 he built and launched at Sandusky the, at that date, large two-masted vessel, "Platina," commanded and in part owned by Capt. T. C. McGee, who is still living—a prominent citizen of Sandusky. Col. Sloane contributed liberally to the building of the old Mad River railroad, an enterprise considered of great moment and national interest. At the ceremonies attending the commencement of said road, July 4th, 1833, at Sandusky, Col S. was marshal of the day.

Before leaving New York state, he had commenced the study of law, but his change of location caused a change in his plans, but in 1840 he completed his course and was admitted to the bar of Ohio, of which he proved himself a valuable member, and acquired considerable prominence. In 1839 he was elected mayor of Sandusky, and held the office three successive terms. He was also justice of the peace during at least part of that time. He was among those who labored efficiently for the setting off of Erie county from Huron, and the location of the county seat at Sandusky. He was one of the few members who organized Grace Church Parish at Sandusky, and was always a vestryman and warden of the same while a resident there, and for years has been a professor of religion. On coming to Waterloo and not finding his church home, he united with the Methodist Episcopal church of Waterloo, of which he was a devoted member. Three years since, it was his constant practice for many months to read the entire New Testament each week; also the Book of Psalms, which was bound with his copy. He discontinued this gradually on account of failing eye-sight and growing infirmities.

He was an honored member of the fraternity of Free Masons. He was a Royal Arch Mason. He was grand lecturer for the state of Ohio, and at one time was offered a large salary for those days, to travel and lecture. After leaving Sandusky, he accepted a position under the government, which he held for years, residing at Washington, D. C. Failing health and cataract forming on each eye, compelled him to resign. Soon after himself and wife removed to Waterloo, where they remained until their death.

FARM NOTES.

The roots of apple trees have been found to extend twenty-six feet or more.

An agreeable flavor in cattle food stimulates appetite and probably promotes digestion.

Short fine wool contains the largest proportion of fat. Pure wool hair contains about sixteen per cent. of nitrogen.

Such has been the recent damage to the British crops that the current wheat deficiency in the United Kingdom is estimated at 125,000,000 bushels.

The American wheat acreage is spreading in advance of the rate of increase in population, hence larger quantities will be available year by year for export.

Geese are easily kept; grass and water form their chief requirements. These, with a fair supply of corn, oats and boiled potatoes, make up their bill of fare.

It has been proved by experiments that if young turkeys be fed on soft food mixed with milk instead of water much superior and more tender meat will be produced.

The digestibility of fodder plants is largely determined by their age. All the constituents of a young plant are more digestible than in the same plant of greater age.

In the fattening of wethers to finish as shearlings, English breeders state that the Cotswold and Leicester grades can be made up to 200 pounds, the Oxford Downs, to 180 pounds, and the Southdown grades to 160 pounds, live weight.

The poison of a sting from bee, wasp or hornet may be almost instantly neutralized by the application of a little liquid ammonia, and it is said that the poison and sting may be forced out by pressing the barrel of a small key firmly for a minute over the wound. No pain or swelling will result.

The Dublin Farmer claims that a full feed of hay to horses, to follow concentrated food, is wasteful, and crowds the latter out of the stomach before proper digestion occurs. This authority claims that the hay should be fed first to avoid the above-mentioned trouble. A hearty drink of water upon a full stomach also operates to push its contents into the intestines before there is proper digestion.

Prof. Arnold states that the presence of the pure oxygen at a moderate temperature retards the souring of milk and has a beneficial effect upon the flavor and keeping of butter. In a free current of air oxygen consumes what is called "milk odor," but in confinement has a very deleterious effect. In the manufacture of cheese experiments had shown that warm air ripens the cheese more quickly than cold air, and produces a more intense odor.

Almost as much care is taken to dry hay in Norway as fish; for the weather has its vicissitudes, and the winter is long and wearisome to man and beast. Hay is hung up to dry. Stakes are set about three feet high, and pins inserted, upon which slender poles are laid. The poles are so arranged that when grass is placed upon them they shed rain. The sun and wind soon do the making, aided by stalwart females, employed in turning and handling the hay.

An Iowa farmer gives his method for raising potatoes as follows: "Plant them in good rich soil, close to the house or barnyard where the chickens run, the more chickens the better; hoe them as soon as they are out of the ground, then plow them at least once a week till they are in bloom. The chickens will keep the bugs off if the latter are not too numerous. If there are more bugs than the chickens can consume knock them off the vines just before the plow and plow them under every day till they disappear. In this way I have raised plenty, while my neighbor's crops were all destroyed."

The value of a bulky food, as hay or straw, is far greater when given to a ruminant animal than when consumed by a horse or pig. Concentrated, easily digested foods, as grain and oilcake, have clearly a value above their composition when added to a poor and bulky food, as straw chaff, or to a watery food like turnips, because they are the means of raising the diet to a point at which the animal will thrive. On the other hand, roots and green fodder, even when watery and poor in composition, may have a considerable effect when added in moderate proportion to dry food.

In parts of Norway and Sweden, where during the summer there is almost continuous daylight, crops of barley are grown with only from six to eight weeks intervening from seed-time to harvest. After acclimatization many garden flowers increase in size and depth of color, there is a prevailing tinge of red in the plants of the fields, the aroma of fruits is increased and their color well developed, but they are deficient in sweetness. The development of essential oils in certain plants is greater than in the same plants grown in other latitudes. It is an established fact that light bears the same relation to aroma as heat does to sweetness.

A practical gardener makes the following important statement: "Last year as a test of a frequent practice among growers of melons and squashes, I pinched the ends of the long main shoots of the melons, squashes and cucumbers, and left some to run at their own will. One squash plant sent out a single stem reaching more than forty feet, but did not bear any fruit. Another plant was pinched until it formed a compact mass of intermingling side shoots and main branches eight feet square, and it bore sixteen squashes. The present year a musk-melon plant thus pinched in covers the space allotted to it, and it has set twenty-three specimens of fruit, the most of which have been pinched off. The pinching causes many lateral branches, which latter produce the female or fertile blossoms, while the main vines produce only the male blossoms. The difference in favor of the yield of an acre of melons treated by this pinching process may easily amount to 100 barrels."

Overworked Farmers.—We once heard a good farmer say that when he got behind with his work so that it seemed as though he could not catch up again, he made it a practice to leave everything for a couple of days and take a recreation. When he returned again, he said, work seemed less perplexing, and it progressed seemingly much faster than before. The plan would perhaps seem ridiculous to many, and certain to occasion loss if not entire failure, yet from experience we are inclined to credit the plan with favor. What is true of farmers in respect to overwork is also true of persons in other fields of labor. Nearly all of us remember with what renewed energy and strength we began our work on Monday morning after our Sabbath's rest, which proves the value of needed recreation. We would advise farmers who can possibly do so to devote a day or two to recreation of some sort before beginning the heavy work of spring, summer and fall. Take a jaunt to some relative's or friend's in another locality, or make a short tour of observation to some large city, or some thriving farming district and thereby learn some valuable lessons and experiences.—Elmira Free Press.

The Farm Kitchen.—The farm kitchen should be the pivotal part of the house. The farmer desiring a convenient dwelling should first plan out the kitchen and then add the rest of the house to it. It should be roomy; the ceiling should be high; the windows long and narrow rather than short and broad, because the high window is the best ventilator and will furnish an escape for the heated air and the odors from the cooking stove or range, while the narrow window admits sufficient light without letting in the glaring sunshine too plentifully. Outside, the windows should be shaded with blinds. The kitchen should be on the northeast corner of the house—the coolest part—which is convenient in the summer and unobjectionable in the winter, because it is easy to warm a room so exposed in the winter, while it is impossible to make a room cool in summer that is exposed to the noonday sun and has a fire in it. The kitchen, too, should be protected by a summer attachment in which the cooking and washing may be done. The windows of this place may be taken out in summer and closed only by blinds, and in the winter this room will serve as a storage room for fuel and for protecting the kitchen from the storms and blasts and drifting snows. The pump may also be put in this outer room. The kitchen windows and doors should be protected by screens of mosquito netting to keep out the flies and yet admit the air. A broad porch over the east side of the kitchen will be a further protection against the sun up to noon, and if the kitchen is recessed or thrown back a few feet from the rest of the house the main entrance may be placed here, leaving a small vestibule in which the front kitchen doorway opens. Or this might be made the rear door of a broad hall or passage through the house. But at this time it is not our object to discuss the farm-house at further length than in reference to the kitchen, which at this season is of more than ordinary interest to the farm housewife.—H. Stewart in New York Times.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

[From the Detroit Free Press Household.]

Corn Bread.—One pint of buttermilk, two eggs, one pint of Indian meal, two tablespoonfuls melted butter, a little salt and two teaspoonfuls soda.

Indian Loaf.—One pint corn meal, one pint flour, one pint buttermilk, one tea cup molasses, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful salt; bake slowly just two hours.

Yeast.—Six or eight good sized potatoes, grated or boiled; one-half cup sugar; one-half cup salt; handful of hops steeped; cup of seed yeast, and two quarts of boiling water.

Graham Crackers.—One-half cup butter; one-half cup sugar; four eggs; one cup of the white flour; one-quarter teaspoonful soda; enough Graham flour to roll out. These are very nice to eat with berries.

Corn Bread, No. 2.—Two eggs well beaten, one cup sugar, half cup butter, one cup sweet milk, half cup wheat flour, one and a half cups corn meal, two teaspoonfuls of any good baking powder.

Cream of Tartar Drink.—Two spoonfuls of cream of tartar, the grated rind of a lemon, half a cup of loaf sugar and one pint of boiling water. This is a good summer drink for invalids, and is cleansing to the blood.

Coffee Cake.—Bake two sponge cakes and let them cool. Take two and a half cups of milk, one egg, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two cups of flour; boil until it thickens; flavor with very strong coffee; place between the cakes, and frost the top.

Everton Taffy.—Three pounds of best brown sugar, boil with one and one-half pints of water until the candy hardens in cold water. Then add one-half pound of fresh butter, which softens the candy; boil candy again until it hardens, flavor with lemon and pour on trays.

Honey Cake.—One quart strained honey, half pint soda, half pint melted butter, one teaspoonful sugar dissolved in half cup warm water, half nutmeg and teaspoonful ginger. Mix these ingredients and then work in flour to roll. Cut in thin cakes and bake on buttered tins in a quick oven.

Whipped Cream Sauce.—Mix a plateful of whipped cream (flavored with vanilla,) the beaten whites of two eggs and pulverized sugar to taste, all together; pile a bank of this mixture in the center of a platter and form a circle of little fruit puddings (steamed in cups) around it, or it is nice for corn starch, blanc manges, etc.

Lemon Snow Jelly.—Dissolve one box of Cox's gelatine in nearly a quart of boiling water, then add the juice of five lemons and enough of sugar to sweeten to taste; strain and set aside until nearly cool. Beat the whites of five eggs and whip into the jelly; turn into a dish and let it set until cold. After it becomes solid decorate with pieces of red jelly.

Marble Cake.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three and a half cups of flour, three eggs, one cup of milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Dark Part—Take two tablespoonfuls of molasses, one teaspoonful of ground cloves, one of cinnamon and one of nutmeg. Put this in a teacup of the above mixture, and then pour the white and dark into the pan in alternate layers.

Sago Pudding.—One quart rich, sweet milk, four tablespoonfuls of sago, four eggs, one cup sugar, and flavoring; soak sago over night in water; then beat yolks of eggs, sugar and sago together; add milk and flavoring; set a basin in the steamer, pour in the mixture and steam one hour; beat whites with one tablespoonful of sugar to a stiff froth; spread over pudding and brown in oven five minutes; stir while steaming or the sago will settle to the bottom.

The Nocturnal Cow.

Tears, mad tears, and heated words, follow in her wake. Sorrow and a deep-settled melancholy come down upon the faces of the female members of the household when they arise and, as is their wont, go forth to look upon the beauties of nature, and find that its fairest feature have been despoiled. There is nothing peculiar about the nocturnal cow. She is like her sisters in mind and habits. She appears to have a good countenance, a kind eye, and an easy conscience, but in reality she is as sly as a fox, and in the after part of the night she is as restless and sleepless as the principle of evil itself. She is no country Susan. She lives in town and harbors upon the outskirts, but always remains in easy access to gates, for which she manifests remarkable familiarity. She is a brute of a cultivated eye and a refined stomach. She selects the yards where the grass is green, the flowers are blooming, and the gardens are in a fine state of cultivation. She sweetly sleeps in the forepart of the night. Then in the small still hours of the morning she gets up and "meanders" forth. She is never in a hurry, and the passer-by would never mistrust that she was bent on any mission of destruction. She travels slowly but never misses any place. She goes all around before daylight, and will occasionally find time to lie down in yards for a nap. She never wastes any time in looking up weak places in yard fences. She is a sagacious animal, and makes directly for the front gate. She goes as unerringly to it as a boy does to a watermelon patch. It makes no difference about the kind of latch on the gate. She has a combination arrangement, furnished her by nature, which will open the most complicated gate-fastener devised. When she enters the yard, she slips around to the garden, tangles herself up in the tomato bed, walks down the bean row, bites off the promising cabbage heads, and makes a promiscuous tread over all parts of the vegetable plat. She returns to the front yards and delight herself with the flowers. She has a taste for the beautiful, and consumes whatever is most idolized by the family. Having completed her work of havoc with the useful and the beautiful, she slowly retires, resolved to come again. The morning dawns and the mothers come forth to get breakfast. When it is ready, the daughters arrive on the scene. By this time the "old man," if he has not too much rheumatism aboard, has found out that the "cow has been in the yard." She has left traces behind, but she has silently fled and joined the lowing herds in remote parts of the city, and is there chewing her cud and breathing forth the perfume of flowers and garden sass. There is nothing left for the family to do but to mourn and get mad.—Indianapolis Herald.

Losses in the Slavery War.

From the official reports of the War Department the following facts are taken: 1. The aggregate of troops furnished for all periods of service—from three months to three years' time—was 2,859,132; reduced to a uniform three years' standard, the whole number of troops amounted to 2,320,272. The number killed in battle, according to the report of the Provost Marshal General in 1866, was 61,362. The number of those who died of wounds was 34,727; died of disease, 183,287; total died, 279,376; total deserted, 199,105. The Adjutant General of the rebel army, in a statement made since the close of the war, estimated that the entire available rebel force capable of active service at 600,000; of this number not more than 400,000 were enrolled at any one time, and the rebel States had never in the field at once more than 200,000 men. This is the statement made by Carter. The number of rebel soldiers who died of wounds or disease, was 133,821, a statement which in the nature of the case is but partial; and the deserters numbered 104,428, also a partial statement. The great struggle between General Grant and General Lee in the Wilderness was attended by immense losses to the Union forces and to the rebels. For the particulars of this sanguinary conflict the best histories should be consulted, as figures give but an imperfect idea of the contest, and the losses inflicted.

Deadly Dust.

Dr. Leidy, of Philadelphia, believes that the dust of our cities is a serious source of disease. "When we reflect," he says, "that this is the dried and pulverized dirt and filth of our streets, derived from all kinds of refuse matter, the dangerous qualities may be suspected, if they are not clearly obvious. Conveyed by the winds, it is diffused everywhere, and settles upon and adheres to everything. We inhale it, drink it and eat it with our food. A speck of mud on our bread excites disgust, but who minds the same thing when it is nothing but a little dust? If our food just brought from the market or provision store is examined with a microscope, it is found to teem with particles of dust, consisting of fine sand, bits of hay, straw, filaments of cotton from old paper and rags, wood fiber, hair and scurf scales of man and beast, starch grains, spores, etc. Recent investigations render it probable that dust contains the germs of decomposition, gangrene and contagious diseases."

Stinking Pride.

Some of the upstarts of to-day can not carry a package. The late Chief-Justice Marshall, the first biographer of Washington, was once in market in Washington, when an insurance agent, with a waxed mustache, was pricing a turkey.

"I'd buy it," he said, "but I've no way of carrying it home."

"How much will you give?" said the Chief-Justice.

"Twenty-five cents," was the reply.

"Give me an order to your wife, then, for the money," replied the Chief-Justice, whom the agent did not know. The man holding the highest position in the United States carried home the turkey and got the twenty-five cents from the agent's wife, who knew the Chief-Justice, and was horrified at the lesson her airy husband had received.

Rube Hoffenstein's Horse.

"New Orleans will be a great blace, Misder Hoffenstein," said Herman, "van de railroads vill be running here from the Vest and oder parts uf de gountry, von't it?"

"Herman, don't dalk to me aboud de railroads," replied Hoffenstein, "it makes me dink uf de vay I haf been swindled by dem. My gr-r-acious, Herman, dink how I vas swindled by de railroad, de infernal monopoly; but I got even mit dem anyvay. How Forest Fires Start.

Investigations made in Canada and Michigan show that the destructive forest fires generally start and spread in the branches and foliage of trees that are left on the ground by the lumbermen. The resinous boughs of the pine, hemlock, spruce and fir will, when dry, kindle with the touch of a spark, and produce a heat so intense as to give a fire great headway. It will then dry the wood in living trees to such an extent that they will burn readily. After a forest fire has been raging for considerable time it heats the air that moves before it, so that it prepares the trees through which it passes to feed the advancing flames. A fire once under headway will generally continue in its course till an extensive clearing or a body of water is reached.

It is estimated that there are 33,673 miles of steel rails in the United States which have cost $184,000,000.

A LONE MAN AND WOMAN.

The Late President and His Noble Wife—Their Reverence for the Homely, Old-Fashioned Virtues.

In reflecting upon the death of the late President Garfield, says the Chicago Tribune, there is one thought that comes uppermost in the mind, and it takes the form of the question, What compensation is there in this great bereavement?—a bereavement so overwhelming, so far-reaching in its sad influences that every man feels not only that the country has lost its Chief Magistrate when it most needed him, but that the loss is a personal one. It is as if death had entered into each home.

Though we may not hope to fathom the purpose of Jehovah in this mysterious visitation, it is clearly within human possibility to recognize some of its compensations, and among them stands out conspicuously the personal character of the President and his devoted helpmate, and the influence for good which such lofty lights of manhood and womanhood must have upon the American people. Gen. Garfield served the country patriotically upon the battlefield and in her legislative halls, but he left no richer legacy to it than his elevated manhood, his spotless character, his devotion to his home, which was to him the most sacred spot on earth, his reverence for the homely, old-fashioned virtues, his filial tenderness for his mother, his chivalrous devotion to his wife, who to him was the one woman above all women, his companionship with his children, his genial and open-hearted comradeship with men. In these latter days these qualities are fast going out of fashion. It has come to be deemed out of style to honor an old-fashioned mother with the place of honor and reverence. It has come to be out of style for men to hold their wives as above other women and show them chivalrous attention. It has come to be out of style to make the home the dearest, happiest and sweetest place on earth and to carry its homely influences into every station. It was time, therefore, that the old-fashioned virtues should be asserted, and what better medium for their exhibition or for their example than in the person of the Chief Magistrate of the American people. The home is the safeguard of American liberty, and when Gen. Garfield took to Washington all the influences of his Mentor home, and placed them, like a light upon a hill, where they could be seen of every one, liberty needed no other assurance that she was safe in his hands.

Mrs. Garfield goes back without her companion to her quiet country home, which she was so reluctant to leave, a sorrowing woman, sanctified by grief, to bear her burden alone, though the sympathy of thousands of loving hearts will go with her to that quiet retreat from the world. Grateful as this sympathy must be, it can make no compensation for the severance of so close a companionship. Time may temper the loss and God's blessing may enrich her life, but the home which they made together, which they loved so dearly, which was so beautiful and attractive in its simplicity by reason of the love which blessed it, can never again be the home it used to be, for the master has gone, and to her who held him dear as above all other men there remain only associations and memories. Called from this home to take the position of the first lady of the land, this quiet, plain and unpretentious little woman filled it with all the grace and dignity of a Queen, and was not ashamed to bring to it all the old-fashioned virtues of the Mentor home. Home was still the dearest spot to her; nor were its simplicity, its love or any of its precious influences clouded by her brilliant surroundings. There was no ambition so potent with her as loyalty to her husband. There was no duty so pressing as devotion to her children. There was no purpose so near to her as the determination to show American women that home was the dearest spot. She stood by her husband's side, his peer in loftiness of character, in scholarship, in personal dignity, in mental and moral worth, in all these old-fashioned virtues now so much out of style. From the day she entered the White House she was devoted to sorrow. Smitten down and brought to the door of death, her husband knew no duty so pressing as devotion to his companion, and when he was smitten down by the assassin's bullet she returned that devotion, not only with love and tenderness, but with a patience, and courage, and heroism that never ceased until he had closed his eyes in their last sleep. Her work is now done, like his. He has been called to a higher sphere; she remains here for a time to go on with the burden of life, then to rejoin him. Is there nothing in her example that commends it to American women? Is there nothing in his example that commends it to American men? Is there nothing in the example of this manly and womanly pair, devoted to each other, clinging to home as the best place on earth, not ashamed of its homely virtues, and, better than all else, God-loving and God-fearing, that commends them to the entire people as the noblest types of American manhood and womanhood this country has yet produced? In these days of public and private immorality, when literature and art are suborned in the interests of social impurity under the guise of social æstheticism; when social crimes are condoned; when the stage can give us nothing that is not based on marital infidelity and mistresses usurp the places of wives; when it has become the fashion to sniff at virtue and make sport of family affection; when loyalty to woman is sneered at and loyalty to God is not scientific, it was time that an example of the beneficence of love, and the sanctity of home, and the quiet power of honesty, virtue, and manly and womanly dignity should be shown to the whole people. How resplendently it shines in the midst of the fripperies, frivolities, sensualities, and all the twaddle and sham of life is shown by the instinctive turning of the American people with personal pride and love to James and Lucretia Garfield, the big-hearted, honest-souled, loving man, the sweet, refined, warm-hearted, loving farmer's daughter, at whose feet Kings and Queens have personally come and laid their tributes of sympathy. The man is dead, but he has left his manliness as a legacy to the American people, and this is one compensation for their great loss.

A Fool Once More.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it only cost me two dollars. Such folly pays."—H. W., Detroit, Mich.—Free Press.

A BOER MARKSMAN.

Shouldering the Rifle and Showing How Majuba Hill Was Won and Bottles Smashed.

[Buffalo River Correspondence London Morning Post.]

I had a long conversation with a very intelligent specimen of a Boer, who forms in Newcastle one of the guard that accompanies the Boer leaders attending on the Commission. He spent the afternoon in my camp, and gave me a rehearsal of the different modes of fighting among the Boers. First of all he began trying his hand by shooting at bottles, distant 100 yards, with a fifteen Winchester repeater which I lent him for the purpose. With this weapon, however, he failed to accomplish any decided success, the bullets falling close all round, but the bottles remained untouched.

"I cannot shoot with your rifle," he observed, "but give me a Martini-Henry and I will pick off two bottles at 200 yards." I sent up to the camp for a Martini-Henry carbine, which the Boer laid hold of with a great deal more apparent confidence, and the first two shots verified his boast, for the bottles were immediately shivered to atoms. He next proceeded to show me the Boer mode of shooting from behind rocks and stones. "The great mistake your soldiers made," he observed, "was to aim over the stone at the enemy, but we always fire round the corner." Throwing himself flat on the ground, he proceeded to put this remark into practice, and dragging himself lithely along, peered cautiously round the right-hand corner of a low stone that only just concealed his form from sight of the supposed enemy. Removing his hat, he raised it slowly aloft on the top of his ramrod and maneuvred it so as to cause it to have the appearance of a man's head cautiously taking note of the enemy. At this hat an English soldier is supposed to have taken a pot shot, when the Boer suddenly let it fall, and, bringing his body round the corner, took steady aim and fired at a black bottle some 150 yards distant, which in another moment was smashed to atoms.

Another method of shooting on horseback he showed me in a brilliant and effective manner. Mounting his horse and uttering a loud cry, he sent it galloping up a hill as hard as it could go. Suddenly, without a word of warning, the left foot was pressed to the stirrup, the right leg thrown backward over the saddle, the man was on his feet, and the horse stopped instantaneously and as if spell-bound. Standing erect, the Boer aimed cooly at a distant bottle and knocked it over, then springing into the saddle he executed the same maneuvre in two opposite directions with signal and unerring aim and effect. This man was one of 180 who first stormed and took the Majuba Heights. He says that Joubert's only words were: "Fellows, take that hill!" and they hastened to obey. The reason why so few men advanced to the attack was because Joubert anticipated and made sure that the English would endeavor simultaneously to take the Nek, as well as surprise them on their left, and he retained men to defend the positions mentioned. Finding, however, his fears were groundless, he dispatched fresh men to the assistance of their comrades, but by the time they arrived the Majuba Hill had been taken. The Ninety-second, he informed me, were the first they encountered, and this regiment fought stoutly, but were driven back on to the plateau toward the Fifty-eigth. Both bravely defended the position until Colley fell, when panic, he affirms, seized our men. The whole scene was, however, so enveloped in smoke that he could make no accurate note of anything, and confusion prevailed everywhere. Sir George Colley he declares to have been shot while in the act of tying a white handkerchief to a ramrod. The Boers did not know at the time that this personage was Sir George. This is one of the few Boer versions of the Majuba fight that I have heard from men who actually took part in the first advance to storm the plateau. Each tale tallies with the other, and I am inclined to think it truthfully told.

Stuffing Her Dog.

Mrs. Carlyle had a little pet lap-dog, named Nero, of which she was very fond. Carlyle used to take Nero out with him for a run every night when he went for his 11 o'clock walk, and I often noticed, when I have walked with him, how carefully he looked after his little charge, occasionally whistling to him, (not exactly with his lips, but with a small pocket-whistle,) least he should run astray or otherwise come to grief. This little dog at last grew old and asthmatic, until it was a misery to look at his sufferings; until, in short, like many another little pet, he had to be kindly and painlessly put out of his little troubles. This was a great grief to Mrs. Carlyle, who never could quite reconcile herself to the clear necessity. She was telling her grief to a lady friend, who, I believe, had not been very long married, when her friend, trying to say something to comfort her, suggested, "Why not have him stuffed?" "Stuffed!" said Mrs. Carlyle, with a flash of indignation, "would you stuff your baby?" She was also very tender-hearted with her pets, and especially with her servants, whom she tried in every way to attach to her, sometimes, but not always, with perfect success.—London Quarterly Review.

THE White House has had no general overhauling since it was rebuilt in 1815, after it had been destroyed by fire by the British troops, on the occasion of their raid upon Washington in the war of 1812.

Shall and Will.

In the South, as in Scotland and Ireland, shall and will are constantly misused. The West has caught the infection from the South. The correct usage is to employ shall in the first person and will in the second and third persons where mere intention or purpose is conveyed. The reverse is true where a much stronger determination is meant, such as a threat. The threadbare story of the Frenchman who cried, "I will drown; nobody shall help me," is the best possible illustration of the perversion to which we have referred. In old times the East was free from this fault. Yankee children were so well drilled as to be incapable of falling into error, but the corruption is extending over there. A correspondent of the Boston Advertiser thus bewails the growing degeneracy:

I have been a teacher of many children and young people of Boston. If I told their names they would be recognized at once as good representatives of the city's young. I can not recall one of them who was uniformly correct in using shall and will, should and would. Their sense for realizing the distinction seemed to be numb. They could not be taught it. Whether this is because our children get so much of their habit of talk from un-English hirelings, I can not say. But the sad fact remains. English in Boston has got the dry rot.

We hope we shall see a reform which will drive the innovation out of good society.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Honored and Blest.

When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well-known valuable remedies the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.—Democrat.

Gone to See Papa.

If he who wrote "We are Seven" were alive and should happen to see this pathetic incident, told in the Detroit Free Press, what a touching ballad he would write!

I was walking down one of Detroit's beautiful avenues on a lovely afternoon. In front of an ivy-wreathed doorway sat an old lady knitting.

A sunny-haired little girl ran through the hall and down the steps into the street carrying her doll. Her curls had fallen over her eyes, and she stumbled and fell.

I had her in my arms in an instant. The smile that wreathed her pretty dimples and snow-white teeth told me that she was neither hurt nor frightened.

"What is your name, little one?"

"Ain't dot any."

"Haven't any name? Is that aunty on the porch?"

"No, 'at's dan'ma."

"Well, what does grandma call you?"

"S'e talls me Puss, but s'e talls 'e tat puss, too."

"But what does mamma call you?"

"S'e doesn't tall me nuffin—s'e done 'ay off."

"Done away off where?"

"To see papa, up dere."

And she pointed to the sky rosy with the sunset's glow.

"When did mamma go?"

"'E snow was on 'e dround, and s'e went in a sleigh wivout any bells on 'e horses, an' damma c'ied."

I am not ashamed to own that tears filled my eyes as I kissed the child and turned away, for I, too, had my graves in childhood.

AN Indianapolis exchange mentions that St. Jacobs Oil cured Mr. J. H. Mattern, a letter-carrier of that city, of a severe sprain contracted in the war.—Detroit (Mich.) Western Home Journal.

TO MAKE a strong paste that will not sour: Four parts by weight of glue are allowed to soften in fifteen parts of cold water for some hours, and then moderately heated till the solution becomes quite clear; sixty-five parts of boiling water are now added with stirring. In another vessel thirty parts of starch paste are stirred up with twenty parts of cold water, so that a thin, milky fluid without lumps is obtained. Into this the boiling glue solution is poured with constant stirring, and the whole is kept at the boiling temperature. After cooling, ten drops of carbolic acid are added to the paste. The paste must be preserved in closed bottles to prevent evaporation of the water, and will in this way keep good for years.

FROM the Wilmington (Del.) Republican: Mr. J. M. Scott, corner Third and Madison streets, had a remarkably fine horse cured of the scratches by St. Jacobs Oil.

"For Your Brother's Sake."

A good story is told by the Providence Journal of a gentleman's mistake while on the way to the inauguration at Washington, in March, 1881. Between New York and Philadelphia he took a seat beside a portly gentleman, and conversation began.

Politics were mentioned, and the Rhode Islander said he was a Republican, and thought last fall that it would not be well for the country to have a change, but that he had a brother who was a Democrat.

Soon the train stopped at a station, and the Rhode Islander stepped to the platform and met an acquaintance, who, after a little space, remarked:

"Gen. Hancock is on this train, and, as I am acquainted with him, perhaps you would like an introduction."

Of course he would; so they entered the car, and approached the portly gentleman just left; the Rhode Islander was introduced to the General. With a twinkle of the eye, Gen. Hancock said:

"I will shake hands with you for your brother's sake."

KIDNEY-WORT cures piles. It has a soothing and healing action that is very potent.

"Gentleman" and "Lady."

Socially the term "gentleman" has become almost vulgar. It is certainly less employed by gentlemen than by inferior persons. The one speaks of "a man I know," the other of "a gentleman I know." In the one case the gentleman is taken for granted, in the other it seems to need specification. Again, as regards the term "lady." It is quite in accordance with the usages of society to speak of your acquaintance the Duchess as "a very nice person." People who would say "a very nice lady" are not generally of a social class which has much to do with Duchesses; and if you speak of one of these as a "person" you will soon be made to feel your mistake.—All the Year Round.

Give the Boys a Chance.

Don't keep the boys in bondage because they are not twenty-one years old. Give them a trial. Let them have a chance to struggle with the affairs of the world, if nothing more than to send them to town with a small load of wood or wheat. Let them buy and sell in various ways, then when they are twenty-one it will come natural to them to do business.

I have known professing Christians to raise children and not one of the children would care a fig for Christianity. Why? Because we are not all of Israel that are in Israel. Sometimes children grow up without knowing the ten commandments, neither can they repeat the Lord's prayer.

I have never yet seen the gambler who had confidence enough in his profession to teach it to his children, and so it is with some people, they have not faith enough in their religion to teach it to their children.

Teach them to love good associates. Love commences at home. I never saw a man who would abuse his mother, but would abuse his wife also, if he were lucky to get one; and so it is with a young woman. I like to see those who respect and obey their parents. I believe this is one of the highest commandments, and one of the first to be obeyed.—Correspondence Household.

Humor and Happiness.

All pure, sweet laughter is a sign of happiness, and happy people are much more apt to be virtuous than the unhappy. Be good and you will be happy is hardly a more valid saying than be happy and you will be good. In the matter of thought and character, it has many times been observed by the most careful students of the mind that the lack of humor involves a very serious intellectual defect, a lack of nice discrimination.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. A GRAND STEEPLE CHASE.

As if there were not sufficient excitement at the usual horse-race, these meetings on the turf nearly always close with a grand steeple chase. This kind of race combines all the excitement of the regular race, with the super-added element of danger which seems to give further zest to the sport. Horses, and good ones at that, often receive severe injuries, which render them practically useless for long periods. At least this was the state of affairs until owners and breeders of fine stock began to freely use ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great German Remedy for man and beast. This invaluable article to horsemen has so grown into favor on account of its phenomenal efficacy in diseases of domestic animals, especially the horse, that it would be difficult indeed to discover a horsemen unacquainted with its magical potency. The Philadelphia

Easy Hour, in a recent issue says: "But one of the most important developements concerning ST. JACOBS OIL is the discovery that it has properties which are beneficial to the animal as well as to the human species. It has, of late, been in active demand among livery men and others for use on horses suffering from sprains or abrasions. The most prominent instance known of in this connection, is that related by Mr. David Walton, a well-known Friend, who keeps a livery stable at 1245 North Twelfth street. Mr. Walton states that he was boarding a valuable horse belonging to Benjamin McClurg, also a resident of North Twelfth street. A few weeks ago the animal slipped and badly sprained his leg, making him very lame. Mr. Walton used two bottles of ST. JACOBS OIL on the animal and found within less than one week, that there was no need for any more, for the animal was as well as ever.

GENTLEMEN:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

IT is said that President Arthur is a widower.

THE new president seems to be getting down to business.

MRS. GARFIELD will make her home at Mentor for the future, so it is stated.

VANDERBILT has obtained control of the C. C. C. & I. road. An important change.

MASON, the guard who recently shot at Guiteau, may, it is hoped, escape with a slight punishment after all.

IN some parts of the south, squirrels are so plenty, and nuts and acorns so scarce, that they are tearing open the cotton pods to eat the seeds.

ACCORDING to the Bureau of Statistics, DeKalb county had this year, 5,879 horses, 129 mules, 15,195 head of cattle, 18,304 hogs and 31,949 sheep.

IT is thought most of the members of the cabinet will soon retire, and that Arthur will select a new one. Lincoln may remain, but even that is uncertain.

ARTHUR appears to be ready to push the star route thieves. He has removed the postmaster at Deadwood, a ringleader, and the rest are getting frightened.

IN most of the large cities they are sending to the Michigan sufferers the mourning goods used in draping the buildings during the recent national mourning.

ACTION has been commenced against Brady, French and two or three other leading star route swindlers, and there is a prospect that something will be done.

THE three men who robbed the train on the Iron Mountain railroad the other day have been captured. One was taken in Texas, and the other two in the Indian Territory.

THE Wabash system has been increased by the addition of three new roads recently. They are the Danville & Southwestern, the Cairo & Vincennes and the Attica & Covington.

THE president has made a short visit to New York, to consult with the leaders of his party in that state, and to secure harmony among them, if possible. He returned to Washington yesterday.

IF this county, as stated, had 267 mules in 1881, and only 129 this year, the question is, what became of the other 138? Is the popular faith in the immortality of the mule to be thus rudely shaken?

IN Ohio, the campaign is dragging along with but little interest on the part of the people. But both the candidates for governor are busy at work and each claims to feel confident of election.

THEY have a trotting steer down in Pennsylvania. His owner is training him for the race course, and drives him in harness with bridle and bit, the same as he would drive a horse. It is said he makes good time.

WOULDN'T it be a good plan to make Guiteau a committee of one to receive and dispose of all applicants for office under the new administration? He might not last long, but then, he would know how it is himself.

AT the republican state convention that met in New York yesterday, it is now considered certain that a majority of the delegates are anti-Conkling men. This will give the half-breeds, as they are called, the entire control of the convention.

AT Cleveland the other day, a man named R. B. Hayes, at one time an occupant of the White House, did not observe the sign, "Keep off the Grass," and a guard seeing him disobeying the rules, made him leave and go back to the gravel walk. Verily, the vote of Louisiana was stolen in vain, if it has come to this.

AFTER taking the oath of office before Justice Brady, of the New York supreme court, Arthur, on his arrival at Washington, was sworn in a second time. While this was not considered absolutely necessary, it was thought best to have it done, in case the legality of the first ceremony should be called in question.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL BALDWIN, in reply to a question submitted to him by Superintendent Bloss, gives it as his opinion, that the school board of a town may legally require small pupils to attend a half a day only, each school-day. Many of our graded schools are already working on this plan. One-half of the small ones will attend in the forenoon, and the other half in the afternoon.

THERE is much discussion as to the organization of the senate, when it meets the tenth of this month. There are thirty-seven democrats, and Senator Davis, who will probably act with them, against thirty-four republicans and Mahone. This gives the democrats a majority, and they will likely elect one of their number president of the senate pro. tem., and also a secretary. Then the two new senators from New York can be sworn in, as well as the one who will succeed Burnside, in Rhode Island.

WE take the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel of last Saturday. From this it will be seen that Northern Indiana is carrying off its share of honors this year: "Last night, the exhibitors of agricultural implements at the State Fair assembled in the corridor on the second floor of the Grand Hotel, to the number of about forty. No one, save the exhibitors, knew what the gathering of the gentlemen meant until R. M. Lockhart, President of the State Board of Agriculture, was brought out of his room and Hon. Stanton J. Peelle stepped forward, and in an exceedingly neat little speech, presented Mr. Lockhart, on behalf of the exhibitors of agricultural implements, with a beautiful gold-headed cane and an elegant silver water set consisting of five pieces, all of which bore the following inscription: 'R. M. Lockhart, from the Exhibitors of Agricultural Implements Indiana State Fair, 1881.' Mr. Lockhart accepted the presents in a few well-timed remarks, after which the entire party enjoyed a pleasant smoke and chat.

WE have received the first number of the School News, a bright little monthly published in Indianapolis. As it's name indicates, it is for use in the schools, for reading exercoses, general news of the past month, as well as a great deal of other useful and interesting matter. As to the manner of using it, the editor says: "As the School News appears once a month, its use naturally divides itself into four exercises, answering to the general exercises of each week. Or, if greater variety is desired, selections can be made from each department. It would seem to matter little whether its use is confined to a class or to a general exercise of the whole school. For practice drill in fresh and impromptu reading, the class system seems to be preferable; for the purpose of imparting information and leading to investigation, the use of it in a general excercise seems the better method. Whether the question and possible discussions suggested by its reading should be allowed at that time or deferred to the next reading exercise, is a question for each teacher's decision. It is one of the intentions of the School News to call forth such special questions in schools in order thus to obtain the greatest possible information."

THE following, taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer, shows the law in regard to electing a president pro. tem. of the senate:

Of course, everybody knows that before the resignation of Conkling and Platt and the death of Burnside, there were thirty-eight democrats and thirty-eight republicans. Two vacancies have been made by voluntary resignment and one by the act of God. Nevertheless, these three vacancies have been made by no act of the democratic party, and in this inequality the parties now stand, until new members are admitted according to law.

The constitution says, in article 1, section 3:

"The senate shall choose their other officers and also a president pro. tempore, in the absence of the vice-president, or when he shall exercise the office of president of the United States."

The law passed at the first session of the first congress, approved by Washington on June 1, 1789, and followed without one exception ever since, provides:

"SEC. 28. The oath of office shall be administered by the president of the senate to each senator who shall hereafter be elected, previous to taking his seat.

"SEC. 29. When a president of a senate has not taken the oath of office, it shall be administered to him by any member of the senate."

No claimant to a seat in the senate can be admitted to service in that body until he takes the oath, and he can not take the oath until a president of the senate exists to administer it.

The first duty of the senate is to elect a president pro. tem.; and, of course, nobody can vote who is not elected and sworn in. We may wish it were otherwise; claimants may wish it were otherwise. The law is thus written; and, even according to the most advanced philosophy, the law is valid until the life of the nation requires nullification.

The first duty of the senate being to elect a president pro. tem., and the parties standing thirty-eight democrats and thirty-five republicans, the democrats will certainly elect that president. If not, pray why not?

2. The second duty is to consider the cases of persons claiming to be newly-elected senators.

SCARCELY has the dead president been laid to rest, before the swarm of hungry, ravenous office seekers are again besieging the doors of the new president's residence. We hope that when Congress meets, something may be done to relieve the president and all his successors of this needless burden. It is becoming a troublesome and dangerous element, and the recent sad lessons should teach us to put the appointing power into some other hands.

Mollie Thomas, wife of Aaron Thomas, and daughter of Ira Rickets, died Sunday morning, after only a week's illness. She leaves a husband and one child a year old and numerous relatives behind her. Mollie had hosts of friends who mourn her loss, cut down in her early life.

Isaac Mease and Marion Hart had an old-fashioned knock down on Saturday last, which caused considerable excitement for a short time. Isaac had his face pretty well pounded, while the other came off with a few scratches. It is claimed by the lookers-on that Hart took the advantage and kept it. For once whiskey was not the cause, an old grudge causing the fracas.

We understand that J. D. Leighty contemplates a trip to Atlanta during the cotton exposition.

Sol. Barney has traded his interest in the Spencerville store to Samuel Evans, and Sol. is now one of the boys at St. Joe. And still there is room for more.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., Feb. 2, 1880.—I know Hop Bitters will bear recommendation honestly. All who use them, confer upon them the highest encomiums, and give them credit for making cures—all the proprietors claim for them. I have kept them since they were first offered to the public. They took high rank from the first and maintained it, and are more called for than all others combined. So long as they keep up their high reputation for purity and usefulness, I shall continue to recommend them—something I have never before done with any other patent medicine.

WATERLOO FAIR.

To all those attending the Waterloo Fair, remember you cannot afford to miss seeing the mammoth stock of watches, clocks, jewelry, silver and plated ware and all other articles in that line, at Bassett & Maxson's jewelry store, the largest between Fort Wayne and Jackson, or Toledo and Chicago. They are also agents for first-class sewing machines. Don't forget the place, at Bassett & Maxson's Waterloo, Ind. 24.

Habitual Costiveness

is the bane of nearly every American woman. From it usually arises those disorders that so surely undermine their health and strength. Every woman owes it to herself and to her family to use that celebrated medicine, Kidney-Wort. It is the sure remedy for constipation, and for all disorders of the kidneys and liver. Try it in liquid or dry form. Equally efficient in either.—[Boston Sunday Budget.

A Card.

Sloane; and especially so to those of the Masonic fraternity, pall bearers, Messrs. John Butt, R. Wes. McBride, Royal Fisk, A. B. Stevens, Hiram Lieb and John Brand, who, at the hour of midnight, quietly conveyed the remains and placed them safely on the cars, which were to take them to the place of final sepulture.

DR. and MRS. J. U. WINSLOW.

Dinner at the Fair.

George Hough will run a first-class restaurant with his dining hall at the fair next week. He makes a specialty of providing warm tea and coffee for those who bring their own dinners. They can bring their pails or cups and get it by the pint or quart, or in any quantity to suit. He will also have seats provided free under an awning, for the use of those who purchase their tea and coffee of him. Hot meals at all hours and at reasonable prices. In addition to the regular first-class bill of fare, Mr. Hough will serve up a large fat venison from the north woods of Michigan. Call on him at his stand.

DIED.—In this place, Oct. 1, 1881, of typhoid fever, Faust Robinson, aged 15 years 1 month and 13 days, the only son and child of J. Attwood Robinson and his deceased wife, Kate O. Robinson, daughter of the late Samuel Headley, of Butler. For four long weeks the little sufferer manfully withstood the ravages of the insidious disease, yet with all the medical skill bestowed, and the affection and tender care of his father, his neighbors and his school and playmates, when the hour came, he was compelled to pass through the chilly waters of death. Kind hands and sympathizing hearts placed beautiful flowers bountifully upon the burial casket. And as evidence of the respect and esteem in which Faust was held, almost all the boys and young men followed his remains to the church and their final resting place. The services were held at the Baptist church, the Rev. S. B. Ward officiating. Mr. Robinson in his childless and bereaved affliction is entitled to, and has the entire sympathy of our people.

—Among the most pleasant of our callers last week, was Miss Rose Moody, of Keyser township. She is to teach this winter in the home school—No. 6, in Keyser.

Obituary.

David Aldrich was born in Vermont, March 14, 1817. He removed to this county with his father's family, in July 1837, and in the following March, was married to Miss Mary Jackman. They settled in Troy township, where they continued to reside, and where, battling with the hardships and difficulties to be met in a new country, they succeeded at length in securing a fair competence, which they have generously divided with their children. The deceased joined the church while in Vermont, in 1830 and has been a zealous christian through life. The funeral services were held at the Bellefontaine church in Franklin township. The high esteem in which the deceased was held, was shown by the large attendance at the funeral services, over eighty teams being present, besides those who went directly to the church. The bereaved wife loses a provident and affectionate husband, and his children, an able counselor and a generous and loving father.

County Institute.

The county teacher's institute will be held in Auburn, the week commencing November 7, 1881. All the teachers of the county are invited to be present and assist to make this one of the most successful and useful institutes we have ever had. State Superintendent Bloss will be present on Thursday, and other able instructors will be with us.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt

The Oriole.

The B. & O. road will make special rates to those who wish to attend this great fete at Baltimore. The rates will be one fare for round trip and for a slightly increased rate, will extend the time to twenty-one days so as to enable the holders to visit Baltimore, see the great national fair at Washington, and the centennial celebration at Yorktown. For information apply to local agents.

—Thirty-two years ago, our now model farmer, John S. Boots, of Jackson township, moved from Ashland county, Ohio, and desiring to see for himself, whether the natives along the line of his old route had done as well as he had, he concluded to go and see; so he hitched up one of his best horses and started, back over the same old trail, and he writes back to some of his friends that the country has changed considerable, since he moved, and the natives have done about as well as he expected. He says, however, that they have not killed all the wild turkeys yet, and he wanted a notice served on Dr. Ford, that he saw a large flock just this side of Napoleon. We are further informed that he started back last Tuesday, in order to get here in time to attend the fair at Waterloo. You see without John, the apple department at the fair would suffer.

—A letter from T. C. Elson, dated at Durango Col., Sept. 25, says that miners from the mountains are already coming into that place to winter. Snow fell on the mountains Sept. 6, and they had already had frost there. We call attention to errors made in publishing his recent communication. The ore he speaks of pays $100 to $1500 per ton, instead of $1.00 and $15.00 as the typos made it read. The Valley is one half mile wide, not twelve miles, and lots sell at from $150 to $2500.

Funeral Ceremonies.

THE LATE COL. JOHN N. SLOANE AT SANDUSKY, OHIO.

At 9:30 the friends of the deceased started from the depot in solemn procession for Oakland cemetery. First: Two carriages closely covered, with the following eight pall bearers, viz: Gen. Wm. H. Mills, S. S. Hosmer, George Barney, Homer Goodwin, W. F. Converse, T. C. McGee, W. P. Chapman and M. F. Cowdry Second: Hearse, followed by carriage, with Edward W. Sloane, Rush R. Sloane and wife. Third: Carriage with Morrison Sloane and wife, Rev S. S. Osborne, Rector of Grace church and J. A. Barker. Fourth: Carriage, with Wm. Sloane and family. Fifth: Carriage, with Mrs. Pitt Cooke and family. Sixth: Carriage, containing Mrs. Wm. H. Mills and daughter. At the cemetery, the mournful, though beautiful burial service of the Episcopal church was said at the grave, by Rev. S. S. Osborne, and the remains were lowered to their last resting place.

—J. A. Dillman, of Fairfield, called on us Tuesday, and gave some accounts of some of his experiences in his recent trip to the western part of the state. He saw the accident that resulted in the killing of a man at Otis recently. The man was standing near the track, and the freight train, in passing, hit him on the shoulder, knocking him down, and under the wheels. His body was rolled and crushed into the center pit of the crossing, and his feet cut off. He was horribly mangled, and died in a few minutes. Mr. Dillman's account of the sad affair is very vivid, and it has impressed itself firmly on his memory.

—We are sorry to learn that the samples of fruit exhibited at the State Fair, as the product of DeKalb county, failed to receive a premium. The reason was that many varieties were not properly named, as required by the rules of the fair. The exhibit was pronounced by the judges to be excellent. If Wm. Shakspeare had ever exhibited apples at the fair, he wouldn't have gone up and down the earth with his threadbare conundrum, "What's in a name?"

—We were shown by Dr. Elson some very fine specimens of gold and silver ore recently. They were sent him by his brother, T. C. Elson, who is now at Durango, Colorado. There are in the collection a number of other curiosities, among the rest, a horned toad, a regular scratch-my-back. He seems to take to the new conditions in Hoosierdom, as easily as a native. They are on exhibition at the doctor's dental rooms.

—O. S. McCord brought into our office a rare curiosity, the other day. It was a fine specimen of the Osprey, or Fishing Eagle. It was killed near Spencerville, and the owner, Mr. Bishop, brought it here for Mr. McCord to stuff and mount. It is nicely done, and the bird presents a lifelike appearance. It will pay to go and see it.

—We had a pleasant call from A. M. Jones, of Cedar Beach, last week. Mr. Jones is owner of the steamer, "Roxy," that has done such excellent service on the lake there for the past two seasons. He has pushed the work on his new house on the banks of the lake, until it is now nearly completed. He intends to have a station there before long.

—James Henderson, of Jackson township, took two first, and two second premiums on his fine wool sheep at the Fort Wayne fair. He and his brother John and Mr. Ward Kennedy, all of this county, about made a clean sweep in the classes in which they competed. Good for DeKalb county.

—A. D. Goetschius returned from his summer's visit to his boys in Montana Territory, last Saturday evening. He is much improved in health and speaks well of the country. Says in fact that he might sell out and go there to stay. He reports everything in a flourishing condition.

—List of letters unclaimed at the Auburn postoffice, Oct. 8, 1881:

John Clark, Clare Ewings, J. C. Fredrickson, C. Fockler & Bros., Wm Group, Joseph Kuller, Thomas Lewis, Mrs. E. E. Miller, Miss Belle Shook.

JOE. RAINIER, P. M.

—Our popular young friend, G. F. Shutt, editor of the Elkhart Democrat, gave us a pleasant call the other day. Bro. Shutt is making the Democrat a lively paper, and it gives us pleasure to place him on our exchange list.

—There will be a special meeting of the trustees of the different townships and towns, at Auburn, on Thursday Nov. 10, for the purpose of attending to such business as may be necessary before the beginning of the winter schools.

—Lawyers at court have no need to bathe their heads in ice-water this week on account of any extra excitement. The "oldest inhabitant" can't remember as dull a session as the present one.

—DIED.—October 1, 1881, near St. Joe, in Concord township, Margus, son of Marion and Delia Dermott, aged 8 months and 20 days.

Around About Us.

Robbers broke into the dwelling of Gen. Williams, of the Indianian, at Warsaw last week, but were frightened away without getting any plunder.

A great many horses in Peru, and the adjoining county are afflicted by a new disease known as "pink eye." It is not generally fatal, although several horses have died.

The editor of the Fort Wayne Dispatch shot at a man the other day, for calling him Shakspeare. You never can please some people, even flattery cannot be relied on in a dry time.

We see by the Hicksville News, that our young friend, Charlie Bassett, had a full assortment of jewelry on exhibition at the fair, at that place, last week, and the Hirsch Bros. made a fine display of groceries.

Some men digging a well in Wabash county a few days ago, found the bones of a mammoth, at the depth of six feet from the surface. They were in a fair state of preservation, and the tusks were nearly eleven feet long.

Mr. McDonald, of the Plymouth Democrat, has met with a sad bereavement in the death of his wife, who died Sept. 22, at the age of 48. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of his brethren of the press everywhere.

The mayor of Kokomo was shot and killed by a deputy sheriff the other day. He was in the act of carrying flour away from a mill in the night, and on being halted started to run, and was fired upon. The affair is a very strange one, as the deceased is said to be quite wealthy.

While jumping a hurdle on the track at the fair grounds, the foot of one of the Indian ponies was caught in the hurdle, and in endeavoring to free himself, the animal kicked, and his flank was pierced by a long arrow the Indian rider wore at his back. Blood spurted from the wound in a great stream.—[Ft. Wayne News.

Speaking of their fair, the Lagrange Standard says: "One of the most interesting exhibits was the hives of bees and honey shown by G. K. Hubbard, agent for the Diehl hives. The hives are certainly ingenious and convenient, and as far as the bees are concerned, they seem to like them, and make their delicious product in abundance."

Jas. N. Carpenter called our attention the other day to some samples of wheat brought in by Michael Klink, of Salem township. It was "California Club." On one head we counted 90 kernels and there were more just as good. The sample shown us had been picked up after the crop was hauled in, and was from a ten-acre field from which Mr. K. obtained 293 bushels. He thinks that perhaps twenty bushels were left on the ground.—[Angola Herald.

On last Saturday night robbers entered the house of George Haberstroh, who lives on the camp-ground, and very unceremoniously relieved him of his surplus cash. Mr. Haberstroh went home between nine and ten o'clock, and when he went to bed left his window open for ventilation. He left his clothes lying on a chair near the window, and in the morning found his pocket-book on the window-sill relieved of its contents, which amounted to about twenty-six dollars.—[Lagrange Democrat.

At the Ft. Wayne fair, John Henderson, of this county, took six first premiums on Devon cattle. Only one other first premium was taken in that class. We congratulate Mr. H. on his success, the more so, as we know he has a fine heard of cattle, and deserves his good fortune. He also received one first premium on long wool sheep, four first premiums on Shropshires and other Downs, in fact, all the premiums that were given in that class, and one first on fat sheep.

WAS HE MURDERED? There is a mystery afloat about A. J. Kitson, who was recently bound over to the present term of court on the charge of incest with his daughter. About a week ago he went to Syracuse, ostensibly to procure witnesses in his approaching trial. He got into a quarrel with some of the parties interested in his prosecution, and hot words passed between them. He threatened to divulge certain matters against some of them after his own case was decided. It is the supposition that he has met with foul play, as he left the island about dark on his way home, soon after which some dozen shots were heard in a dismal part of the road, and close to the lake. Since then he has not been seen, and his friends are now investigating the matter. It is charged by his enemies that he has simply skipped the country to avoid trial. On the other hand, Jack has claimed that he wanted to stand trial, and prove himself innocent of the charge against him. This is the way the matter stands at present. We await further developments.—[Goshen Democrat.

NOTICE.—Parties are hereby warned not to purchase a note given by me to Arminda Cole, dated March 1st, 1881, and payable in one year, as there was no value received. LEWIS COLE. 38-41.

There wasn't law enough to run a township government in this place last week, as all the lawyers were in Auburn.

Clark Long is representing the wholesale piano and organ house, of Story & Camp, Chicago, at the fair. Persons thinking of purchasing an instrument, should talk with him.

The store of Kahn & Co, was closed on Monday, that being a fast day with those of Hebrew faith. We believe it is in commemoration of the second destruction of the temple at Jerusalem.

Clark Long is home from Chicago, for a week's visit during the fair. He has been in the employ of Story & Camp, dealers in musical instruments. He likes his position there very well, and begins to feel quite at home in the city

Mrs. Olive McClure was last week called away to attend the funeral of her brother, David Aldrich, who died at the residence of his son-in-law, Jacob Baker, with whom Mr. Aldrich and his wife made their home.

R. M. Lockhart was the recepient of a fine gold headed cane, and a silver water set last Friday evening, at the Grand Hotel in Indianapolis. They were presented to him by exhibitors at the state fair. A full account of this pleasant affair is given elsewhere.

L. A. Caro goes to Grand Rapids this week, to take a position with Martin & Co. grocers. We believe that Martin & Co. will find Mr. Caro a reliable man, with good business qualities. He has the good wishes of his friends here, to take with him to his new location.

Ora Shaffer, of the firm of J. W. Shaffer & Co., Auburn, has the nicest wagon the fair ground, if we are to judge of the quality and work. We do not know whether it is entered for the purpose of obtaining a premium or not, but feel certain that it deserves one at any rate. Our home work should have at least an equal chance with foreign.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE special train from Washington for Cleveland which had on board the Columbia Commandery of Knights Templar and thirteen correspondents of Eastern newspapers ran into a hand-car at Brady's Run, Pa., containing eight men, four of whom were killed and two fatally injured, and the other two only escaped by jumping from the car at the risk of their lives.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE, near Philadelphia, the principal educating establishment of the Society of Friends, has been totally destroyed by fire. It was insured for $150,000, which quite covers the loss, and will be rebuilt immediately.

A NEW YORK telegram of Sept. 29 says: "Cyrus W. Field has collected $324,075 for the wife and children of President Garfield, which can be devoted to no other purpose. One check for $500 and another for $250 were sent in yesterday for the aged mother of the President, and will be duly forwarded."

AT a meeting held in Pittsburgh of the Western Nail Association trade was reported greater than it ever was before, and it was decided to advance the price 25 cents.

THE WEST.

A CLEVELAND correspondent relates a touching incident that occurred at Mentor. As Grandma Garfield was packing her little bag previous to her departure for Cleveland to attend the funeral, the clasp refused to yield to her trembling touch. Involuntarily she exclaimed, "James, I can't unfasten my sachel." Then the awful truth dawned upon her afresh, made more cruel by the involuntary exclamation. "What did I say?" she gasped, looking quickly about to see if her utterance had been overheard. Mrs. Larrabee turned her head the other way, as if she had suddenly been pierced by an arrow. Mrs. Garfield stood trembling with uncontrollable agitation. "Mr. Palmer," she said at length, "you are the only James I have now. Will you unfasten it?"

THE Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company will use $5,000,000 in constructing its line westward from Vinita through Indian Territory, and $10,000,000 to push the work through California. Steel rails have been laid from Albuquerque westward for 236 miles.... A terrific tornado, accompanied by hail, thunder and lightning, swept over Quincy, Ill., demolishing many buildings, unroofing others, and otherwise causing much damage to property. Several persons were seriously, and at least four persons fatally, injured by the blowing down of Joel Harrison's tobacco factory, Bonnet, Duffy & Co's and Comstock, Castle & Co.'s foundries. The damage done to property will exceed $100,000....Advices from Arizona report that Gen. Carr, in his recent scouting expedition, found no hostile Indians. The command found the bodies of Capt. Hentig and the soldiers who fell with him on Aug. 30, torn from their graves, dreadfully mutilated and disgustingly decomposed. The remains were reinterred, and the General will have them taken into Fort Apache when the cold weather sets in.... Died, at Durham, Wis., Michael O'Brien, aged 106 years. He never had an hour's sickness in his life....The village of Camden, Schuyler county, Ill., was devastated by a cyclone. Mrs. Dr. Watts was instantly killed. Only two houses escaped injury. Two churches were completely demolished. The loss in the village is estimated at $40,000, and the damage to farming property adjoining at $150,000.

A CAR loaded with dynamite, resting on the track near the Rock Island roundhouse, at Council Bluffs, exploded the other day, demolishing four engines, a freight-house, an ice-house, seven passenger coaches and eighty freight cars belonging to the Rock Island Railroad Company. Some oil cars resting on the track were set on fire, and the flames communicated to some houses in the vicinity, and seven of them were burned to the ground. The loss to the railroad is estimated at $100,000.... The Maxwell bandits have made their appearance in Calhoun county, Ill. An attempt to capture them resulted in the killing of Sheriff John Lammie, and the wounding of John H. Churchman and Frank McNeff. The Deputy Sheriff of Pike county, G. W. Roberts, pursued the desperadoes, but was kept back by steady firing.

TYPHO-MALARIAL fever, bilious colic and pneumonia are playing sad havoc among the persons rendered homeless by the recent forest fires in Michigan. Many deaths have already occurred, and several of the sufferers are now lying at the point of death. It is estimated that it would take about $2,500,000 to place the unfortunate people in anything like comfortable circumstances, and not one-tenth of that sum has been subscribed thus far. It is to be sincerely hoped that the people of the United States, who have ever been foremost to succor the unfortunate of other countries, will be no less generous to the unfortunate of their own.

A FRIGHTFUL accident happened on the Des Moines Northwestern (narrow-gauge) railroad, in Guthrie county, Iowa. A construction train, consisting of a locomotive, six flat-cars and a caboose, which was carrying a party to work on the line, left the rails and the caboose was badly smashed. Three men were killed outright and thirty more or less injured.

FOR the purpose of ousting some of the Directors, a meeting of stockholders of the Nevada and Oregon railroad was called at Reno, Nev. Treasurer Coffin and two gentlemen from San Francisco were ordered to retire from the room, but did not do so. In a second the air was filled with whistling bullets, fatal wounds being inflicted upon D. W. Balch, of San Francisco, and E. C. Scovill, Secretary of the company.....The sleeping-car St. Clair, running over the Canada Southern road, was flung off the transfer boat into the water in the slip at Grosse isle, near Detroit. A passenger coach following was nearly thrown from the steamer. Six passengers went down with the sleeper, but all miraculously escaped unhurt....A dispatch from Camp Thomas, A. T., announces that the murderous Apaches who fired on Gen. Carr's troops have nearly all surrendered, and that a military commission will shortly try the culprits..... A bill has been filed at Springfield, Ill., to declare void the issue of $7,000,000 of alleged fictitious stock of the Lake Erie and Western railway, and for the appointment of a receiver. ....A lightning-stroke at Sumter, Wis., killed three horses, seven cows, and twelve hogs belonging to Isaac N. Barr.

THREE-FOURTHS of the capital stock of the Burlington road was represented at the annual meeting of shareholders in Chicago. A resolution was passed that the track be extended to Denver, to punish Jay Gould for encroachments in Nebraska.....Bill Ryan, one of the James boys' gang who participated in the first Glendale robbery of the Chicago and Alton train, has been convicted of the crime at Independence, Mo., and sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment. His conviction was secured on the testimony of Tucker Basham, a confederate in the robbery, and an ex-convict.

THE SOUTH.

AMONG the passengers on the Iron Mountain train which was robbed near Hope, Ark., were H. B. Stewart and H. D. Heard, Judge and Prosecuting Attorney of the circuit in which the train was robbed, both of whom were fleeced. Stewart is a brave man, but he was unarmed. He endeavored by every means in his power to make the passengers fight and tried to borrow a revolver. A number of passengers besought him on their knees not to make any disturbance and have them all killed. Dr. Isaacs, of Illinois, an old man, was robbed of $75. He cried to the boys that he was ashamed of them, young men, entering on such a career of crime. He told them if he had a walking-stick he would chastise them. They laughed at him, took all the money he had, and told him to go and starve. Several invalids en route to the Hot Springs were also robbed, one old fellow losing all he had saved in years, by means of which he hoped to be cured of his disease. His grief was terrible.

A FERRY-BOAT from the Isle of Hope to Skidaway island, off the Georgia coast, sprung a leak about 200 yards from the shore. The boat sunk in a few minutes. Of the eighteen persons on board twelve perished.

HOLLAND'S tobacco factory at Danville, Va., valued at $63,000, has been burned to the ground.

GENERAL.

THREE leading citizens of Cleveland—Messrs. J. H. Wade, H. B. Payne and Joseph Perkins—have been charged with the duty of receiving contributions and erecting a monument over the grave of the late President. They invite subscriptions of $1 each, at a date as early as possible, to be sent to the Second National Bank of Cleveland.... The fund for the family of President Garfield has reached, up to Sept. 24, the sum of $287,514. William H. Vanderbilt, Judge Hilton and Mrs. A. T. Stewart each gave $5,000.

THE fund for the benefit of the widow and children of the late President Garfield amounted to $321,250 on Sept. 28.

S. R. BECKWITH, one of the surgeons originally called to attend the President, has written a scathing review of the treatment and the autopsy, from facts obtained from Dr. Boynton, a cousin of the dead Chief Magistrate. He reiterates the chief charges which recently appeared in Washington dispatches to the Chicago Times and other papers....The ship Halesburg, from New York to Oregon, with a cargo of railroad iron, struck at Hovians beach, on the Californian coast, and went to pieces. Of a crew of twenty-four, nine men and the Captain were lost....Of sixteen souls on board the ship Calcutta, from the East Indies to Boston, and wrecked near East London, only the mate, the carpenter and one seaman were saved. Five bodies were recovered.... Twenty-seven Chinese students, the last of those being educated at Hartford, have started homeward. The fine building erected two years ago by the Government of China will be sold. ....The Captain General of Cuba has suppressed three distasteful newspapers, sending the proprietors of two of them to Spain.

DR. HAMMOND, of New York, very severely criticises the manner in which the late President Garfield was treated by his physicians. He says that the official account of the autopsy abounds in contradictions, and was evidently intended to deceive. There was, he says, gross bungling from the first, and that the fatal neglect was in not making a proper examination of the wound in the first place. This neglect led to nearly all the mistakes in the President's treatment. There would have been, in his opinion, a reasonable hope of recovery if proper treatment had been resorted to.

WASHINGTON.

THE whaling bark Legal-Tender lately arrived at San Francisco from the Arctic ocean. She reports having spoken the revenue cutter Corwin, from which she brings intelligence to the effect that the Corwin landed on Herald island and explored it. Subsequently the steamer made a landing at Wrangle island, and formally took possession of it in the name of the United States. Capt. Cooper ordered the exploration of the territory, but the exploring party found no signs of human habitation. They report the country as desolate and sterile beyond description. No traces of the Jeannette were discovered.

A WASHINGTON telegram of Sept. 27 says: "It is stated here upon the authority of intimate friends of Secretary Blaine that he has positively determined to leave the Cabinet at once. He will send his resignation to President Arthur in a few days, and will probably not return to Washington for some time."

A WASHINGTON telegram says: "There is still a wide difference of opinion here among the lawyers, and even Judges of the courts, as to whether Guiteau must be arraigned for trial here or in New Jersey. While it is not at all likely that any counsel will volunteer to defend Guiteau, and that it would be a disagreeable duty to any lawyer, the court will have to assign him counsel, and it is naturally supposed that his lawyers will do their best for him, and raise every possible point in his defense."

THE Washington Post is responsible for the following editorial statement: "The Cabinet, after gravely considering the matter with President Arthur, came to the conclusion that it was not only not prudent but unsafe for him to attend the body of President Garfield to its resting-place at Cleveland. The reason for this conclusion, although not publicly acknowledged, was that there would be a great risk of his being made the victim of some Ohio assassin's bullet, whose resentful feelings had driven him to simulated, if not temporary, insanity."

THE Acting Secretary of the Treasury has called in $20,000,000 of the bonds extended at 3½ per cent., on which interest will cease Dec. 24. Other continued bonds will be redeemed at the sub-treasury in New York during the month of October to the amount of $2,000,000 weekly.

MR. CORKHILL, District Attorney, is convinced that the District of Columbia is the proper place to try the assassin Guiteau. Every precaution will be taken to prevent his untimely execution. He will be conveyed in the Black Maria to the Supreme Court, and, after a trial, will, it is believed, be promptly executed.... Among the numerous telegrams of sympathy and condolence with Mrs. Garfield received at the State Department was one from Christopher Columbus, Duke of Veragua, Spain, and descendant and representative of the great discoverer, on behalf of the American congress in session at Madrid....It is said to be the intention of the Postmaster General and the Attorney General to push the star-route prosecutions vigorously, and to do it immediately.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has ordered the removal of Postmaster Starr, of Deadwood, for confessed complicity with star-route contractors in defrauding the Government....King Kalakaua, accompanied by his suite, called upon President Arthur the other day. The greeting on both sides was cordial.

POLITICAL.

THE New York Prohibition Convention, convened at Utica, adopted a platform, including a resolution of sympathy with Garfield, and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Stephen Merritt, New York; Comptroller, Jefferson Bissell; Treasurer, Fred Gates; Attorney General, George Brooks; State Engineer and Surveyor, John J. Hooker; Judge of the Court of Appeals, Walter Farrington.

A WASHINGTON news gatherer says it is probable that the resignations of all the present Cabinet officers except that of Secretary Lincoln will be accepted. Secretary Kirkwood and Secretary Windom are understood to be aware of this, and have already intimated that they are candidates for the United States Senate as successors to their own immediate successors. Judge Thomas Settle, District Judge of Florida, but in 1876 a candidate for Governor of North Carolina, is billed for Secretary of the Navy.... Senator Frye, of Maine, says that the Republicans of the Senate will make no fight against the Democrats electing a presiding officer. As he puts it, "We have had enough of deadlocks." Senator Bayard will be elected President pro tem., if the Republicans make no filibustering opposition, as indicated by Senator Frye.

FOR the vacancy created on the Supreme bench by the death of Justice Clifford, the Republicans of New England are putting forward Chief Justice Gray, of Massachusetts, who would have been commissioned by President Garfield.

SENATOR COCKRELL urges the election of David Davis as presiding officer of the Senate, thereby relieving the Democrats from the charge of taking advantage of the assassination.

THE Republican State Convention of Minnesota met at St. Paul and placed in the field the following ticket: Governor, Gen. L. F. Hubbard, of Red Wing; Lieutenant Governor, Charles A. Gilman, of St. Cloud; Secretary of State, Fred Von Baumbach, of Alexandria; Treasurer, Charles Kettleson, of Albert Lea; Auditor, W. W. Braden, of Rushton; Attorney General, W. J. Hahn, of Lake City; Railroad Commissioner, Gen. J. H. Baker, of Mankato; Supreme Court Judges, Charles Vanderburg of Minneapolis, William Mitchell of Winona, and D. A. Dickinson of Mankato.... The Democracy of Wisconsin, in convention at Milwaukee, nominated N. D. Pratt, of Racine, for Governor; W. A. Anderson, of La Crosse, for Lieutenant Governor; Michael Johnson, of Dane county, for Secretary of State; W. H. Jacobs, of Milwaukee county, for State Treasurer, and M. J. Briggs, of Iowa county, for Attorney General....The Pennsylvania Democratic State Convention took nine ballots for a candidate for State Treasurer, when Orange Noble, of Erie, met with success, despite the opposition of the Standard Oil Company.

SENATOR PLATT, of Connecticut, is suffering from a cancer in the breast, and will not be able to attend the forthcoming session of the Senate. He is paired with Senator Fair. Senator Ben Hill, who is in hospital at Philadelphia, expresses his determination to be present at the organization of the Senate. Senator Hill has lost about a quarter of his tongue, and the throat and parotid gland have been subjected to surgical operation. Under the circumstances it is impossible for him to indulge in public speeches.

AMERICANS sojourning in London held an immense meeting at Exeter Hall to express their abhorrence of the assassination. Minister Lowell presided, and Gen. Merritt, Bishop Simpson, Junius S. Mayer and Moncure D. Conway spoke. Seven nations were represented by their diplomats....A London dispatch of Sept. 25 says: "No such feeling has ever been manifested by the English people before on the death of the ruler of another nation. When the Prince Consort died, twenty years ago, the public paid no such favors to his memory as they are now paying to that of Gen. Garfield."....Three Bishops of the sect of Old Believers, who have been imprisoned in a monastery at Susdal, Russia, since 1856, have just been released by order of the Czar....Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, has been heard from again. He was alive and well on the 4th of July last....Reports have reached Bombay that Ayoob Khan suffered defeat at the hands of the Ameer, and fled to Herat, leaving Candahar defenseless. The desertion of two regiments caused Ayoob's flight.

THE Pall Mall Gazette, moved by the universal sorrow existing in England over the death of President Garfield, ventures to hope "that the bitter memories of dividing animosities engendered by the Revolutionary war are finally passed away," and suggests a union between England and the United States for the prevention of internecine strife. It asks: "Why should there not be an Anglo-American concert wide enough to include in one fatherland all English-speaking men?"

IN consequence of the Land League agitation the Irish harvest would be largely left ungathered but for the Property Defence society and Emergency Committee, who have a large number of men engaged in harvesting. Murder and Lynch Law.

MENOMINEE, Mich., Sept. 28.

Frank and John McDonald, two ex-convicts who have just completed an eighteen-months' term in the State prison, and have been out only two weeks, while at a disreputable house in the outskirts of this village, day before yesterday, got into a row with Willie Kittson, a half-breed, about 23 years old. Norman Kittson and one Tommy Dunn went to the relief of Willie, and took him from the house and started for home. The McDonalds followed them and attacked them again on the street. Willie was knocked down and then stabbed several times. Norman received several severe knife wounds in the face and side. Willie died within a few moments after receiving his wounds, and Norman can not live. The McDonalds were promptly arrested by Sheriff Barclay and lodged in the county jail, where they remained until last evening. Great excitement prevailed from the time of the murder, and extra guards were placed over the jail. About 10 o'clock last night a mob of over 500 people, composed mostly of Frenchmen, Indians and half-breeds, approached the jail, overpowered the Sheriff and guard, and with heavy timbers, sledge-hammers and axes broke open the door of the jail and of the cell where the McDonalds were lodged. The prisoners were pulled out of the cell and long ropes fastened about their necks, and they were then dragged by the mob mercilessly through the street for three-quarters of a mile to the house where the row originated, where their bodies were suspended to a tree. The victims were dead, however, long before their bodies were hung up. The house above mentioned was then set on fire and burned to the ground. The two bodies were left suspended to the tree until this morning, when they were taken down by the authorities. When the jail was attacked, a large number of citizens responded promptly to the call of the Sheriff for help, but the mob had obtained entrance to the jail, and resistance was then impossible.

The Michigan Sufferers.

The Mayor of Port Huron, Mich., has issued the following:

PORT HURON, Mich., Sept. 27.

The generosity of the American people has inspired the sufferers in the burned region with new hope, and, their first needs being supplied, they are industriously engaged in building new homes.

To the Mayors of the Cities of the United States:

We will have 15,000 people to house and feed during the approaching winter. Grateful for the donations already made, I am compelled to ask you to continue systematically in your several cities in this great work of charity. THE three robbers who captured and robbed the train on the Iron Mountain road, at Hope, Ark., have been captured and jailed. Capt. Clark Hall, conductor on the Iron Mountain road, followed the robbers with a posse to the village of Ben Lomond, in Sevier county. There the robbers separated, one going into Texas and two into the Indian Territory. The pursuing party divided, Capt. Hall following the Texas-bound robber. He came up with the robber while the latter was taking breakfast. Hall pulled down on him with a double-barreled shot-gun. The robber surrendered, saying, "If you had given me a minute's more notice I would have given you a lively deal." Cork.

Cork is the outer bark of a tree called cork oak, quercus suber, and once in every eight years the crop of cork is gathered from those trees. The cork is the outer bark, which, after the tree is four or five years old, makes a rapid growth and becomes very thick. While this outer bark is increasing a new bark forms on the inner side, and thus the Creator has provided a covering for the tree by the time the old bark shall become cracked and dry, and useless for further protection. It is just before the outer bark has reached this useless condition' and while there is yet life and pliability left in it, that the workmen go forth and carefully separate it from the trees. This operation is performed during the summer months by cutting furrows in the bark, lengthwise, and making cuts crosswise, about forty inches apart; the bark is then beaten, in order to loosen it from the tissues beneath, after which it is pried off in square pieces. The bark is finally carted to the factory, where men and boys cut and turn it into the different shapes used for cork, bungs and such like. If the barking or peeling is carefully done, without hurting the new bark beneath, it does no injury to the tree, but is beneficial in removing what would eventually become an incumbrance.

BOLD ARKANSAS BANDITS.

Robbery of a Train on the Iron Mountain Road by Three Desperadoes—More than $18,000 Captured from the Express Car and Passengers.

NEWPORT, Ark., Sept. 23.

At 11 o'clock last night the train on the Iron Mountain railroad, while en route for St. Louis, was stopped near Hope by five masked men, one of whom took charge of the engineer while the others entered the express car, presenting revolvers at the head of the express messenger and demanding that the safe be instantly opened. The demand was after brief expostulations complied with, and the robbers carefully examined the safe, abstracting the valuables and tossing them into a sack which one of them held. It was stated that they secured $18,000. After going through the express they entered the passenger cars, calling out in a threatening tone, "Hold up your hands if you value your lives." Many of the passengers were not aware of what was going on in the rear cars, and the appearance of the robbers created an almost indescribable panic. Men attempted to spring from the windows of the cars, women screamed and tried to secrete themselves under the seats. Everybody was terrified, and nobody offered to lift a finger in resistance. One passenger gave up his pocket-book, containing over $100 in money and two checks for $400 and $300 respectively, almost mechanically. The passengers were literally stripped of everything in the shape of valuables. One man slipped a package of $2,000 under the seat and thus saved it, but the bulk of the travelers had not enough left to pay for their breakfast. The robbers occupied scarcely half an hour. They darted off into the woods as soon as they had completed their work, and the engineer at once ran the train into Little Rock. Intense excitement prevails.

Col. H. M. Hoxie, General Manager of the St. Louis and Iron Mountain road, Superintendent Buchanan and the Hon. C. B. Moore, Attorney General of the State, called on Gov. Churchill this afternoon and held a consultation, and the company offered $5,000 each and the State $500 each for the capture of the robbers. Churchill left on a special at 4 o'clock this evening for the scene of the robbery, and will command a pursuit in person. The passengers lost about $2,000. The robbers wore no masks.

The amount of the loss to passengers and the railroad company is placed at between $40,000 and $50,000. The robbers were all young, beardless boys, one of the passengers says. No trace of them has been found up to this hour.

Chronicles.

Hear me, oh, ye tillers of the soil; open your ears and hearken unto my voice.

Put not your trust in men who show unto you models of strange and wonderful inventions, else ye be bamboozled and deceived.

Look not upon the model of the machine that goeth forth into the fields to reap and gather up the sheaves.

Nor upon the pump that requireth not human aid to seduce from its subterranean bed the sparkling water for the refreshment of the lowing kine.

Turn ye away from him who presenteth them; flee from the sound of his velvet embroidered voice.

Else it bite ye like a serpent and sting ye like the prickings of the conscience of him who defrauded the publisher and payeth not his yearly tithes.

From his lips droppeth taffy as droppeth the sap from the sugar tree in the camps of our fathers.

Shun him, oh ye agitators of the clodded field, for he will draw over thine eyes the fleecy substance which is called wool, yea, verily, he will hornswoggle ye with words that are pleasant unto the ear.

He will say unto: "Sign ye this covenant, that ye may act in my stead and supply the toiling masses with my handiwork.

"Serve ye as my agent; for will ye not therefore wax rich; will not the silver and gold flow into thy coffers?

"Sign quickly I beseech ye, that another may not reap the golden harvest in thy stead."

And when ye sign or engrave upon the covenant thy seal, he will go on his way rejoicing, saying unto himself:

"Verily, did I not strike the duffer handsomely; did I not turn the trick in bang-up shape?"

When a fortnight passes the machines have come not; the wonderful mechanism failed to materialize.

But in their stead there cometh unto ye a person clothed in fine raiment and a look of dignity.

And presenteth unto ye your covenant, saying:

"Payest unto me what thou owest; pungle up the ducats, else I bring ye before the judge.

"I hold here thy note of hand for $722.10."

Then will ye wax sore afraid, and your heart will be in your bosom as heavy as the biscuit of the amateur cook.

And ye will go down into your garments for scrip, and will pay the amount, while the stranger will wear an electric smile.

And when the man of fine raiment departeth, ye will say unto your wife: "Yea, verily, am not I condemned fool?"

And she will softly reply: "You bet."

Then will ye seize you ledger, and write upon the debit side thereof:

To damfoolishness..........................$722.10

And on the credit side thereof:

By experience..............$100,000,000,000,000

A STARTLING CHARGE.

An Allegation that Gen. Garfield Was Slain by the Surgeons.

The Chicago Times correspondent telegraphs that journal from Washington, under date of Sept. 23, as follows: "Certain revelations made to-day to the Times correspondent by an unquestioned authority, of the inner history of the post-mortem examination of the body of Gen. Garfield, will create a shock throughout the country second only to the assassination of July 2. These revelations show that the President might have lived; at least they show that the report of the autopsy is false, and that, had it not been for Secretary MacVeagh, even a portion of the reluctant truth placed in the report would have been suppressed. What will the public think when it learns that Gen. Garfield did not die from any result of the wound made by the ballet, but from a cause that probably could have been remedied in the early days of the case? The original track of the wound had fairly healed, and the ball itself had become completely encysted. If it had not been for the blood-poisoning, the President would have been a well man to-day. The blood poisoning proceeded from imperfect drainage of the wound the second day.

A clot of blood that might have been taken out with an aspirator was the cause of the blood-poisoning and the huge abscess upon the kidney. The spine was reported as injured in the autopsy, so that this would appear to be a mortal hurt, but it is said upon high authority that the post mortem revealed nothing of this kind. The spinal column was not harmed, and if there was a slight injury of the vertebra it would not in itself have been serious. After the funeral is over, Gen. Swaim, an educated physician, and Dr. Boynton will reveal the inner secrets of the post mortem. One of the most startling features of the exposure will be the history of the search for the ball. One hour was passed in cutting for it. Then the bowels were removed and placed loose in a wash-bowl. Another hour was spent, and then some one looked in the contents of the wash-bowl and discovered the encysted ball among the intestines. Yet the autopsy locates this ball in the muscles of the back. Gen. Swaim has been so indignant over the report of the autopsy that nothing will prevent him from telling the true story to the public after Gen. Garfield is buried.

Guiteau, the Assassin.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.

Guiteau has frequently boasted in jail that he would have eminent legal counsel to defend him, but he would never give any information as to whom he had in view. It now turns out that he was only indulging in exaggeration, of which he is fond. When informed by the District Attorney to-day that the Grand Jury would indict him next week and advised to make preparations for his defense, he requested the District Attorney to telegraph to his brother-in-law, Scoville, of Chicago. He is compelled to fall back on his relations. If no counsel is provided, the court will, of course, assign him counsel, though this may not be an easy task, as the lawyers here are all averse to appearing in the light of counsel. None of them want to utter a word that would tend to save his neck.

Guiteau still clings tenaciously to the delusion that, if he can escape mob violence and get a trial before a court he will be acquitted. Since he has learned of the death of President Garfield he has on several occasions expressed gratification that his murderous work was accomplished, always speaking of it as the Lord's will, and accompanying his remarks with regret that his victim suffered so much. He pretends to expect that he will yet get the sympathy of the people. In conversation with one of the jail-guards the other day, he said irreverently that he was sure the American people would, after President Garfield was buried, "transfer their sympathy from that lump of clay" (referring to the dead President) to him. He does not express or feel any remorse for his brutal, cowardly act, but his great dread is of mob violence. He has been in a constant state of fear since President Garfield died, and if he hears any unusual noise or steps of more than one person approaching his cell he endeavors to conceal himself under his bed. He is a pusillanimous coward. One of the guards who does duty at Guiteau's cell said to-day, "Guiteau believes that he will have a fair and impartial trial, but does not believe that he can be tried for murder. When I asked him the other day his reasons for believing that he could not be tried for murder, he said, 'I am a lawyer, and am conversant enough with law to know that I cannot be tried for murder, for the reason that there must be malice shown, and I certainly had no malice toward Garfield. His death was a political necessity, and when his body is laid away to rest, and the excitement incident to his death subsides, the American people will begin to appreciate my motives for killing him.'"

The English Joke.

The mission of the English humorist is, to darken the horizon and shut out the false and treacherous joy of existence—to shut out the beauty of the landscape and scatter a $2 gloom over the broad-green earth.

English humor is like a sore toe. It makes you glad when you get over it. It is like having the smallpox, because if you live through it you are not likely to have it again.

When we pass from earth and our place is filled by another sad-eyed genius whose pants are too short, and who manifests other signs of greenness, let no storied urn or animated bust be placed above our lovely resting place, but stuff an English conundrum so that it will look as it did in life, and let it stand above our silent dust to shed its damp and bilious influence through the cemetery as a monument of desolation and a fountain of unshed tears, and the grave-robber will shun our final resting place as he would the melon patch where lurks the spring gun and the alert and irritable bull dog.—Laramie Boomerang.

AMONG the many performances for the acquirement of fame or fortune, or both, nothing is more ludicrous than that of the man who is rewriting the Bible in rhyme. He has got pretty well into his work, and now offers one-half of the copyright to anybody who will furnish the funds to publish the book. He is perfectly satisfied as to his own ability, and challenges a comparison of his poetry with that of any poet, living or dead. He is ready to enter into a poetical contest with anybody to paraphrase into rhyme the chapter beginning: "Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah." For a taste of his quality, here are the opening verses of the book. The rythmical smoothness and the sweet poetic spirit that pervades them will, no doubt, find him a ready partner:

God in the beginning made heaven and earth;
The earth had no form and was void at the first;
The darkness then on the great deep did behoove
The spirit of God on the waters to move.

Then God ordered light and it instantly came,
From infinite region it flashed o'er the main;
God called the light day and the darkness called night,
And the evening and morn were the first day and night.

A GENTLEMAN once laid a wager that he would stand for a whole day on London Bridge with a tray full of sovereigns fresh from the mint, and be unable to find purchasers for them at a penny apiece. Not one was disposed of.

THE NATION'S LOSS.

Services in Washington Over the Remains.

Religious services over the body of President Garfield were held in the rotunda of the Capitol in Washington, on Friday afternoon, Sept. 23. The services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Power, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, and were attended by about 1,500 people, including President Arthur, the diplomatic body, the Supreme Court Judges, the Cabinet officers, several Senators and Congressmen, the members of the household of the late President, Dr. Boynton, Col. Rockwell, Cyrus W. Field, Gen. Swaim and W. W. Corcoran. Mrs. Garfield was not present. The services were plain, simple and earnest. The ceremonies were opened with the hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," beautifully rendered by a volunteer choir. The Rev. Dr. Rankin then ascended the platform at the head of the catafalque, and read, in a clear, distinct voice, a few selections of Scripture. The Rev. Isaac Errett then offered prayer. He spoke in a low tone and with much evidence of deep feeling. The Rev. F. D. Power, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, of which President Garfield was a member, delivered a feeling address. He said:

"The cloud so long pending over the nation has at last burst upon our heads. We sit half-crushed amid the ruin it has wrought. A million prayers, and hopes, and tears, as far as human reason sees, were vain. Our loved one has passed from us. But there is relief. We look away from the body. We forego for a time the things that are seen. We remember with joy his faith in the Son of God, whose gospel he sometimes himself preached, and which he always truly loved. And we see a light and blue sky through the cloud; structure and beauty instead of ruin; glory, honor, immortality, spiritual and eternal life in place of decay and death. The chief glory of this man, as we think of him now, was his discipleship in the school of Christ. His attainments as a scholar and a statesman will be the theme of our orators and historians, and they be the most worthy men to speak praiseworthily. But it is as a Christian that we love to think of him now. It was this which made his life to man an invaluable boon, his death to us an unspeakable loss, his eternity to himself an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. He was no sectarian. His religion was as broad as the religion of Christ. He was a simple Christian, bound by no sectarian ties, and wholly in fellowship with all pure spirits. He was a Christologist rather than a theologist. He had great reverence for family and relations. His example as a son, husband and father is a glory to his nation. His power over human hearts was deep and strong. He won men to him. He had no enemies. The hand that struck him was not the hand of his enemy, but the enemy of the people, the enemy of the country, the enemy of God. He sought to do right, manward and Godward. He was a grander man than we knew. He wrought even in his pain a better work for the nation than we can now estimate. He fell at the height of his achievements, not from any fault of his. But we may in some sense reverently apply to him the words spoken of his dear Lord: 'He was wounded for our transgression, he was buried for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him.' As the nations remember the Macedonian as Alexander the Great, and the Grecian as Aristides the Just, may not this son of America be known as Garfield the Good. Our President rests. He had joy in the glory of work, and he loved to talk of the leisure that did not come to him. Now he has it. This is the clay, precious because of the service it rendered. He is free. The spirit, absent from the body, is present with the Lord. On the heights whence came his help he finds repose. What rest has been his for these four days! Brave spirit, which cried in its body, 'I am tired!' He is where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. The patient soul, which groaned under the burden of suffering flesh, 'O, this pain!' is now in a world without pain. Spring comes, the flowers bloom, the buds put forth, the birds sing. Autumn rolls round, the birds have long since hushed their voices, the flowers faded and fallen away, the forest foliage assumes a sickly hue. So earthly things pass away, and what is true remains with God. The pageant moves. The splendor of arms and banners glitter in the sunlight. The music of instruments and oratory swells upon the air. The cheers and praises of men resound. But spring and summer pass by, and autumn sees a nation of sad eyes and heavy hearts, and what is true remains of God. 'The eternal God is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.'"

At the conclusion of Dr. Power's address, the Rev. J. G. Butler offered prayer, which brought the ceremonies to a close, and at 4 o'clock p. m. the casket was lifted out and placed on the shoulders of eight of the marines, who walked on either side with hands upon the casket. Upon the coffin lay the wreath from the Queen and the sprays of Cyphus palms. The officers of the army and military escort followed into the station. The clergymen, some of the physicians and the relatives of the family alighted and went at once to the train. Ex-Presidents Hayes and Grant walked arm in arm. After them came President Arthur, leaning upon Mr. Blaine, with bowed head and dejected carriage. The members of the Cabinet and their wives followed two and two. At this time a company of colored cadets marched and countermarched before the entrance to the station, led by a drum corps with muffled drums. The members of the diplomatic corps stopped a moment before the gate, and then drove on without entering. Chief Justice Waite and his associates of the Supreme Court entered the depot. The gates were closed. Presently President Arthur, accompanied by Secretary Blaine, Secretary Hunt and ex-President Grant, returned to the sidewalk. President Arthur and Gen. Grant entered a carriage together, and drove off. Their faces were troubled, and showed plainly the depth of their feeling. The Knights Templar arrived at the station after all the others had entered and marched to a position beside the funeral train. Just before the head of the procession reached the depot, two cars of the draped train had been disconnected and run some distance from the station. Mrs. Garfield, with Harry and Mollie, Gen. Swaim, his wife, and Mrs. Rockwell, entered the cars at this point. They were then run back into the depot. By this means they avoided the crowd which surrounded the station. As the funeral procession reached the depot the sun was veiled in a heavy black cloud. When, at 5 o'clock, the train started, the cloud had risen overhead, and drops of rain like tears fell lightly, and the sun broke through the lower margin of the cloud-bank, turning it to silver, while, in the east, a beautiful rainbow stretched across the sky. The train left the depot in Washington at 5:15 o'clock, passing out of the city amid the tolling of bells, in the presence of many thousand silent people. Immense crowds assembled at the various stations, and in most places the civic and military bodies contributed floral tributes. Fifty thousand persons stood with uncovered heads as the train entered the depot at Baltimore. The funeral party reached Harrisburg at 9:18 and the Congressional committee at 9:32, neither train stopping, although an immense assemblage was ranged along the tracks. A national salute was fired and all the church bells tolled. The train proceeded on its journey as far as Altoona, Pa., without interruption. A little beyond that point a freight-train was wrecked and was lying across the track. It required several hours to remove the wreck, and the funeral party suffered a painful delay in consequence of this mishap.

Arrival in Cleveland—Impressive Scenes.

The funeral train met with no delay after leaving Altoona, and reached Cleveland at 1:17 p. m. of Saturday, Sept. 24. Immense throngs of sorrowing people gathered at the stations along the route, and at several points the track was strewn with flowers. The train was met by a vast concourse of people at the depot in Cleveland. The locomotive was heavily draped in deep black on the boiler-head, and all the cars were elaborately draped. After the train stopped, the ladies were escorted to the carriages. The wives of the Cabinet officers went first; then the distinguished widow, supported on one side by Secretary Blaine, and on the other by her son Harry. The ladies, having been placed in the carriages, were sent to the places provided for them at private residences, Mrs. Garfield and children being the guests of James Mason. The body of the late President was then taken from its car by a detachment of the regular army, under Lieut. Weaver, and borne on their shoulders to a special hearse in waiting, followed by a distinguished guard of honor, marching two by two, an army and a naval officer abreast. Gen. Sherman and Rear Admiral Nichols were first; then Gen. Sheridan and Admiral Rodgers, Gen. Hancock and Admiral Porter, and Gens. Drum and Meigs passed, with other naval officers not named. Then followed Chief Justice Waite and other Supreme Court Justices, members of the Cabinet, Gen. Foster and staff and escort, and the committee. At 1:30 the coffin, on which were palms and a large wreath fragrant with tuberoses, was placed in a hearse, and the line of march formed in the following order:

Col. Wilson and staff, Silver Greys' band, First city troop. Hearse and horses, guarded by Knight Templars, in column of three, and flanked by ten horses of the City troop on each side. Cleveland Greys and Forty-second Ohio volunteers. The Cabinet, Gen. Sherman and aids, and guard of honor composed of officers of the army and distinguished guests.

Leaving the depot the cortege moved very slowly down Euclid avenue, the bells tolling, and people standing with uncovered heads. All the houses on the route of march were elaborately decorated. Arriving at Monumental Park, the remains were conveyed through the line of guards to the pavilion prepared for the lying in state until interment. The casket was placed by the pall-bearers on the dais underneath a canopy supported by four gilt Egyptian columns. On account of the feelings of the widow the face was not exposed, but instead was placed an admirable copy likeness, taken by J. F. Ryder on President Garfield's return from the Chicago Convention—a most natural portrait. On the shelves of the pavilion on either side were multitudes of floral offerings.

The park had been inclosed by steel wires. Because the decorations were not entirely finished no one outside of the committee was admitted to the pavilion during Saturday night. During Sunday a double line of militia was so placed that the public could walk past the casket three or four abreast, a privilege of which at least 160,000 persons availed themselves. A correspondent thus describes the impressive scenes of that memorable Sabbath in Cleveland:

"The Sabbath day opened with rain, but the clouds soon dissipated, and until nearly dark it was clear, warm and windy. The main entrances to the public square were thrown open to the public at 1 o'clock in the morning, and an hour before that time a procession began to form, which lengthened and stretched westward for three or four blocks, like an enormous human anaconda, wriggling to make progress. As the word was given the throng kept in perfect order by the police and militia guardsmen, pushed forward to the catafalque. At first they moved slowly, those in front pausing at the catafalque to pay more than a passing tribute to the dead President; but gradually the impatient mass in the rear caused an acceleration in the movement, and by 10 o'clock the two lines were pouring through the pavilion at the rate of 400 or 500 every five minutes, a speed that was maintained with little let-up until 9 o'clock at night. At times the line of mourners was a mile in length, the f rther end of the procession being lost to sight around the curve in the great viaduct leading off Superior street. There must have been 10,000 people in line most of the time, and there were counter processions of men, women and children leading from the square to the remote extremity of the line, where they fell in place and returned. Men and women of all classes and stations, as indicated by dress and appearance, were there, and there was no exhibition of ill-temper or impatience noticeable. Probably 45,000 pilgrims passed the shrine during the day and evening, and the streets and highways about the square and leading to it were packed all the time. It is no exaggeration to say that 125,000 people were on the streets within a radius of two blocks from the catafalque from sunrise to midnight.

"The catafalque at night was a citadel of glory. The ghastly glare of the electric lights, blending with the softer yet scarcely less brilliant flash from the monster headlight mounted on the main arch, shed upon the palace of death a halo that transformed it into a temple of almost supernatural beauty. None could view the spectacle without emotion, and thousands massed in the streets in front, gazing upon it in rapt admiration. Never had it appeared to such advantage before. It was incomparably beautiful, and, as a spectator whose soul was moved by the sight observed, "It is indeed befitting that a King of men should rest on such a splendid bier." The bronzed columns of the dais, with their chivalric mountings, glittered in the night like burnished gold, making blacker the sable drapery of the tomb of a day. The shields and swords and massive emblems that adorned the corner pieces of the structure, together with the funeral wreaths and other floral wrappings, so placed as to relieve the background of melancholy black, made a separate picture by themselves, a magnificent frame for the central figure, the whole forming what might well be called the glorious creation of an artist's dream."

On Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Garfield and her sons Harry and James visited Lake View Cemetery with Hon. J. H. Wade, and expressed her satisfaction with the site selected for the grave.

The Last Sad Rites—An Imposing Pageant.

The funeral obsequies of the lamented James Abram Garfield occurred at Cleveland, Ohio, on Monday, Sept. 26. The ceremonies began at the pavilion, in Monumental Square, at 10:30 o'clock. The immediate members of the family and near relatives and friends took seats about the casket, and at each corner was stationed a member of the Cleveland Grays, each of whom stood like a statue during the entire programme. The members of the committee about the pavilion were almost cloaked in crape, their drapings being very heavy.

The audience assembled to hear the last services of religion included Grandma Garfield, Mrs. Garfield, Miss Mollie, James, Harry, Abram and Irving Garfield. Following them were Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph, Colonel, Mrs. and Miss Rockwell, Gen. Swaim, Dr. and Mrs. Boynton, Captain and Mrs. Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon, Private Secretary Brown, and Mr. Warren Young, and all members of the Cabinet and their wives, as well as general officers of the army and navy, foreign Ambassadors, Governors of fourteen states, with staffs, and prominent citizens representing the large cities of the United States. Beside these there were an immense army, composed of the regular army, the citizen soldiery from various States, and a countless throng of secret and benevolent organizations.

The service commenced with singing the hymn, "Thou Art Gone to the Grave" (by Heber), followed by three portions of Holy Scripture read by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Bedell, Bishop of Ohio. Rev. Ross C. Houghton, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Cleveland, then offered prayer, after which the Rev. Isaac Errett, of the Church of the Disciples, Cincinnati, delivered an eloquent address. Dr. Errett was listened to with a close and earnest attention. He spoke for forty minutes, and when he closed a hush for a moment hung over the vast audience.

The Rev. Jabez Hale then read Garfield's favorite hymn, which was beautifully sung by the Vocal Society, as follows:

> Ho, reapers of life's harvest,
> Why stand with rusted blade
> Until the night draws round thee
> And the day begins to fade?
> Why stand ye idle waiting
> For reapers more to come?
> The golden morn is passing,
> Why sit ye idle, dumb?
> Thrust in your sharpened sickle
> And gather in the grain;
> The night is fast approaching,
> And soon will come again.
>
> The Master calls for reapers,
> And shall He call in vain?
> Shall sheaves lie there ungathered,
> And waste upon the plain?
>
> Mount up the heights of wisdom
> And crush each error low;
> Keep back no words of knowledge
> That human hearts should know.
>
> Be faithful to thy mission
> In service of thy Lord,
> And then a golden chaplet
> Shall be thy just reward.

Rev. Charles S. Pomeroy delivered the final prayer and benediction, after which the Washington Marine Band played "Nearer, My God to Thee."

A few minutes before 12 o'clock the military bodyguard from Washington moved up the east incline, entered the pavilion, halted at the bier, lifted the casket containing the nation's dust, ornamented only by the Queen Victoria wreath and John Hoey's sago palms, and reverently bore it on their broad and powerful shoulders to the elaborate funeral car in waiting near the east entrance. Imposing as was the cenotaph in the park pavilion, this somber carriage of the dead was even more so. Massive in its proportions, rich in its decorations, and solemn suggestiveness in all its parts, its general effect was peculiarly and lastingly impressive. It was built in the canopy form, on ponderous trucks, and topped with a roof sloping to and ending in a parallelogram, on which rested the typical black urn. The lowest portion nearest the ground was trimmed in heavy black broadcloth. Edged at the bottom was a massive black fringe and heavy cord. Behind a heavy crape hanging, set off with a silver fringe, were barely visible the stars and stripes of the national emblem. The black surface above was festooned with immortelles, while the three steps leading up to the floor of the car were edged with white, and the corner moldings covered with heavy black velvet. The catafalque proper, resting on the floor, was trimmed with heavy vertical folds of black broadcloth, the prevailing material throughout, edged at the top with silver fringe, and set off with heavy clusters of black crape. A white strap was attached to each of the four sides to hold the coffin in place. A black column, trimmed in bands of white, rose from each of the four corners of the car, and was supplemented by a draped battle-flag carried through the dust and blood and heat of the day at Chickamauga. From the upper step rose the Egyptian columns, three on a side, or six in all, supporting the canopy, and trimmed with immortelles and heavy vertical folds of black. Black festoons, edged with silver, trimmed with rosettes and wreaths of immortelles, depended from the roof on the outer surface. The roof was covered with folds of heavy black, trimmed with white rosettes and wreaths of immortelles, with a rayed ceiling of red, white and blue on the background. Black and white plumes ornamented the roof and surrounded the urn, which rested on the top, while eight small wreaths of immortelles were attached to the sides. Some idea of the massive character of the car can be obtained from a statement of its dimensions. The distance from the ground to the urn was twenty feet, while the platform itself measured eight by sixteen feet, and the bier twenty-eight inches by seven feet. Four black guy-ropes depended from the corner posts, and were held by black grooms, who were thus enabled to steady the motion of the car over rough places, and prevent its swaying to and fro on its journey to the cemetery. Twelve coal-black horses, four abreast, and covered with broadcloth neck and body cloths, edged with silver fringe, drew the somber object. Black and white plumes waved from their heads, while a groom at the head of each outer horse controlled its progress by a black-and-white halter-lead.

The only incident which occurred at the pavilion was the request of Grandma Garfield for a drink of water. Many persons construed this as an indication that the old lady was faint. Such was not the case, however.

The remains having been placed in the funeral car, the mourners retired from the pavilion and took their places in the carriages assigned to them. Mrs. Garfield, heavily veiled, entered the first one with the dead President's mother, and the boys, Harry, James and Abram. Col. Corbin, with Miss Mollie Garfield and young Irwin, entered the second. The relatives and friends came next, followed by the guard of honor, and the members of the Cabinet and their wives, ex-President and Mrs. Hayes, ex-Secretary Evarts, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the several State Executives and the remaining occupants of the platform, together with the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, the Mayors of cities, and the members of various Aldermanic bodies and the numerous local committees.

The funeral-car proceeded beyond the City Hall on Superior street, and stopped until the first carriage started. As the remaining carriages followed up, it continued its journey until it reached Erie street and the massive arch at that point. Turning into Euclid avenue, famous as perhaps the handsomest in the world, and decorated as it probably never will be again, with all the badges of mourning and insignia of grief, it joined in the procession of military organizations, Masonic societies and all the numerous civic and other organizations, and slowly wended its way, to the sound of funeral dirges, to the cemetery five miles away.

Though the several divisions dropped rather promptly and gracefully into line, it soon became too painfully apparent that there was altogether too much of the procession, and yet not a few societies were crowded out, owing to their late and unexpected arrival, or left with the cold consolation of being privileged to drop in at the rear, when it was morally impossible for them ever to reach the cemetery, if they stayed there until the head had arrived at Lake View, witnessed the obsequies, and should be ready to turn round and come home. As a matter of fact, the tail of the procession rested down town while the head was at the cemetery, while, if every society and club which wanted to march had persisted in doing so, the procession would have been swollen to unreasonable proportions. The military presented a magnificent scene. The column was headed by that veteran volunteer organization, the Boston Fusileers, who had traveled from Massachusetts in order to pay a last tribute to their deceased comrade by participating in the obsequies.

Arrived at the cemetery, the pall-bearers alighted and took their positions on either side of the carpet walk to the vault, while the two eldest sons of the dead President, Harry and James, joined those on the right in company with the inevitable and omnipresent Rockwell and Swaim. Mrs. Garfield sat at her carriage window, her veil removed, and her tearless eyes revealing the mental struggle she was undergoing in her determination to bear up bravely under her load of grief. The steps to the vault were carpeted with flowers, and on either side of the entrance were an anchor of tuberoses and a cross, while smilax and evergreens were festooned above. A heavy, black canopy was stretched over the steps from which the exercises were to be conducted.

At 3:30 o'clock the procession entered the gateway, which was arched over with black, with appropriate inscriptions. In the keystone were the words "Come to rest." On one side were the words, "Lay him to rest whom we have learned to love;" on the other, "Lay him to rest whom we have learned to trust." A massive cross of evergreens swung from the center of the arch. The United States Marine Band, continuing the sweet, mournful strains it had kept up during the entire march, entered first. Then came the Forest City Troop of Cleveland, which was the escort of the President to his inauguration. Behind it came the funeral car, with its escort of twelve United States artillerymen, followed by a battalion of Knights Templar and the Cleveland Grays. The mourners' carriages and those containing the guard of honor comprised all of the procession that entered the grounds. The cavalry halted at the vault and drew up in line, facing it with sabers presented. The car drew up in front with the mourners' carriages and those of the Cabinet behind. The band played "Nearer My God to Thee" as the military escort lifted the coffin from the car and carried it into the vault, the local Committee of Reception, Secretary Blaine, Marshal Henry and one or two personal friends standing at either side of the entrance. None of the President's family except two of the boys left the carriages during the exercises, which occupied less than half an hour. Dr. J. H. Robison, as President of the day, opened the exercises by introducing the Rev. J. H. Jones, Chaplain of the Forty-second regiment, Ohio volunteer infantry, which Gen. Garfield commanded. Mr. Jones paid an earnest tribute to the memory of the deceased, after which the Latin ode of Horace was sung by the United German Society. Translated into English, this beautiful ode reads as follows:

"The man of upright life and pure from wickedness, O Fuscus, has no need of the Moorish javeline or bow, or quiver loaded with poisoned darts. Whether he is about to make his journey through the sultry Syrtes of the inhospitable Caucasus, or those places which Hydaspes, celebrated in story, washes. For lately, as I was singing my Lalage, and wandered beyond my usual bounds, devoid of care, a wolf in the Sabine wood fled from me, though I was unarmed; such a monster as neither the warlike Apulia nourishes in its extensive woods, nor the land of Juba, the dry nurse of lions, produces. Place me in those barren plains, where no tree is refreshed by the genial air; at that part of the world which clouds and an inclement atmosphere infest. Place me under the chariot of the too-neighboring sun, in the land deprived of habitation, there will I love my sweetly-smiling, sweetly-speaking Lalage."

Mr. Robison then announced the late President's hymn, "Ho, Reapers of Life's Harvest," which the German vocal societies of Cleveland sang with marked effect. The exercises closed with the benediction by President Hinsdale, of Hiram College, who was introduced by Dr. Robison. Mr. Hinsdale said:

"O God! the sad experience of this day teaches us the truth of what Thou has told us in Thy word. The grave is the last of this world, and the end of life. Earth to earth; dust to dust; ashes to ashes. But we believe in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and in the power of the endless life. Therefore, O God! our Father, we look to Thee now for the greatest blessing. We pray that fellowship and salvation of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Savior, and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, may be with all who have been in to-day's assembly. Amen."

The last words had no sooner died on his lips than those in the immediate proximity of the vault pressed forward and gathered up handfuls of flowers and hemlock twigs as precious mementoes of the solemn scene. A large rose, a geranium and a sprig of hemlock were carried to Mrs. Garfield, who pressed them to her lips and treasured them as a priceless boon. The general crowd broke in about this time, and in less time than it takes to tell it the rich carpet of flowers and sprigs had almost vanished, and was being carried off in pieces by the relic-hunters. A guard was left at the vault, the procession returned, and in a few moments more the line of mourners was wending its way back to the city, the Cabinet officers stopping at the Euclid Avenue Station, where they took their special train back to Washington, Mrs. Garfield returning to the residence of Mrs. James Mason, where she remained until the following day, when she embarked on the saddest journey of all, the trip to her once happy Mentor home.

It is estimated that 300,000 people were in the streets of Cleveland during the progress of the funeral procession, and that from 100,000 to 150,000 of these were strangers. Some of the adjacent towns were almost depopulated.

At Mrs. Garfield's suggestion, the casket containing the late President will be inclosed in an iron cage. Then a cement wall will be built around this of sufficient strength to resist all attempts to remove the body, and of dimensions enough to form the foundation for the proposed monument. The Mayor of the city detailed a police force to be on duty continually until the final interment.

A meeting of Governors of States present in Cleveland was held previous to the funeral obsequies, at which were present Govs. Cornell, of New York; Bigelow, of Connecticut; Ludlow, of New Jersey; Jackson, of West Virginia; Hawkins, of Tennessee; Pitkin, of California; Cullom, of Illinois; Blackburn, of Kentucky; Smith, of Wisconsin; Gear, of Iowa, and others. Gov. Blackburn, of Kentucky, was unanimously chosen Chairman, and, on motion of Gov. Cornell, of New York, Govs. Bigelow, of Connecticut, and Hawkins, of Tennessee, were appointed a Committee on Resolutions. After a brief consultation the committee reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

"We, the Governors of ——, assembled to assist in the funeral ceremonies of our dead President, resolve that, by his murder, our nation has lost a gallant soldier, an unselfish patriot, one of the purest and ablest statesmen of the age, and a Chief Magistrate whose brief but brilliant administration commands the approval of all sections of the republic.

"Resolved, That we have observed with profound gratitude all citizens of the republic, regardless of rank, class or party, sharing alike in the unbounded sorrow of our common country for the death of President Garfield, and in this see the assurance of the people of the nation that we are in the presence of an era of peace and fraternal friendship for many years past unknown in the republic.

"Resolved, That, while we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, in this hour of our supreme sorrow we record our appreciation of his intellectual worth, his many great virtues, and his perfect Christian character.

"Resolved, That we tender our profound sympathy to the bereaved mother, widow and children of the illustrious dead in their terrible affliction.

"Resolved, That we extend to President Arthur our earnest sympathy, and we sincerely hope and believe the nation will unite in sustaining him in his noble and patriotic resolution to carry out the policy and measures of his lamented predecessor.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the bereaved family and to the press of the country."

Memorial Services Elsewhere.

All over the United States, in Canada and in many parts of Great Britain, business was wholly suspended, religious services were held in the churches in the morning and were very largely attended. In the evening there were meetings in halls and churches, at which the great public services of the illustrious dead were referred to, and in which his character was fittingly eulogized. The funeral procession in Chicago was the largest and, all considered, the most remarkable which ever occurred in that city. It consisted of all the military organizations, all the principal secret bodies, the postoffice and other Governmental and municipal officers and subordinates, national and benevolent societies, numbering not less than 15,000 men, and by some estimated at twice that number. The grand array took nearly two hours to pass a given point. The city of Chicago never before experienced what may be termed a total suspension of business. There was not a transaction in financial or commercial circles; the Union Stockyards were utterly closed, for the first time in their history; scarcely a saloon in the city opened its doors during the hours occupied by the procession, and even drug stores added to the general quiet by ceasing to do business. In truth, in every city and village in the United States—North, South, East and West—the solemn ceremonies enacted at Cleveland were remembered with less imposing, but not less earnest and regretful, services.

In Great Britain, from one end of the island to the other, memorial services and meetings were held, bells were tolled, flags were displayed at half-mast, shops were partially closed, and private residences and hotels had drawn curtains.

The bells at Windsor Castle were tolled for an hour, and there were services in Westminster Abbey, at which Canons Farrar, Duckworth and Cheadle assisted. The city of London was liberally draped in mourning and the Manchester Guardian appeared with mourning borders.

A GEORGIA farmer mistook his ragged son for his scarecrow at a distance, and playfully shot a bullet into him.

About Earning Money.

If anybody knows the value of money to the individual, it is a woman. A man may look at it in a wiser sense and think of the National debt and investments and mortgages, but in small sums it cannot after all be of half the importance to him that it is to a woman, who wants yards of ribbon and pounds of beads, bits of velvet, silk and lace, gilt things, silvered things, combs, bracelets, bangles and little bags, which could be of no use to one of the sex whose wear is cloth of various sad colors, and who, having a watch, a scarf-pin, a collar button, and a ring on his little finger, is provided with jewelry for life.

And yet who ever heard of a rational poor man who did not desire and did not make money whenever it was possible? While horror seizes the soul of many an impecunious young woman at the thought of earning a cent. Happily, a broader view of the matter is taken by a great many young women, from the sweet girl graduate who hopes to be a doctor or a lawyer to the mechanic's daughter who early announces her intention of learning a trade. But still, in many a home where there is not half enough to provide for all, women draw themselves together and, even while they suffer privation, boast that they never earned anything.

An old father comes wearily home, after a long day's toil; a young brother breaks down with cares that are too great for him, and still the superstition that it degrades a woman to work for her own living will prevail among half a dozen sisters forced to small economies as their sugar in their tea and butter on their bread, to shabbiness and the attacks of infuriated tradesmen who naturally desire to be paid their little bills. They will do anything but "work for money."

Every day, as they peep from their windows at the world, they see happy, well dressed women in the professions and in many trades, going to and fro to their work, comfortable with the wages in their pockets. They hear the notes of the piano by which some women, no more accomplished than they, earn a little fortune as a teacher. Opposite is a flower painter who has pupils and sells her pictures.

But they say to each other and to their friends, "This would be impossible for us; we never earned a penny." And people are apt to say: "The Miss Hysons are so proud. They come of such a good family. They cannot condescend to work."

But are they proud? As a rule, the ladies who scorn to earn money do not scorn to take it as a gift. Their natural protectors gone, they will quarter themselves on any relative that will open his house for them—a cousin, a cousin's cousin—any small plea of relationship is sufficient.

They will actually go a-begging in a delicate and dainty way amongst friends and receive anything any one chooses to give.

And it is well known to every one that any offer of marriage to one of them which promises a comfortable home will be accepted.

This is the best end to be hoped for, but if the girls are not attractive they pass from one long suffering relative to another until they are "brought into" Old Ladies' Homes or placed into genteel institutions, where they still boast with their latest breath of their gentility and are as proud of never having earned a penny as they should be ashamed of it. Certainly there are fewer such women in the world to-day than there were twenty years ago, but there are still enough to shame good, independent girls out of efforts in which they should be encouraged, with the old bugaboo story that "ladies never work for a livelihood." Ladies do, ladies will, if there is any need of it; for a true lady would rather do anything honest than be an object of charity; and in a womanly way quite consistent with all feminine charms, rejoices in the possibility of independence.—Mary Kyle Dallas.

A New Use for Criminals.

An Australian paper thinks there is a better use to which men can be put than hanging them. Instead of punishing convicted criminals in that way, it would turn them over to the doctors to be experimented upon for the cure of diseases like cholera, yellow fever, cancer, hydrophobia, consumption, etc., for which no certain remedy has ever been found. It would provide that if the criminal survived the experiments he should be entitled to his life. For example, a malefactor might be drowned until, in the ordinary sense of the word, he was pronounced dead by the experimenting physicians. Then, if he was resuscitated, he should gain his liberty. Let another be bitten by an unmistakably rabid dog, and if he was cured after a well defined attack of hydrophobia that should constitute his certificate of reprieve. Others should be poisoned, inoculated with various contagious diseases, and be subjected to death by the various maladies which have defeated and defied the combined skill of the medical fraternity, and in the case of every one where a sure and definite remedy should be discovered such criminal should thereby expiate his crime, and by his contribution to science for the benefit of the world he should earn and receive a full pardon. It thinks this would be not only a more effective deterrent of crime, but it would have the advantage of making worthless men useful.

Dangers from Pyemia.

Pyemia often works to its fatal end slowly. It breaks out in an abscess here, an abscess there. Defeated at one point, it intrenches itself in an another, gaining on all resistance and often intractable to medicine and surgery. Its victim dies at last of exhaustion. A woman was shot in New York by a delinquent boarder. The bullet penetrated her cerebral cavity, just as in the President's case it penetrated the abdominal cavity. She survived the shock, the secondary hemorrhage and the inflammation. In about four weeks pyemia set in. The first abscess was in the neck and reached to the base of the brain. It produced, of course, softening of the affected lobe, but she did not die of that grave complication. Six weeks later a huge abscess formed in the region bounded by her right shoulder blade and her right hip. Exhaustion followed at once, and she died.

No ROOM was ever made large enough to hold both a fat man and a mosquito.

HOLMAN'S PAD
CURES Without MEDICINE
Simply by Absorption
TRADE MARK.
The Only True Malarial Antidote.

DR. HOLMAN'S PAD is no guess-work remedy—no feeble imitative experiment—no purloined hodge podge of some other inventor's ideas; it is the original and only genuine curative Pad, the only remedy that has an honestly-acquired right to use the title-word "Pad" in connection with a treatment for chronic diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Spleen.

By a recently perfected improvement Dr. HOLMAN has greatly increased the scope of the Pad's usefulness, and appreciably augmented its active curative power.

This great improvement gives HOLMAN'S PAD (with its Adjuvants) such complete and unfailing control over the most persistent and unyielding forms of Chronic Disease of the Stomach and Liver, as well as Malarial Blood-Poisoning, as to amply justify the eminent Professor Loomis' high encomium: "IT IS NEARER A UNIVERSAL PANACEA THAN ANYTHING IN MEDICINE!"

The success of HOLMAN'S PADS has inspired imitators who offer Pads similar in form and odor to the genuine HOLMAN PAD. Beware of these Bogus and Imitation Pads, gotten up to sell on the reputation of the GENUINE HOLMAN PAD.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD COMPANY with the above Trade Mark printed in green.

Detroit, Sept. 26, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: This city presents a solemn aspect. Every business house is closed. The city is draped from north to south and from east to west, and some of the principal buildings from their tops to their base. The court house alone is wearing one hundred and fifty bolts of mourning, at a cost of about five hundred dollars. Flags at half mast trimmed in black are seen everywhere. Bands are playing most solemn funeral marches. The militia and home guards in uniforms, step to the solemn beat of the drum, as they march up one street and down another. Their guns draped in black, in honor of Ohio's self made, most honored son, James A. Garfield. Business in Windsor, Canada, is suspended for the day. British flags at half mast. British ships draped. The river itself presents almost as solemn scenery as Detroit.

Holloway's Pills.

Never despair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's Pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. Read the advertisement elsewhere.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HAYDOCK surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. Boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large proportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SOLID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

For sale by all Jewelers. Ask for Illustrated Catalogue, and to see warrant.

The Gold Placers of the West.

Some of the richest gold placers of the west have been formed by extinct streams. In New Mexico, a year ago, I saw gravel beds abounding in the yellow dust, covering thousands of acres, where no brook nor river now runs. They are the pulverized debris of prehistoric mountains which rose to much higher altitudes than their now abraded remains. Down the sides of these ancient hills great torrents poured where now not even a rivulet can be found. Again, great glaciers or other tremendous agencies of nature have sometimes deposited great hills or mountains over old river beds, so that, in mining, the courses of what appear to have been subterranean streams may be traced. In some instances the material of which these underground river beds are formed carries gold in considerable quantities, and, in California especially, the superincumbent mountains are also frequently rich placers. In the golden state some of these mountains have been removed by hydraulic power, the gold separated from the sand and gravel, and the debris, called tailings, deposited in the valleys, filling them up to great depths.

As placers are generally discovered in a new mining district before quartz mines, so those placers that are in the beds of present streams are more easily found than those of ancient, extinct rivers or subterranean streams. The earliest mining is in the gulches. That there is gold in a region where it was not before known to exist, is generally first discovered by accident. A freshet tears up the loose sand and gravel on the bed of a stream and carries it away, exposing the particles of gold which are too heavy to be moved by the water. This was the way the first gold was discovered in the stream at Sutter's mill, in California. In New Mexico and Arizona, where there are large ancient placer deposits with no water now running through them, heavy rains sometimes make gullies in the mesas or tablelands, and after the showers the Mexicans search along the bottoms of them and pick up the small particles of gold that are exposed and save them in little vials made of goose-quills. In the Black Hills the Indians picked up these grains of gold and some large nuggets, and knew where they could be found many years before white people went to that country. A good French Catholic missionary, Father De Smet, who labored among the Indians for many years, advised them, as they prized their homes and hunting-grounds, never to let the white people see the golden nuggets which they had collected, rightly believing that the Sioux would be immediately driven out and the white people would take possession of their country, treaty or no treaty. But the secret was too important a one to be kept always, and after the good priest's death a rumor got abroad of gold in the Black Hills; then Custer was sent in there by the government to make an exploration, which resulted in the verification of the vague reports, and after that the United States army was not large enough to keep the people out.—[Z. L. White in Providence Sunday Star.

The Reason Why.

The tonic effect of Kidney-Wort is produced by its cleansing and purifying action on the blood. Where there is a gravelly deposit in the urine, or milky, ropy urine from disordered kidneys, it cures without fail. Constipation and piles readily yield to its cathartic and healing power. Put up in dry vegetable form or liquid (very concentrated), either act prompt and sure.—[Troy Budget.

"I declare if there isn't the deacon's daughter out with a bran new shawl. Well, I never." "Hush!" said a better-informed female; "'tisn't hers. It's one she borrowed from the company that's visiting over t' the deacon's." "Well, there's one thing I know. She can't depend on borrowing to look well in heaven. She'll have to wear her own angel plumage when she gets there." And they both bowed their heads as the minister opened the services.—[New Haven Register.

Fuel Here and There.

One of the discomforts of a winter in Continental Europe is the lack of such fires for heating as we think essential in American houses. If one has a long purse, and does not mind the expense, they can be had there as here, but were one in Paris or Rome to indulge in such roaring fires as we keep constantly going in furnaces and grates, it would be regarded even by the wealthy as an extravagance surpassing that of the Roman Emperors. To be sure the houses are so built as not to be as susceptible of changes of temperature as those in which the majority of our people live. The walls and partitions are thicker, the windows and doors closer fitted, and they retain the heat longer. Then the stoves in use there for heating are constructed so that a comparatively small part of the heat is wasted. But even with all these precautions an American, accustomed to generous and blazing coal and wood fires, finds the apartments warmed sufficient for the comfort of the native cold, and shivers as he recalls the fires blazing on his native hearth.

He learns with surprise in Paris that the wood with which his dinner is cooked or his shins warmed is sold by the pound, and is weighed out to the purchaser as carefully as butter, sugar or coffee. A handful of twigs, such as in America would be allowed to rot, costs five cents, and better wood at proportionate prices. So fires on the continent are a luxury, and in many houses are, except for cooking, not seen the year round.

But if fires are expensive and fuel scarce and high in Continental Europe, what shall we say of Japan, where charcoal, split wood, brush and dried grass are used for cooking and heating booths and is hardly ever used outside the cities for purely heating purposes.

The charcoal is made in wooded regions and carried to the settlements in straw sacks on the backs of men and horses. A good comfortable fire, such as our people must have to keep them warm, would cost several dollars a day.

But our extravagance in fuel diminishes with the year and the increasing cost of fuel. We will travel a good ways, and have then to seek communities remote from railroads, to find such wood fires as kept the log cabins and frame houses of the pioneers warm. The great fire places, with their wide fronts and immense chimneys, their great andirons, back-logs, fore-logs and sections of seasoned split wood four or five feet long, piled high, are hardly known save in remote settlements. But we make almost as extravagant use of coal as our fathers did of wood, and will probably continue to do so till the cost of it compels a study of economy in the methods of heating houses, and servants are instructed how to manage fires so as to secure the most heat with the least amount of fuel.—[Cincinnati Commercial.

That Pie.

"I will thank you for that pie," said a fellow boarder. "I was thinking who was king of England when this old pie was baked, and it made me feel bad to know how long he has been dead."

Our landlady is a decent body, poor, and a widow, of course; cela va sans dire. She told me her story once. There was the wooing and the wedding, the start in life, the disappointment, the children she had buried, the dismantling of life; first of its luxuries, then of its comforts, the altered character of one on whom she had leaned, and at last the death that drew the black curtain between her and all earthly hopes.

I never laughed at my landlady, but I often cried, not those pattering tears that run off the leaves, but those which steal noiselessly through their conduits until they reach the cisterns lying round the heart, such I shed for her when the imps of the boarding-house inferno tugged at her soul with their red-hot pincers.

"Young man," I said, "the pastry you speak lightly of is not old, but courtesy to those who labor to serve us, especially if they are of the weaker sex, is very old, yet worth retaining."

Don't Get the Chills.

If you are subject to ague, you must be sure to keep your liver, bowels and kidneys in good, free condition. When so, you will be safe from all attacks. The remedy to use is Kidney-Wort. It is the best preventative of all malarial diseases that you can take. See advertisement in another column.

General Sheridan's Hat.

It is only natural that great generals who commanded thousands of men in the late war should frequently meet men in different parts of the country who cherish some incident of war life with which general and private were closely connected. It is doubtful if Gen. Phil. Sheridan, whose famous twenty-mile ride to Winchester has made his name familiar to every household, ever met a man who brought up a pleasanter reminiscence than a brown-faced, hardy miner did in this city.

Gen. Sheridan was idly sauntering up and down the lobby of the Windsor hotel, deep in thought and complacently puffing his Havana, and blowing the smoke into pretty rings. Suddenly a rough-looking man, with face so heavily bearded that one could see nothing but the twinkling black eyes, approaching him, and raising his hat with awkward embarrassment, said:

"Good morning, General."

The hero of Winchester returned the greeting, touching his hat with military politeness, and then, trying to peer through the miner's heavy beard to get a glimpse of his features, the general asked:

"I'm afraid I've forgotten your face, sir."

The eyes of the man from Gunnison twinkled brighter than ever as he remarked:

"It's not unlikely, General; seein's we never met but once before, you wouldn't be so apt to remember me as I am you. It's seventeen years since I saw you last. Things have changed since then. It was on the battle-field of Cedar Creek. Don't you remember the soldier that gave you his horse when yours was shot from under you by a shower of canister from the masked battery on the brow of the hill?" and the old man looked up with eager pride into the general's face.

"That I do," answered the general, with pleased interest and a bright flash in his eye, "I remember it well."

"I was that soldier," continued the miner, proudly. "I remember the circumstance well, sir. When you put your spurs to my horse and galloped off, you left your hat behind you, and I called to you as loud as I could, but you replied, 'Never mind the hat, my boy.' I've got that hat yet, General. It's hanging in my cabin in the mountain," and the rough old fellow's eyes glowed with pleasure.

Sheridan grasped his hand and led him to a seat, and for half an hour they fought the battle of Cedar Creek over again.—[Denver Tribune.

Major Allan Pinkerton was born in Gorbals, city of Glasgow, Scotland, August 19, 1819, and came to this country in 1841. After a short residence in this city he went to Dundee, Kane co., Ill., ran a cooper shop there for several years. He was appointed deputy sheriff, and, having good success, was induced in 1849 to accept the same position under William L. Church, then sheriff of Cook county. In 1851 he was appointed detective, the first Chicago ever had, by Mayor Gurney. In 1853 he organized his detective agency, which has been in operation ever since and is now famous the world over. He was called upon by President Lincoln to organize the secret service of the United States for the Army and Treasury departments. He remained in charge of the goverment detectives at Washington and with the Army of the Potomac, under the Secretary of War and Generals Burnside, McClellan and Hooker. At his own request, in 1863, he was transferred to the Military Division of the southwest under Major General Canby, and remained there till the close of the war, with headquarters at New Orleans. In the mean time his Chicago agency had been run by Ed. Bucker, and, when the chief returned, the agency was immediately reorganized. In 1865 he started an office in New York, of which Robert A. Pinkerton is now superintendent, and in 1866 he opened another in Philadelphia, of which Robert J. Linden is the present superintendent. There are 350 employes in the different agencies, all drawing salaries, and none of them are permitted to receive rewards or gratitudes of any kind. The Chicago office is the headquarters, and there Allan himself, with his 63 years, can daily be found, being on hand early in the morning, and always attentive to his duties.

An Irishman wrote this to the wife of a sick brother: "If Jamie isn't dead yet, remoind him of the twenty shillings he owes me on the pigs, and if he is, tell him not to give himself any consurren about it."

BITTERSWEET.

I walked along the hedge's row,
Where tangled vines and milkweed grew.

The sun was blazing overhead;
Each rugged leaf with dust was red.

No flower bloomed along the line,
On either side the land lay parched.

I said, This way is like to mine;
No flowers along my pathway shine!

Nor grace nor beauty meet my eyes,
But up-hill paths and scorching skies.

Later, I walked the hedge's way—
The birds were gone, the pasture gray.

What sudden glory greets my eyes!
The borrowed hues of sunset dyes.

The graceful vine twined round and round
With beauty all the line has crowned.

Scarlet and gold, the berries glow
With splendor summer could not show.

Again the lesson holdeth fast;
The glory came to me at last.

And beauty in these later days
Makes up for earlier rugged ways.

The happy tears shut out the sight.
Father, Thy way is always right.

THE PARSON'S NEW COAT.

The village of Buzzville having gone safely through the canning and preserving season; having with praiseworthy zeal carried off the palm as regarded the "Annual County Fair," over and above the surrounding towns; having shone conspicuously in an elaborate "Harvest Festival" for their church—and yet surviving, now cast about for other worlds to conquer before settling down for the winter.

"Our minister needs a new coat," said Miss Mirandy Stebbins, rattling her knitting-needles in huge delight at first producing an idea; "he does, most dreadful bad, an' that's a fact. Hain't any of you noticed how shiny it's got?" She cast a reproachful glance on all of the circle—who, while they waged war on unbleached cotton and red flannel, also carried on admirably the war with tongues—and then proceeded: "An' I say it's a cryin' shame to see him git up into that pulpit another Sunday with that old coat on. Somethin' must be done. I'm awful glad I thought of it."

"You hain't thought of it any quicker'n anybody else," spoke up little Mrs. Bisbee, a stout, buxom matron, with flaming cheeks; and her black eyes flashed defiance. "'Tain't alwus talkin' folks has the first idea. I've ben a-thinkin' of that same thing for some time now," she added, with a venomous snap at the placid figure behind the rattling needles. "An' I shall do my best to git the parson one," she added, the best rye-bread premium, which Miss Mirandy had successfully carried off before her very eyes at the County Fair, urging her on.

"I shall begin a subscription right straight off, this very minute," cried Miss Mirandy, with great determination, and starting from her chair, ignoring her rival completely. "How much will you give, Mrs. Bassett?" she asked, going into the center of the group to attack the "Square's wife."

"An' I shall start one, with my own name first, before I ask other folks to give," exclaimed little Mrs. Bisbee, triumphantly, with an unpleasant laugh at Mirandy, who was known to be "tight as the bark of a tree." "I'll give $5," she added, in a loud voice, determined to go without her new winter bonnet sooner than that her rival should carry the day.

"An' I'll join you with another $5," spoke up the "Square's wife," looking from Miss Mirandy to the stout little figure with flaming cheeks. "Now, then, Mrs. Bisbee, that's a good start, I'm sure."

There was no show now for the spinster's side, since, for various reasons of her own, the "Square's wife" had gone over to her rival. So she stalked back to her rocking-chair grimly, took up her knitting work and watched, as best she might, the subscriptions grow enthusiastically under other hands than her own. At last, as the laughter and excitement progressed on all sides, she was utterly unable to bear it another moment longer, and, jumping up, she mumbled something about "must be home," and flounced out of the room.

"I'm glad she's gone," said the "Square's wife," as the door closed after the retreating form of the spinster; "I'm sick to death of havin' her always come to me for subscriptions; an' she never gives the first cent herself."

"She wouldn't see the need of the parson's coat, if she had to open that pocket-book of hern," said a tall, square-built matron, who looked as if she had plenty of opinions of her own, and could express them when occasion required.

"Gracious!" ejaculated little Mrs. Bisbee, with a short laugh; "who ever saw that pocket-book anyway? I never did, an' I don't b'lieve any of you have seen."

"A cent's as big as a cart-wheel to her," said the big square woman, who didn't love Miss Mirandy to death. "It runs in the family. They wouldn't any of 'em open their mouths to breathe if they didn't git somethin' at the same time they giv it out."

"Well, she won't put anythin' in her mouth this time," observed the "Square's wife," laughing and settling back comfortably. "It's the first sewin' meetin', I guess, where she's gone home before tea."

"An' it means somethin' to go home before tea from Mrs. Deacon Higby's," exclaimed little Mrs. Bisbee, enthusiastically, with an energetic bob of her black curls over at the hostess. "So she's lost her cake an' credit too."

"I don't know,'" said Mrs. Deacon Higby, deprecatingly, though she dimpled all over with delight at the implied praise to her suppers. "My doughnuts ain't so light as usual, an' the cup-cake ain't ris quite as I'd like it. The deacon come home last night in a chill, an' I run in the midst of everything to give him a camfire sweat. So I didn't hev as good luck as I set out to have."

Notwithstanding these lamentable failures, the round, comfortable visage of Mrs. Deacon Higby presented a series of rippling smiles that threatened to eclipse every feature of her expressive face, while she smoothed her fat hands complacently together.

"Oh, well, you can talk," said little Mrs. Bisbee, energetically, and beginning to count up her list of subscriptions to the parson's new coat, "but we all know, as well as the next one, what your cookin' is. Fifteen, twenty, twenty-one, no, twenty-two—Mrs. Spencer Higginson's makes twenty-two—twenty-five, twenty-eight, thirty, thirty-one—thirty-one an' a quarter. Oh, dear! what a pity 'twan't jest an even thirty-two!"

"I'll make it up," said the "Square's wife," quickly, enjoying the distinction of being the only woman in the room to whom a dollar or two more or less didn't make a matter worth a moment's consideration. "Now, then, thirty-two dollars ought to git a real first-rate article. Where'll we buy it? that's the question?"

Hereupon ensued a lively discussion, the deacon's wife favoring employing the village tailor, and, as he was second cousin to her husband, family reasons might have something to do with her opinion. Some of the ladies falling in with her, the idea would soon have been carried, but for the warlike, determined attitude of the other party, who decidedly favored the coat being made out of town.

"Twill be lots more stylish," said Mrs. Bassett, the "Square's wife," with an undeniable air that took immensely. "I shan't approve in the least its being done here. When we give anything, let's give a good one. How we should feel to see the parson up in the pulpit with anything but the best on!"

The view of the parson from his high perch dispensing spiritual things, with any thing less than a town-made coat adorning his person, was a sight that even in imagination so filled the circle with disfavor that the whole roomful in a body went over immediately to the side of the "Square's wife." All but Mrs. Deacon Higby. She remained firm, while the round visage lengthened ominously, and the little eyes snapped.

"An' if you think 'Biah Williams would make any but a good coat, you're much mistaken," she cried, with indignation. "I must take back my subscription, then, for the deacon never'd hear to my givin' his second cousin on his mother's side sech an insult, ef the parson never saw a coat." And, all her feathers ruffled, she sat straight up, and glared at them all.

Now it never would do to offend Deacon Higby in all the world; everybody saw that at a glance; so, with many sidelong looks at each other, each lady began to cast about how she might gracefully wriggle back on to the other side without arousing the wrath of the "Square's wife."

"I s'pose we had orter employ our own church people," said little Mrs. Bisbee, thoughtfully, seeing no one else was willing to take it up. "An', besides," she added, brightly, "p'r'aps, seein' it's for the parson, 'Biah Williams may do it considerable cheaper. So we'll save a good deal."

"I don't know whether he will or not," said the deacon's wife, sturdily. "I ain't in 'Biah's business, an' I ain't a-goin' to say what I don't know nothin' about. But I do say, if the job is taken away from him, an' he a church member in good an' regular standin', to give it out down in the city, why, the deacon 'll be so mad he won't git over it in one spell, I can tell you."

"Yes, I do think," said little Mrs. Bisbee, reflectively, and giving a swift, comprehensive look at the "Square's wife" at the same time that she administered, under the big table where the work was being cut out, an admonitory pinch on that lady's toes, "that probably 'Biah Williams won't charge near so much. We don't know, you know, but probably he won't. An' then, besides, 'twould look rather queer to hev us go outside, you know, to git some one else to do the work. They'd think the 'First Church in Buzzville' had quarreled, maybe," and she finished up with a laugh.

"So they would, so they would," cried every lady present, delighted to find that some one else had done them the good service of whirling them over safely. "We wouldn't go out of Buzzville for anythin'; an' 'Biah Williams is jest the one to do it," they added, determined to do nothing by halves.

So, oil having been poured upon the troubled waters of Mrs. Deacon Higby's spirit, she considered her husband's family honor to be thoroughly vindicated, and, resuming her former jolly expression, she set about preparing to pass around the fragrant tea and the abundance of good cheer that accompanied it; and a committee of three—Mrs. Squire Bassett, Mrs. Bisbee, and, in compliment to her relationship to the aforesaid 'Biah Williams, Mrs. Deacon Higby—was unanimously appointed to confer with the tailor and order the coat.

Feeling quite sure at this point that duty had been done and full reparation for any fancied insult to the deacon's pride had been made, they one and all, in a highly exalted frame of mind, energetically set to work on the supper.

"I never see such eaters," said a muffled voice. The remark was addressed, in the depths of a big closet full of all sorts of family lumber and cast-off articles, to another person, who, like the owner of the voice, was crammed in a most uncomfortable position up against the door that led into the "keepin'-room," where the sewing society was convened. "Whackety! if we should eat so much, I guess ma 'd whip us. Just look at Miss Bassett stuff!"

Thereupon the other figure bounced up with great difficulty to get a good view from the keyhole. When he had gotten his eye fixed, he drew a long breath. "Whew! don't she, though! An' see Miss Henderson. Her nose is a yard long. Look at her bite into that biscuit!"

"Let me see—let me see," exclaimed the boy on the floor, crowding up to push the other away from the keyhole. "That's my place. Get away, Tom, I say. I want to see."

"'Tain't your place any more'n 'tis mine," retorted the other, in an awful whisper that, but for the rattle of cups and saucers going on on the other side of the door, must needs have been heard. "The closet b'longs to both of us; so, of course, the keyhole does."

"Well, I want to see once," said the first boy, waiving the point of exclusive rights; "so git away, or I'll holler;" and he gave a smart push to the figure enjoying a view of the society that caused it to take its eye quickly away from the key-hole, while he resented his wrongs.

"If you do, you won't git nothin' only a whackin', an' I'll cut an' run," he declared savagely, dumping down into the vacant place on the floor. "So do look if you want ter; then you've got to give the place back."

"She's beginnin' on another," cried the victor, as loudly as he dared. "Oh! my jimmies! I say, Tom—"

"What?" said Tom, gloomily, on the floor.

"There won't be a scrap left for us if they keep on eatin' like that. The rix cake's a-goin' just awful! Let's go out in the back yard and holler 'Fire,' an' start 'em home."

"Oh, no, we mustn't," cried Tom, in alarm; "that will spoil the whole. "They can't eat much more," he added, decidedly. "An' then, after we've had our supper, we'll start an' tell all we know. Hain't we heard lots?" he asked, enthusiastically.

"Lots!" declared his brother; "I guess we have. Just twice as much as we did at last s'ciety; then 'twas all about Jinny Ann Rogers; that warn't no fun at all."

"Let's go to Cousin 'Biah's first," said Tom, eagerly, "an' mad him all up; an' then we'll cut 'cross lots to Miss M'randy's. Let's, Joe."

"All right," said Joe. "I don't care which one we go to first. Oh dear! I wish they was through."

But before he could plaster his pale blue eye up to the key-hole again the enterprising Thomas already had possession of that outlook; so he was forced to content himself with conjuring up new dark plans on the floor.

At last they had the supreme pleasure of seeing and hearing the biscuits, cake and tea passed out to the kitchen; when, losing no time, they speedily took themselves out to the charms of a supper with no one by to restrain.

When they had finally eaten until not another crumb was possible they each grasped his cap, and flew as fast as possible on their pleasant errand.

"I wouldn't 'a believed it." Mr. 'Biah Williams brought his hand down hard on his knee, then stared at his wife.

"I would," she said, spitefully. "They're a mean, hateful set. It's just what I've alwus told you, 'Biah, only you would have your own way. Now I guess you'll go over to the Methodists."

"I'll go to the Methodists next Sunday, Sarah, if you want ter," said Mr. Williams, decidedly. "I'll jine a church where the folks ain't too big for their clothes."

"Ain't too big for your clothes, you mean," said his wife, with a bitter laugh. "To think that stuck-up Miss Bassett, whose father used to peddle soap, dared to turn up her nose at your tailorin'!"

"An' that Miss Bisbee, who don't know what a good coat is when she sees one," cried the tailor, in the greatest exasperation, "a-settin' herself up to tell me how much I was to charge! I guess I'll learn her how to mind her own business." And 'Biah got up, and, sticking his big hands in his pockets, began to stalk up and down the room in high dudgeon.

"'Biah!" Mrs. Williams stopped combing out her scanty locks, and, letting them string down each side of her thin face, she eagerly faced her husband. "I'll tell you what to do."

"What?" asked her husband, stopping in surprise.

"You charge 'em just twice as much as you would 'a done," said his wife, peering through the two wisps of light hair that hung dismally on either side of her enraged countenance, "an' git your pay out of 'em all; an' then you give it back to the parson yourself, when the coat's done."

"Good for you!" cried her husband. "Hain't you got a head, though!"

And then he was so delighted at her cuteness that he lifted the two wisps like pump handles, and kissed her.

Meantime, Miss Mirandy Stebbins, feeling herself overreached in her effort to be the prominent originator of the gift to the parson, and defrauded as to the supper she had counted so much upon, was doing up her corkscrew curls, in anything but a sweet frame of mind, preparatory to the sleep that wouldn't come at her bidding.

"It's outrageous!" she hissed to herself, her false teeth being out, and carefully placed on the bureau. "I never was so insulted in my life. That little fat chunk of a Miss Bisbee too, to do it! An' Miss Higby to set by an' see 'em, an' never say a word! I'll be up to 'em, I will."

Thereupon she blew out the candle, and flounced her thin frame down into the middle of her feather bed, trying to think of something bad enough to satisfy her thirst for revenge. Suddenly she sprang into a sitting posture.

"I'll git straight up now and write it down, before I forgit it," she cried, in great excitement, "for I never 'll git it into my head so good again."

And, clambering out of bed, she groped around in the dark to light her candle, when she proceeded to slip her feet into some flannel slippers, and herself into a monstrous bed-gown of a wonderful pattern.

"There, now, what was it? Let me see," she said, scratching her head with the end of a rusty penholder that she had with great difficulty found, after much rummaging, in the bureau drawer. "Oh, yes, that was it. Yes; now, then."

The old pen scraped its way over the small mangy piece of paper that Miss Mirandy considered suitable for the occasion, until these words appeared:

REVEREND MISTER BLODGETT, DEAR SIR. (On second thoughts, considering the "Dear Sir" too familiar, she had, with extreme pains, marked it over, while a blush flew over her spare countenance and lighted up the dismal bed-gown.)

REVEREND MISTER BLODGETT.—There bein' an efort started afoot to buy you a coat, I wish to state out of profound respeck to yourself and Mis. Blodgett an—here Miss Mirandy, finding still quite a stock of respect left within her bosom, concluded to bestow it liberally, so she added, with extra flourishes—an your whole inclusive family, that I had the honor to propose the coat, an should a had the extreme pleasure of presentin it in a way suitable to the ocashun, if that insidious creature Mis. Seth Bisbee hadn't insulted me at the sewin society this evenin at Mis. Deacon Higby's. She started all those ladies to talk awful about me, behind my back, when I wasn't there; but Tom and Joe Higby are noble lads, an they've ben an told me all about it. So pardon my assumption in writin', an believe I would a give for the coat if I'd ben let to, an present my respechs to Mis. Blodgett an your eldest daughter an Sarah Ann, an all the rest.

Yours to command,
MIRANDA STEBBINS.

Miss Mirandy couldn't help reading this over three or four times, she was so delighted with it. Then she blew out the light and clambered into her feathers again.

"On second thoughts," she said, as she drew up the thick comfortable about her spare chin, "I won't send it now. I can afford to wait, an' when the coat's done I'll jest git 'Biah Williams to stick it in one of the pockets. That'll be 'most as good as helpin' give it;" and, hugely tickled at the turn of affairs, she composed her mind and fell asleep.

On the first Sunday in December—a bright, beautiful day—the "First Church in Buzzville" was crowded to its utmost capacity. The presentation had taken place the evening before, and consisted in the coat being sent over by the hands of the tailor's boy, with a note containing the names of the fair donors.

All eyes and ears were therefore agog to see the parson in his new habiliments and to hear how he returned thanks. As he went up the broad aisle, every neck was craned to catch a sight of the new coat, and many nudges and smiles were given to express the general satisfaction that was bubbling over in the audience.

After the first prayer, with a few preliminary "hems," the parson stood up and began to unburden his mind of the deep debt of gratitude that seemed to weigh him down.

"Hem! It gives me great pleasure," he mumbled; then sought relief in his handkerchief, which, being in the depths of his left-hand pocket, required a "strong pull and a long pull" to get it out. "Hem!"

Whis—rustle—went some small white object out beneath the parson's hand up into the air; then it settled slowly and made its way down, down, toward the floor, when it fluttered a moment, to land in the second pew from the front, directly in Deacon Higby's lap. The two boys leaned past their mother to see the sight, and almost laughed aloud. They didn't laugh again for many a day!

The deacon heard the concluding words of Parson Blodgett's acknowledgment, who, now that he had his handkerchief, was all right; then he slowly unfolded the paper in his hand and examined its contents.

Which done he turned and took a long, deliberate look at his two sons, who were placidly observing the erratic movements of a belated fly on the ceiling.

Miss Mirandy Stebbins' letter, though not in the way she had intended, finally reached the minister's hand, and she had full revenge; so also was the soul of 'Biah Williams fully satisfied.

But those "two noble lads," the deacon's sons, had the jolliest whipping ever known, and it wasn't safe to say "sewing society" to them for one good spell.

Skipping Hard Places.

Boys, I want to ask you how you think a conqueror made out who went through a country he was trying to subdue and, whenever he found a fort hard to take, let it alone. Don't you think the enemy would buzz wild there, like bees in a hive, and when he was well into the heart of the country don't you fancy they would swarm out and harass him terribly?

Just so, I want you to remember, will it be with you, if you skip over the hard places in your lessons and leave them unlearned; you have left an enemy in the rear that will not fail to harass you and mortify you times without number.

"There was just a little bit of my Latin I hadn't read", said a vexed student to me, "and it was just there the professor had to call upon me at examination. There were just two or three examples I had passed over, and one of these I was asked to do on the blackboard."

The student who is not thorough is never well at his ease; he cannot forget the skipped problems, and the consciousness of his deficiencies makes him nervous and anxious.

Never laugh at the slow, plodding student; the time will surely come when the laugh will be turned. It takes time to be thorough, but it more than pays. Resolve when you take up a study that you will go through with it like a successful conqueror, taking every strong point.

If the inaccurate scholar's difficulties closed with his school life it might not be so great a matter for his future career. But he has chained to himself a habit that will be like an iron ball at his heel all the rest of his life. Whatever he does will be lacking somewhere. He has learned to shirk what is hard, and the habit will grow with years.

The Wyoming Method.

San Francisco Chronicle.

They have learned how to live in Hilliard, Wyoming territory, and are pleased with their lesson. As often as they get out of meat they replenish this way: A band of wicked-looking citizens go down to the Union Pacific track a ways, to where the trains run slowly and await the passage of the through express with its palace cars and tender passengers. As it is heard in the distance they take their places. A stuff man made of straw is laid out beside two deal coffins, a bit of baggage keeping his face from being seen, while the gang gather around a living victim, whom they are about to hang to a telegraph pole. It is a slim chance for the poor fellow, but the passengers run wild at the sight. The train is stopped. Volunteers run back to the scene. Explanation: Two noted horse-thieves are the scourge of the district, survivor penitent now, but the best time to hang him is when we have him. He's done thousand's of dollars of damage. This suggests a ransom. The passengers take up a contribution and buy the poor devil's life for him. Then they carried him on to Hilliard and leave him. "Citizens in carriages" come riding home later with the ransom, which they divide without a quarrel, and there is peace and pleasantry in Hilliard.

A Goat Full of Intellect and Culture.

"Goats are very sagacious," remarked Mr. Blivins. "There's one down on the Kansas Pacific that is just full of intellect and culture. He's the smartest animal I ever saw. You know it's mighty hot there this weather. You can look a mile there in either direction and not see a blade of grass. The goat was always able to stand it until this summer, and then the sun got too hot for him and he suffered dreadfully. Day after day he'd lie down and try to think up a plan to get a little shade, but it didn't come to him for a long time. At last one morning he happened to look down the road and saw a wagon coming along, and an idea struck him all at once. He jumped to his feet, ran down under the wagon and trotted along for a mile or so entirely protected from the sun. When he met a wagon coming the other way, he'd leave the first one, and come back in the traveling shade. You can see him do this any day now, and he's the most comfortable and contented goat in the country."—Denver Tribune.

Economy of Time.

The old adage, "Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves," may be thus parodied: "Take care of the minutes and the days will take care of themselves." If the minutes were counted that are daily wasted in idle revery or still idler talk, in thinking of setting about a task that is not relished, and in looking for things that should not have been misplaced, they would soon amount to hours, and prove sufficient for the acquisition of some elegant art or the study of some useful science. Almost all young persons have something in view of which they would like to do, if they had time to do it; and by scrutinizing their appropriations of every hour in the day, they will generally find as much time wasted as would suffice for the desired end, if resolutely redeemed from idleness. A professional gentleman of rare attainment, and one who added to the laborious duties of his calling a great variety of learning, much scientific research and many elegant accomplishments, was asked by a young lady how he found time for all that he did. He replied: "There is one rule which I have found of great use, and therefore recommend it to you, and that is, always do small things, such as writing a letter, copying out some short piece, making a sketch, reading a review, etc., in small portions of time, and reserve a whole day of leisure for some long and important affair. Never use up a rainy morning doing a variety of little jobs, and think because you dispatch a great many, that you have well bestowed time; leave small affairs for odd half hours, and use your uninterrupted morning for something that cannot be done in odd half hours. You have sometimes wondered at my having time to correspond with so many absent friends, but all my letters of friendship are written in odd moments, while I am waiting for people who are not so punctual to their appointments as I am. You would think it poor economy to cut into a whole yard of cloth when you want a little piece to mend with; you would take a scrap from your remnants. Just such poor economy of time is it to use up a whole day in little unconnected affairs; let your remnant of time suffice for these."

Absurd Forms.

In his stereotype formula of signature, "Yoors trooly," Artemus Ward intended no more than to be funny by laboriously bad spelling, but a semi-satire might have been read in it, for our purely conventional ways of epistolary phraseology are ridiculously formal. What can be more false than the perpetual "Dear Sir" at the beginning of every letter, used indifferently whether the person is really dear to us, or is simply indifferent, or is worse than indifferent to us? A letter which duns, or reproves, or expresses a conviction that the recipient is a contemptible scoundrel is conventionally required to begin by affirming him to be "dear," as he may be to somebody, but is not to the writer. Suppose any one of us had a sufficient occasion to write to President Garfield's assassin, now probably the most detested and friendless mortal alive, how would he begin? He would probably revolt at the falsehood so far as to omit the prefix, or to confine it to the simple "Sir," which, so far from being the curt, cold, and rather forbidding term it is accepted as being, is worthy of being wrested from diplomacy for common use, inasmuch as it is convenient and just fits the purpose of a simple beginning. The "Mr.," which is an abbreviation of magister, and was originally the honorary appellation of "teacher," cannot well be omitted in conversation, but in letter-writing how can anything be better than the bare name? Instead of this, when not addressing one of the immense family of "Rev.," "Col.," and "Hon.," we are bound to tag on the ridiculous "Esq.," unless we evade it by prefixing the "Mr." We must sign ourselves "Yours respectfully," albeit we have no respect, or "Yours truly," albeit not in any sense his, truly or untruly. On the contrary, when the letter is finished, all that is really remaining is to append the signature of the writer, flourish free, and all needed for the address is the name and residence of the addressee, so that the letter may find him.—New York Times.

The Way Plate Glass Is Made.

[Pittsburgh Telegraph.]

To cast roll, polish, and burnish plate glass requires machinery of peculiar construction, and a "plant" that is costly by reason of its complex nature. The pouring of liquid glass from the furnace upon the cast iron plates, and the subsequent rolling, are processes comparatively simple. Any housekeeper who has used a rolling-pin on a batch of pie-crust dough performs an operation very similar to this stage of plate glass making. It is the succeeding processes of grinding and polishing and final burnishing that require time and costly mechanism. After leaving the rolls and bed-plate the glass is rippled and rough, and only fit for gratings or skylights. Each plate must be transferred to machines that resemble the turntables of a railway. On that revolving platform the glass is cemented into a bed of plaster of Paris, and the machine started. Bearing heavily on the surface of the glass are blocks of metal, and while in motion the surfaces are kept supplied with sharp sand and a constant stream of water. The next stage of the glass-grinding process is the same as to machinery, but instead of sand coarse emery is used. The finer emery is used in another revolving table, and so on for half a dozen times. The final polishing is done by heavy reciprocating devices, fed with rouge, and maintaining a constant back and forward motion, and also lateral movement over the surface of the crystal. All this requires the assistance of a large force of men, many of them skilled laborers. After going through these different grindings and polishing the plate that measured an inch in thickness is only three-quarters of an inch thick, has lost all its roughness, and is ready for the show-window of the purchaser.

A BOER MARKSMAN.

Shouldering the Rifle and Showing How Majuba Hill Was Won and Relates Assorted.

[Natal Correspondence London Morning Post.]

I had a long conversation with a very intelligent specimen of a Boer, who farms in Newcastle one of the guard that accompanies the Boer leaders attending on the Commission. He spent the afternoon in my camp, and gave me a rehearsal of the different modes of fighting among the Boers. First of all he began trying his hand by shooting at bottles, distant 100 yards, with a fifteen Winchester repeater which I lent him for the purpose. With this weapon, however, he failed to accomplish any decided success, the bullets falling close all round, but the bottles remained untouched.

"I cannot shoot with your rifle," he observed, "but give me a Martini-Henry and I will pick off two bottles at 200 yards." I sent up to the camp for a Martini-Henry carbine, which the Boer laid hold of with a great deal more apparent confidence, and the first two shots verified his boast, for the bottles were immediately shivered to atoms. He next proceeded to show me the Boer mode of shooting from behind rocks and stones. "The great mistake your soldiers made," he observed, "was to aim over the stone at the enemy, but we always fire round the corner." Throwing himself flat on the ground, he proceeded to put this remark into practice, and dragging himself lithely along, peered cautiously round the right-hand corner of a low stone that only just concealed his form from sight of the supposed enemy. Removing his hat, he raised it slowly aloft on the top of his ramrod and maneuvred it so as to cause it to have the appearance of a man's head cautiously taking note of the enemy. At this hat an English soldier is supposed to have taken a pot shot, when the Boer suddenly let it fall, and, bringing his body round the corner, took steady aim and fired at a black bottle some 150 yards distant, which in another moment was smashed to atoms.

Another method of shooting on horseback he showed me in a brilliant and effective manner. Mounting his horse and uttering a loud cry, he sent it galloping up a hill as hard as it could go. Suddenly, without a word of warning, the left foot was pressed to the stirrup, the right leg thrown backward over the saddle, the man was on his feet, and the horse stopped instantaneously and as if spell-bound. Standing erect, the Boer aimed cooly at a distant bottle and knocked it over, then springing into the saddle he executed the same maneuvre in two opposite directions with signal and unerring aim and effect. This man was one of 180 who first stormed and took the Majuba Heights. He says that Joubert's only words were: "Fellows, take that hill!" and they hastened to obey. The reason why so few men advanced to the attack was because Joubert anticipated and made sure that the English would endeavor simultaneously to take the Nek, as well as surprise them on their left, and he retained men to defend the positions mentioned. Finding, however, his fears were groundless, he dispatched fresh men to the assistance of their comrades, but by the time they arrived the Majuba Hill had been taken. The Ninety-second, he informed me, were the first they encountered, and this regiment fought stoutly, but were driven back on to the plateau toward the Fifty-eigth. Both bravely defended the position until Colley fell, when panic, he affirms, seized our men. The whole scene was, however, so enveloped in smoke that he could make no accurate note of anything, and confusion prevailed everywhere. Sir George Colley he declares to have been shot while in the act of tying a white handkerchief to a ramrod. The Boers did not know at the time that this personage was Sir George. This is one of the few Boer versions of the Majuba fight that I have heard from men who actually took part in the first advance to storm the plateau. Each tale tallies with the other, and I am inclined to think it truthfully told.

Losses in the Slavery War.

From the official reports of the War Department the following facts are taken: 1. The aggregate of troops furnished for all periods of service—from three months to three years' time—was 2,859,132; reduced to a uniform three years' standard, the whole number of troops amounted to 2,320,272. The number killed in battle, according to the report of the Provost Marshal General in 1866, was 61,362. The number of those who died of wounds was 34,727; died of disease, 183,287; total died, 279,376; total deserted, 199,105. The Adjutant General of the rebel army, in a statement made since the close of the war, estimated that the entire available rebel force capable of active service at 600,000; of this number not more than 400,000 were enrolled at any one time, and the rebel States had never in the field at once more than 200,000 men. This is the statement made by Carter. The number of rebel soldiers who died of wounds or disease, was 133,821, a statement which in the nature of the case is but partial; and the deserters numbered 104,428, also a partial statement. The great struggle between General Grant and General Lee in the Wilderness was attended by immense losses to the Union forces and to the rebels. For the particulars of this sanguinary conflict the best histories should be consulted, as figures give but an imperfect idea of the contest, and the losses inflicted.

Honored and Blest.

When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well-known valuable remedies the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.—Democrat.

Cork.

Cork is the outer bark of a tree called cork oak, quercus suber, and once in every eight years the crop of cork is gathered from those trees. The cork is the outer bark, which, after the tree is four or five years old, makes a rapid growth and becomes very thick. While this outer bark is increasing a new bark forms on the inner side, and thus the Creator has provided a covering for the tree by the time the old bark shall become cracked and dry, and useless for further protection. It is just before the outer bark has reached this useless condition and while there is yet life and pliability left in it, that the workmen go forth and carefully separate it from the trees. This operation is performed during the summer months by cutting furrows in the bark, lengthwise, and making cuts crosswise, about forty inches apart; the bark is then beaten, in order to loosen it from the tissues beneath, after which it is pried off in square pieces. The bark is finally carted to the factory, where men and boys cut and turn it into the different shapes used for cork, bungs and such like. If the barking or peeling is carefully done, without hurting the new bark beneath, it does no injury to the tree, but is beneficial in removing what would eventually become an incumbrance.

A Fool Once More.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her. She is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it only cost me two dollars. Such folly pays."—H. W., Detroit, Mich.—Free Press.

Work is the law of our being—the living principle that carries men and nations onward. The greater number of men have to work with their hands as a matter of necessity, in order to live; but all must work in one way or another, if they would enjoy life as it ought to be enjoyed. Labor may be a burden and a chastisement, but it is also an honor and a glory. Without it nothing can be accomplished. All that is great in man comes through work, and civilization is its product. Were labor abolished, the race of Adam were at once stricken by moral death.

Chronicles.

Hear me, oh, ye tillers of the soil; open your ears and hearken unto my voice.

Put not your trust in men who show unto you models of strange and wonderful inventions, else ye be bamboozled and deceived.

Look not upon the model of the machine that goeth forth into the fields to reap and gather up the sheaves.

Nor upon the pump that requireth not human aid to seduce from its subterranean bed the sparkling water for the refreshment of the lowing kine.

Turn ye away from him who presenteth them; flee from the sound of his velvet embroidered voice.

Else it bite ye like a serpent and sting ye like the prickings of the conscience of him who defrauded the publisher and payeth not his yearly tithes.

From his lips droppeth taffy as droppeth the sap from the sugar tree in the camps of our fathers.

Shun him, oh ye agitators of the clodded field, for he will draw over thine eyes the fleecy substance which is called wool, yea, verily, he will hornswoggle ye with words that are pleasant unto the ear.

He will say unto: "Sign ye this covenant, that ye may act in my stead and supply the toiling masses with my handiwork.

"Serve ye as my agent; for will ye not therefore wax rich; will not the silver and gold flow into thy coffers?

"Sign quickly I beseech ye, that another may not reap the golden harvest in thy stead."

And when ye sign or engrave upon the covenant thy seal, he will go on his way rejoicing, saying unto himself:

"Verily, did I not strike the duffer handsomely; did I not turn the trick in bang-up shape?"

When a fortnight passes the machines have come not; the wonderful mechanism failed to materialize.

But in their stead there cometh unto ye a person clothed in fine raiment and a look of dignity.

And presenteth unto ye your covenant, saying:

"Payest unto me what thou owest; pungle up the ducats, else I bring ye before the judge.

"I hold here thy note of hand for $722.10."

Then will ye wax sore afraid, and your heart will be in your bosom as heavy as the biscuit of the amateur cook.

And ye will go down into your garments for scrip, and will pay the amount, while the stranger will wear an electric smile.

And when the man of fine raiment departeth, ye will say unto your wife: "Yea, verily, am not I condemned fool?"

And she will softly reply: "You bet."

Then will ye seize you ledger, and write upon the debit side thereof:

To damfoolishness……………………$722.10

And on the credit side thereof:

By experience…………$100,000,000,000,000

A New Use for Criminals.

An Australian paper thinks there is a better use to which men can be put than hanging them. Instead of punishing convicted criminals in that way, it would turn them over to the doctors to be experimented upon for the cure of diseases like cholera, yellow fever, cancer, hydrophobia, consumption, etc., for which no certain remedy has ever been found. It would provide that if the criminal survived the experiments he should be entitled to his life. For example, a malefactor might be drowned until, in the ordinary sense of the word, he was pronounced dead by the experimenting physicians. Then, if he was resuscitated, he should gain his liberty. Let another be bitten by an unmistakably rabid dog, and if he was cured after a well defined attack of hydrophobia that should constitute his certificate of reprieve. Others should be poisoned, inoculated with various contagious diseases, and be subjected to death by the various maladies which have defeated and defied the combined skill of the medical fraternity, and in the case of every one where a sure and definite remedy should be discovered such criminal should thereby expiate his crime, and by his contribution to science for the benefit of the world he should earn and receive a full pardon. It thinks this would be not only a more effective deterrent of crime, but it would have the advantage of making worthless men useful.

The Sunday Argus, Louisville, Ky., observes: A Woodbury (N. J.) paper mentions the cure of the wife of Mr. Jos. H. Mills, of that place, by St. Jacobs Oil. She had rheumatism.

A Tobacco-Chewing Horse.

It is often claimed by enthusiastic reformers that the tobacco chewing habit indulged by men is too vile to be practiced by beasts, no known animal ever having yet placed tobacco chewing among his bad habits. A Norwich horse has essayed to put a stop to this sort of talk by forming the tobacco-chewing habit. The animal loves the weed, and not only teases his owner for the stuff, but noses about the pockets of people who come near him to see if he can get the odor, when he at once begins to manifest his desire for a chew. Upon presentation of a plug he will take a chew that would astonish a mariner, but with all his rolling of the dainty morsel beneath his tongue he never yet has learned to squirt the juice or to hang out his sign on his lips. He chews clean, and can give old tobacco chewers points. —Norwich Bulletin.

The Menasha (Wis.) Press says: A. Granger, Esq., of this city, uses St. Jacobs Oil on his horses with decided success and profit.

A gentleman once laid a wager that he would stand for a whole day on London Bridge with a tray full of sovereigns, fresh from the mint, and be unable to find purchasers for them at a penny apiece. Not one was disposed of.

The Hammock.

There is something about a hammock that is indescribable, and there is no rule that can be made that will insure safety while sitting in one of the queer things. There are people who believe that a hammock understands what is going on, and occasionally indulges in a joke. It is certain that an old person with a lame back can swing in a hammock half the day and it will never kick up. Servant girls and children can get into a hammock as thick as three in a bed, and there is no danger, but let a spoony young couple sit down in a hammock ever so carefully and it seems as though the confounded thing was alive, and had taken a contract to spill them out on the ground in all sorts of embarrassing shapes. What it is that causes the commotion will perhaps never be known, without an investigation by some middle-aged person, and, if the season was not so near over, we would investigate the blasted thing ourself, in the interest of our young readers who are in the full flush of hammockhood. There can be nothing much more annoying to a young couple than to be sitting side by side or facing each other, in a hammock, looking into each other's eyes, and allowing the love they dare not speak to show itself in those orbs, and just as they are feeling as though they couldn't live a minute unless they clasped each other to each other's heaving bosoms, or at least one heaving bosom and one boiled shirt, and then have the hammock turn bottom side up and land them on the back of their necks, on the ground, with legs pointed toward the crab apples on the trees to which the hammock is hitched, arms flinging wildly to pull down pantaloons legs, and hands convulsively clawing gravel, and muslin and delaine, while blushes suffuse faces that but a moment before were background for the picture of love's young dream, and a crowd of spectators on the hotel veranda laughing and saying, "Set 'em up again," the hammock shakes itself and turns right side up for other victims, as though it knew what it had been doing, and enjoyed it. There are young men all over the land who have been through such experiences, and had to walk backward all the way to the house, owing to fissure veins being discovered in the wearing apparel below the suspenders, while the number of girls that have been mortified by having to go to the house with their back hair in one hand, their skirts in the other, while six places between the polonaise and the ear-rings were aching like the toothache from contact with the gravel path, are legion; and we call upon the authorities to suppress the hammock as a nuisance. More matches have been broken up by hammocks than by all the Sunday schools in the world, and no girl who is bow-legged, or has an ankle like a rutabaga, should ever trust herself in a hammock, even though it is held by half a dozen friends, as the hammock will shy at a piece of paper as quick as a skittish horse, and in such a moment as ye think not you are on all fours, your head dizzy, and if there is a hole in your stocking as small as the old miser's heart, it will look to outsiders as big as the gate to a fair ground. O, a hammock is worse than a bicycle.—Peck's Sun.

Patients learn what doctors know, that a continued application of any particular internal medicine loses its power, and resort must be had to experiment. The use of Dr. Holman's Pad enforces the system by absorption and without poisoning, and this is the reason of its great popularity. Try it.

For Headache, Constipation, Liver Complaint and all bilious derangements of the blood, there is no remedy as sure and safe, as Eilert's Daylight Liver Pills. They stand unrivalled in removing bile, toning the stomach and in giving healthy action to the liver. Sold by all druggists.

Imagine for a moment the thousands upon thousands of bottles of Carboline, the deodorized petroleum hair renewer, annually sold, and the fact that not a single complaint has been received from all these thousands, and you may have some idea of its good qualities.

It is said that four million packages of Fraser Axle Grease were sold in 1879, and we believe it.

WHAT IS GOOD FOR MAN IS GOOD FOR BEAST.

Mr. J. A. Walton is one of the most prominent stable proprietors and blooded-stock owners in the northern part of the city of Philadelphia,—1340 N. Twelfth street. Mr. W. has devoted the best years of his life to the study and training of horses, and he is considered an authority in all matters pertaining to horseflesh. Feeling desirous of hearing what he had to say in propria persona regarding the merits of St. Jacobs Oil as a remedy for some of the ills that horseflesh is heir to, the writer resolved to go direct to Mr. Walton's stables for the purpose of interviewing him on the subject. Mr. Walton talked freely upon the matter and said: "After many years active experience I can safely say that I consider St. Jacobs Oil a remarkably good liniment for horses for anything like sprains in the limbs, bruises and similar affections. I have used St. Jacobs Oil on dozens of horses, and can state that I never knew it to fail. It is now about six months since I first commenced using that Oil on my horses, and I shall continue to use it. I happened to commence using St. Jacobs Oil on horses in this way: My father is over eighty years of age and is subject to many of the ailments incident to old age. Among other things he has Rheumatic attacks, pains in his limbs and joints, and aches in different parts of his body. He commenced using St. Jacobs Oil several months since, and after rubbing himself freely with the liniment night and morning, according to the printed directions, he obtained the most decided relief. Whenever he has any pain now he uses St. Jacobs Oil and it always drives the pain away. Now I fully know from personal observation that 'What is good for man is good for beast.'"—Further reports bring the gratifying intelligence that Aristides Welsh, Esq., of Erdenheim Stock-Farm, near Philadelphia, Pa., the breeder of that famed racer, Iroquois, above represented, uses and strongly endorses St. Jacobs Oil as a wonderful remedy in its effects upon his stock. His experience with the Great German Remedy justified him in giving his unqualified indorsement of it, and in saying that his chief groom should always use it on the farm. ④

THOMAS F. BAYARD, of Delaware, was elected president pro tem. of the senate Monday.

IT is now well understood that a new cabinet will be formed, nearly all the present members will retire.

A NEW comet has been discovered by an astronomer in Bristol, England making the sixth one found since May 1st.

OHIO—At the time we go to press the indications are that Foster is elected Govenor by a reduced majority. The vote was light.

NELSON W. ALDRICH has been elected senator from Rhode Island, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of General Burnside.

IOWA—Nothing definite can be learned at this time from the election. It is doubtful, however, whether it would afford us much comfort.

OVER 14,000 new patents have been issued during the first nine months of this year. A great increase over the number issued in 1880.

THE president pro. tem. of the senate draws a salary of $10,000, and not the mere pay of a senator, although he still represents his state and votes the same as any other senator.

GEORGE SCOVILLE, a lawyer from Chicago, will defend Guiteau, who is his brother-in-law. He will ask to have R. T. Merrick, a well-known attorney at Washington, to assist him.

THE president of Venezuela has commissioned eight thousand generals, during his term of office. These, with what his predecessors had commissioned, make a total of thirty-two thousand generals in that state.

F. J. MOSES, once a carpet bag governor of South Carolinia, was recently jailed in New York on a charge of swindling. Having no Federal bayonets to protect him at present, he had to furnish bail or go to the lock-up.

GUITEAU was indicted by the grand jury October 4. Dr. D. S. Lamb, who performed the autopsy on the president, was there as a witness, and assisted to show the jury the track of the ball, by means of a skeleton and charts.

DURING the fair at Newark, Ohio last Thursday, the grand-stand gave way, letting the crowd of people within it to the ground with a crash, and causing a general stampede of the spectators. Fortunately no one was killed, though a few were hurt, and one man had a leg broken.

SOME trouble is being experienced by business men in regard to mutilated silver coin. It seems that coins that have been clipped, punched or in other ways mutilated, are subject to a discount, depending in part on the amount of injury done them, and in part on the conveniences of business.

THE NEW YORK TRUTH, the same paper that published the Morley letter, claims to have made the discovery that Dr. Bliss' son was the one who sent the telegrams to stock brokers in that city while the president was in a critical condition, and in that way caused panics in the market. At all events, some one did it.

WHILE a train was passing through Wilcox, Arizona, last Thursday evening, the train men saw a fight going on between the people of the town and a body of Indians. The firing was so heavy as to drown the rumbling of the train. They ran on through the town, and after passing, saw the bodies of several section men who had been killed.

THE men who captured the robbers who plundered the train on the Iron Mountain road, found about $9,000 of the stolen money in the possession of the thieves. This they took and divided among themselves, and would have kept it, but for a quarrel. One of them told the secret, and now the chances are that they themselves will be prosecuted for theft.

AN oil train of fifty cars caught fire last week on the Erie railroad at the crossing of the Delaware river. The train was pulled off the bridge, which was in this way saved, but a great many cars were destroyed. The tanks burst with fearful violence, and scattered their blazing contents all around, but fortunately did not communicate the flames to anything but the train.

THE new water works in Baltimore are among the finest on the globe. The supply is now greatly increased by a tunnel seven miles long through a chain of hills. This brings the water of Gunpowder river into the lakes, as the different reservoirs are called, and gives the city a supply of pure water five times as great as is at present needed. The surplus will be used as water power.

LAST Wednesday evening, the remains of President Garfield were removed from the coffin in which they had been up to that time, and placed in a new bronze casket, presented by a New York firm. The transfer was made by several physicians, assisted by other responsible parties, and with the full knowledge and consent of Mrs. Garfield. The coffin is now placed so near the entrance to the vault as to be easily seen from the outside.

THE assassin of Garfield has finished writing his confession. It is, as might be expected, an impudent and sacrilegious document. He denies nothing, but gives a detailed statement of every step he took in the conception and execution of the great crime. He excuses himself, however, in the same way that republicans have been accustomed to excuse themselves for the various official and other crimes and shortcomings of which that party has been guilty. It was done, he says, "To unite the republican party and save the Republic from going into the control of rebels and democrats."

Organized.

THE SENATE IS ORGANIZED BY THE ELECTION OF BAYARD, OF DELAWARE, AS PRESIDENT PRO. TEMPORE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 10.—The assembling of the special session of the senate was witnessed by a large number of persons, who, as early as 11 o'clock, filled the galleries to their utmost capacity. The desk formerly occupied by Senator Burnside was tastefully draped with black, while several bonquets ornamented the desks of prominent senators. The senators elect, Aldrich, Lapham and Miller, occupied seats upon the floor of the republican side. The senate was called to order by Mr. Harris, who, after prayer by Chaplain Bullock, alluded in a feeling manner, to the death of President Garfield, Senator Burnside and Secretary Burch said: "I have been requested by a number of senators on both sides of the chamber to call the senate to order. If there be no objection I will call the senate to order that we may proceed with its business. The senate will please come to order, and the clerk will report to the senate the message of the president convening this session of the senate." The president's proclamation having been read, Mr. Pendleton moved the adoption of the following resolution: "That Thomas F. Bayard, senator from the state of Delaware, is hereby chosen president pro tem. of the senate."

Mr. Edmunds said that of course he did not object to the present consideration of the resolution, but he thought under the existing circumstances that it was his duty to present the credentials of the senators elect, which he thereupon did. The certificates having been read, Mr. Edmunds moved that the oath of office be administered to those gentlemen by Senator Anthony, the senior senator.

Mr. Pendleton moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried; yeas 36 nays 34. Mr. Davis, of Illinois, voted with the republicans in the negative. Mr. Mahone did not vote, and Messrs. Platt and Fair were paired.

Mr. Edmunds said no reason had been given why the senators elect, should not be allowed to take part in the organization of the senate, and therefore moved to amend Mr. Pendleton's resolution, by providing for the immediate qualification of the senators elect, the oath of office to be administered by Senator Anthony.

The amendment offered by Edmunds to Pendleton's resolution gave rise to a short discussion, but was finally rejected. Yeas 33; nays 34; Mahone and Davis, of Illinois, voting with the republicans. Edmunds then proposed an amendment, providing that Thomas F. Bayard shall be elected presiding officer for this day only, and argued in support of the amendment, contending that it would comply with both the letter and spirit of the law and would allow the states of New York and Rhode Island to have a voice in the election of the permanent president pro tem.

Mr. Vest criticized the language used by Edmunds in intimating that democrats were attempting to grasp the prize made possible to them by an assassination. The foul lips of the assassin who had struck down the president had upon them no invocation for democratic success, but the invocation had been for a faction of the republican party. If there was responsibility for the crime, directly or indirectly, it rested upon his political opponents and not with the democratic party. He charges no one, but the insinuation that the democrats of the country had anything but tears for the dead president, sorrow for his family and execration for the miserable assassin, he declared to be absolutely false. He contended, in the course of further remarks, that it was the duty of the democratic senators to elect a president pro tem., and recall the phrase so often quoted at the last session of the senate that "the voice of a constitutional majority is the voice of God." The constitutional majority to-day happened to be on the democratic side, and of course, in the opinion of his republican friends its voice was scarcely a divine utterance.

A yea and nay vote on Edmund's amendment resulted in its defeat—33 to 34. Edmunds then offered another amendment substituting the name of Senator Anthony for that of Senator Bayard as president pro tem. At vote was at once taken and the amendment defeated—yeas, 32; nays, 34. Mahone voted with the republicans; Senator Davis did not vote.

Senator Beck referred to the action of the democratic president of the senate when Filmore succeeded to the presidency of the United States. Edmunds inquired if the senators of two states were denied a voice in that election. Beck said they were; nor had a vice-president refused to give the senate opportunity to elect a president; nor had two senators enacted a comic tragedy by resigning.

This reference to Conkling and Platt elicited a shout of applause from the gallery, which shocked the decorum of the senate. Chairman Harris gave notice that for another similar demonstration he would have the galleries cleared.

The original resolution introduced by Pendleton was then adopted by a vote of 34 to 32. Davis, of Illinois, did not vote Mahone voted with the republicans.

THE expense of refurnishing and repairing the presidential mansion, the White House, at Washington, is about $30,000 per annum. Just what this expense includes, does not appear, as it is not really refurnished once in eight or ten years. The same furniture is in use there, year in and year out, until it wears out. But the bills for refurnishing come in every year with great regularity. The sum is sufficiently large if it is used, but when appropriated and not used, it is evident there is a leak somewhere.

THE remarkable wound of the president has brought into discussion once more, the still more remarkable wound by which the noted Bill Poole lost his life in 1855. He was shot in a New York saloon, one ball entering the fleshy part of his heart, yet he lived fourteen days.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is a widower, and now a lady, Miss H. T. Merritt, of St. Louis, writes to him, offering to become mistress of the White House and general house-keeper for him, at a fixed salary. She has been in a hotel for some years, and will work cheap till she gets started.

Waterloo.

Ephraim Shipe, of Fairfield, was here during the fair.

Miss Jennie McClellan was home a few days during the fair.

A. B. Richards is home again for a few days, assisting at the Butt hotel.

Miss Minnie Werrbaugh, of Franklin township, spent a few days in town and visited the fair.

Rosa and Carrie Shaffer were here seeing the sights a few days, and seemed to enjoy themselves.

E. W. Smith and G. Scott, of Pierceton, were visiting with their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Barns last week.

Mrs. Parker, of Orland, and her son, Ned, were stopping in town, visiting with Mrs. T. Y. Dickinson last week.

Geo. Foster, of this township, was here last week, attending the fair. It pleases us to see George looking so well.

The Angola fair is in progress this week, and quite a number of our people are going up there to attend a few days.

Mrs. J. A Barns and Mrs. J. J. Martin have gone to Nebraska to visit relatives. They expect to be absent about two weeks.

J. B. Hoover showed his efficiency as a marshal last week. He had selected an able corps of assistants, and made it lively for all evil doers.

There were five in the lock-up at one time Friday evening. John Koons, J. J. Lightner and the other assistant marshals did not wait to argue the question, when a man needed "pulling."

The smiling faces of Corn. Urie and F. P. Blair were visible in different parts of town last week. The boys rank high as telegraph operators, and always find a host of friends to welcome them to there old home.

Edwin Thomson was here shaking hands with his old-time friends. He is now located in Laporte county, but expects soon to remove to New Carlisle, St. Joseph county, this state. Ed. will get through the winter wherever he is.

F. P. Coder came through here Saturday, on his way to visit his folks, at Spencerville. He is now located, as agent, at Grosvenor, near Blissfield, Mich., the crossing of the L. S. and C. S. roads. Frank is looking well.

Mrs. J. I. Best and Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair Best started to Virginia, Tuesday night. They go to Chicago and there take the train for the east. They go to Staunton, where they will be joined by Judge Best, the latter part of the week.

W. S. Loutzenheiser is home on a brief visit. He is now located in east Toledo, with the firm of Smith & Co., hardware dealers. Scott is a stockholder in the agricultural association, and comes home every year to use his stock ticket. But perhaps he don't tell "her" about it.

W. B. Hall received the following premiums on his oil paintings, exhibited at the fair. Landscape, first premium; fruits, first and second; flowers, first and second; ornamental painting on wood, first and second; and first on black and colored crayon, and on pencil drawing.

When Allmanritter was let out of the calaboose, there was no place he wanted to see, as much as home, and called lustily for some one to point out the way. He saw John Knott, and clave unto him solidly, until John got to a point where he could head his man homeward. Then John said "Go!" and he went sailing northward.

Mrs. Dr Kelley, of Syracuse, and her daughter, Maud, were here visiting with Ab Kelly and other relatives and friends last week. She returned Saturday, just in time to meet Doc. at Albion, on his way here. He, however, kept on, reaching here that evening. After transacting some necessary business, he took the next train home. He finds it impossible to leave the hotel at this busy season. We are glad to note his popularity as a landlord.

Tuesday morning there was some excitement caused by the arrival of parties from Steuben county, looking for the lost man, Mr. Herriman. Some one had sent a telegram to them, that Herriman's body had been found in the little swamp north of the fair ground. This proved false, and so the matter stands. The last authentic accounts of his whereabouts, is a statement that he was seen at the north part of the fair ground on Thursday.

John Butt and wife have gone to New York to visit his brother, Richard Butt, in Brooklyn. Col. Butt had a command in the engineer corps during the rebellion, and received an injury, while in action on James' Island, that has resulted in paralysis. He was sitting on his horse, when a solid shot passed through the saddle and horse, giving him a shock from which he will never recover. He laid out and directed the construction of the extensive fortifications on James' Island, as well as those from which the "swamp angel" afterwards threw shells into Charleston, a distance of over four miles.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., Feb. 2, 1880.—I know Hop Bitters will bear recommendation honestly. All who use them confer upon them the highest encomiums, and give them credit for making cures—all the proprietors claim for them. I have kept them since they were first offered to the public. They took high rank from the first and maintained it, and are more called for than all others combined. So long as they keep up their high reputation for purity and usefulness, I shall continue to recommend them—something I have never before done with any other patent medicine.

Around About Us.

O. J. Powell, of the Garrett Herald, is the happy father of a bouncing baby. It is a girl.

They are to have a new paper established at Angola next week. We have forgotten the names of the parties who are to conduct it, but understand it will be on a sound basis, and a first-class paper.

The Wabash Courier tells of a man named Swartz, who has been a resident of that county for twenty-four years: He was a soldier in France, under first Napoleon, and although nearly ninety years old, is hale and lively.

Mr. K. Tabee, a Japanese commercial drummer, the first to visit this city, was registered at the Aveline House yesterday. Mr. Tabee is a dandy, so to speak. He gave a boy twenty-five cents to black his boots, paid the porter seventy-five cents to get down his baggage, remarked that this town was too small for him, and sailed for the depot.—[Ft. Wayne News.

The Northern Indianian says: Peter Gift, of Pierceton, had on exhibition in floral hall at the fair grounds, quite a curiosity and a valuable relic, as well. It was a bible printed at Wurtemburg, Germany, in the year 1556, by Johannes Lucht. It is printed in the German language, of course, but it is in a fair state of preservation, and is a relic that will command a large price, if for sale at all.

AN OLD RELIC.—Last week we received an envelope from the South Bend Tribune office, containing an old bill made out by Dr. Ellis against Isaac Eaton for one year's subscription to the Goshen Democrat. It has been forty years since the bill was made out, and the paper is yet quite clean and strong, and the hand-writing is readily recognized by those who were familiar with the doctor's style. We shall preserve the old bill as quite a relic.—[Goshen Democrat.

A CRACK SHOT.—While at Cedar Beach Monday, we witnessed a marvelous shot, made by Seth Henshaw, of Alexander, with a Buss & Alexander rifle. A loon was sporting opposite the club house, at a distance of from five to six hundred feet, when Seth's attention was called to it, and, seizing his rifle, he shot at the loon off-hand, hitting it in the head. The waves were quite high, which made the shot all the more difficult and remarkable.—[Wabash Plain Dealer.

A NOTED MAN.—Some thirty-five years ago, there lived in this county, Middlebury township, a somewhat noted man, named Edward Bonney. There always seemed to be some mystery connected with his life, and many stories were told about his doings in this, then new country, but nothing ever appeared against him of any "crookedness," however much might have existed. He was a large, fine looking man; and it was told to us only the other day, by a gentleman who knew him well, that he was exceedingly popular in his neighborhood, at "Bonney's Mills," and any of his neighbors were always glad to do him a favor, and he was ever ready to do them a favor when called upon. Many years ago he removed to Illinois and then probably farther west. But about the years 1844-5-6, or thereabouts, he became more noted than ever from the part he took in the arrest of the Long Brothers and others implicated in the murder of Col. Davenport, at Rock Island. On the gallows, the Longs denounced Bonney in the severest terms, and insinuated, or charged, some terrible deeds against him. Bonney afterwards issued a pamphlet, giving a history of the affair throughout, and a good many were to be found in this county. If some one will furnish us with a copy, we will be under great obligations to them. We have been informed that Mr. Bonney died some three or four years ago, but where, no one seems to know. His remains were brought back to Bonneyville, and quietly intered, and there yet seems a mystery about the man that no one can unravel. There a great many old citizens in the county, and in southern Michigan, that well remember Edward Bonney, and who would be glad to read a biographical sketch of his life, if some one will furnish us a few of the outlines.

Harvesting Machinery.

D. M. Osborne & Co., of Auburn, N. Y. are working their way into the great grain districts of the west, with a rapidity that must surprise those who do not watch carefully the course of events in the agricultural districts. The Osborne reapers have proved so successful in all public trials, and in continued use in the field, and above all so reliable, that their popularity has increased rapidly within the last two or three years. Several contests with other reapers were held in different parts of the state this season, with a uniform verdict in favor of the Osborne. This was especially the case in the contests at Columbus and Rushville in June and July of 1881. In both instances the trial was in cutting barley, which is said to be the most difficult grain to work in, did in both, the Osborne went the two rounds without stopping for anything, and did its work well all the time. The other machines were obliged to stop, to adjust some part, or to clear itself of obstructions or for some similar reason. This is the more remarkable when we take into consideration that the Osborne cuts the widest swath. One make of their self-binding harvester has a ten foot cut. These are intended for the California market. The Osborne company are now making several different styles of mowers and reapers, combined machines and self-binders. The latter can use either twine or wire, and their make of binding apparatus is being rapidly adopted by the other leading machines of the country. The machines that adopt the Osborne binding apparatus, of course, pay a royalty for using it, but its superiority to the other kinds in use makes it an object for them to do so. No other firm makes so many different kinds. They have mowers, droppers, self-rakers and self-binders. The cut in reapers may be 6, 7, 8, or 10 feet, so that, not only do the company present to the public an excellent machine, but a great variety from which each farmer may choose the one that will be most likely to do his work satisfactorally. These machines are now being introduced into this and adjoining counties. Any information in regard to them will be cheerfully given by the agent of this section, Mr. Pliny Roby, Pleasant Lake Indiana.

Obituary.

Died, October 2d, 1881, Mary A. Thomas, wife of Aaron V. Thomas and daughter of Ira and Lydia Ricketts. The deceased was born Oct. 6, 1869, and was married to Aaron V. Thomas January 15, 1880. —The party given by D. D. Snyder and his estimable wife, to their many friends, on Tuesday evening, was one of the most pleasant affairs it has been our good fortune to attend. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have that style about them that at once makes you feel at home. Their fine new residence was full of the good natured people of our town and all seemed to enjoy themselves to their full capacity—especially at supper time. It was just such an event that will long be remembered by all present. The number in attendance was at least one hundred and fifty. We are sorry that our space will not permit of a more extended notice. It is, however, difficult to do justice to the subject. We can say, that all were well entertained; that the supper was fine; that the Snyder residence is among the finest in Northern Indiana, but all these things but faintly express the real facts. To get the correct idea of what the party really was it was necessary to be one of the number present.

—G. D. McGowan, so long connected with the agency of the Champion machines, leaves this week for Sringfield, Ohio, where he goes to take a position with the company. We met him at the fair last week, and are under obligations to him for showing us the mysteries of a first-class mower, the new Champion. Although we confess to some ignorance in the matter of farm machinery, yet the 'Squire made it so plain to us that we could almost run one ourself. We believe the company will find him an efficient helper in their business, and we wish him abundant success.

—J. O. Jackson, of Howard, Kansas, called on us Saturday. Mr. Jackson is well known to the citizens of this county, having for a number of years been engaged in business at Sedan. He is still in the wholesale jewelry trade, and is besides extensively concerned in stock raising in southeastern Kansas. He came here to buy young cattle, but owing to the high price will return, and take a few car loads from southern Illinois.

—Don't buy your dry goods and groceries until you have looked through McQuiston & Ralston's large store. They have just opened the largest stock ever brought to Auburn. Calicos for 4c, 5c and 6c a yard. Brocade dress goods for 10c a yard. Better black cashmeres than ever before offered for the money. A big lot of blankets to sell at wholesale prices. At the Fair.

We took a look over the fair grounds at Waterloo last week, and fell in with many familiar faces. J. M. Cahill, of Spencerville, had a fine Jersey cow and calf, on which he had first premium. J. E. Thomson had a good animal of the same stock, but owing to lack of pedigree, he was obliged to show in grades, in which he took first. W. M. Dawson had about the finest colt, for five months old, that the sun ever shone on, a real beauty, half Norman, we believe. Daniel Thomas took first on his stallion, and second on a colt. A. M. St. Clair got first on his short horn bull, and Daniel Kosht got first on his cow and calf in grades. S. M. Knott, of Cedar Creek, took first on his short horn bull, which he sold soon after to P. B. Nimmons, of Wilmington township. C. Sheets, of Auburn, took first and the sweepstakes diploma for buck in middle grades, and first on grade bull, as well as first on a span of three year old horses in general purposes class. G. B. Souders had a splendid pair of colts, regular beauties. A. W. Allen, of Auburn, had first premium and the diploma for best get of colts, on his Norman stallion, "Jock." John Henderson took any number of first premiums on his Devon cattle, we didn't stop to count them, but there were ribbons enough to set a milliner up in business in a small town. There were numbers of other fine cattle and horses on the ground, sporting red and blue ribbons, but owing to the absence of the owners, and the ridiculous custom of keeping the animals shut up so visitors cannot see a hair of them, we failed to get a good knowledge of the rest of the stock department. In machinery we noticed, our jolly friend, J. A. Boozer, in charge of the Buckeye machine, and making things hum in the machinery department generally. Mr. Boozer has been a power in the machinery business for a number of years, having had chareg of the display in that department. He deserves great praise for his efforts to make this part of the fair a success. In that part of the ground was Wm. Shutt, of Spencerville. He was showing visitors the good points about his machines, the Champions, we believe, and we learn he had made a number of sales while on the ground. G. D. McGowan was also there, and is a success in explaining the novelties of the new Champion mower. It is a new thing and works nicely, and the way the 'squire can make that sicke-bar stand up in the air, and keep on cutting and slashing, would astonish any one who saw it for the first time. E. R. Shoemaker and Will Francis were on hand there too, but were so busy we did not get a definite understanding of their work, or whether they were mere lookers on. Pliny Roby, of Pleasant Lake, had the Osborne self binders in charge, and is eminently able to make a good showing for his really excellent machine. It looks almost impossible to stand by these self binders, and think of their taking a field of standing grain, and cutting and binding it up into nice even sheaves, so that there is nothing to do but shock the grain up. But so it is. And yet as familiar as we are with these things, still they are wonderful. Nickolas Ensley, of Auburn, had a fine lot of machinery, including self binding reapers. Jas. N. McBride mounted a traction road engine, and went careering over the ground in fine style, without any "horse attachment," whatever. In the Floral Hall there were several good displays. W. B. Hall had a fine assortment of pictures in oil and crayon, which we hope to give a more extended notice elsewhere. Bassett & Maxson had a rich and tasty stock of silver and plated ware, and jewelry on exhibition. It attracted a great deal of attention. Kahn & Co. had a neat display of goods in their line, including clothing, dress goods, carpets etc. A. C. Grubiky had a fine and valuable collection of coins, shells and other objects of curiosity and scientific research. R. Wes. McBride had a beautiful stock of shells, corals, sea weeds, minerals and other articles in that line. R. M. Lockhart had a fine exhibit of dried and cut flowers, in fancy designs, which he brought up from the state fair. And at the urgent request of friends, he added to these, the valuable presents he received at Indianapolis the week previous—the gift of exhibitors at the state fair, of which he is president. They justly attracted a great deal of attention. In the Mechanic's Hall the display belonging to that department, was almost entirely wanting. This can, no doubt, be accounted for, in part, by the fact that the management had dropped all premiums in that class. This very unwise course, nearly obliterated this whole department, the space being largely taken by displays of pianos, organs and sewing machines. But among those who did face the music and insist on being seen, was J. D. McAnally, who had on exhibition, such parts of harness, as would show the use of his tug fastner, and other attachments. Mr. McAnally received a patent on these, only a few weeks ago, and already many of our citizens who have horses to drive are using them, and all are loud in their praise of the invention. Miss Fannie Kellerman, of New Buffalo, Mich., also occupied a space here, and had a nice stock of dried flowers and grasses, which found a ready sale among her many friends, for she has been a regular patron of our fair for so many years, that we begin to look upon her and her display as a part of it. Clark Long, at present with Story & Camp, Chicago, had a fine assortment of musical instruments, over which he presided, with all the zeal and ability which have always characterized him. Clark also had a good visit with the young people here, when not professionally engaged. There were many others whom we would like to mention, and whose exhibits were as good as many already noted, but for various reasons, it was impossible to obtain satisfactory data of them, and so we say in brief, that the show was a very good one, and are willing to make up any omissions to which our attention is called. The entries were in many cases not so numerous as has sometimes been the case, but the quality was nearer up to the standard. The children's department was wholly lacking, owing to its being left off the premium list. Whether the omission was intentional or not, we cannot say, but we hope the omission will not remain, but let the little ones hereafter be given a chance to make a showing of their handiwork. Of the trotting, we can say but little, as we saw but little of it, but presume it was good, as crowds gathered about the ring to witness it. A novel feature in this department, was a lady from Sandusky, Ohio, who had two trotters on the ground. She camped in a tent next to her favorrite horses, and seemed as fully interested in their success, as were her male competitors. The usual number of shows, candy stands, lunch stands etc., were to be found. An unusual feature was the selling of cigars, jewelry etc. by means of some game of chance, such as dice, wheels and throwing balls, as it has always been customary to sell nothing, but the right to make a straight sale. The dining halls did a good business and were deserving of the patronage they received, if we may be able to judge from a hasty inspection. S. W. Dickinson had charge of the large one, and everything looked neat and well prepared, and we think he goes away satisfied with the crowd, and they with him. Geo. Hough had the other large hall, and did a thriving business. Mr. Hough has been a patron of the fair for years, and is well acquainted with the people who attend, and hence was well patronized. Many others deserve mention, but we have no more space.

Editors Courier: On the 19th day of July, I insured my barn in the Ohio Farmers Insurrance Co., for $900, and contents for $200. And before the policy was issued, and only one week from the time the application was made out, my barn was destroyed by fire. And this the 13th day of Sep., I received a draft in full for the amount of loss, from the hand of C. G. Shepard, agent for the Ohio Farmers Insurrance Co., at Auburn, and I heartily recommend the Ohio Farmers to all those seeking protection against loss or damage by fire or lightning or the use of steam threshers.

THE EAST.

John W. Garrett, in a lengthy letter, takes issue with Vanderbilt on the questions connected with the present railroad war, and announces that the Baltimore and the Pennsylvania roads can take care of their section.

Eighty-two cases of valuables presented to Gen. Grant, which for years have been in the custody of George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, have recently been shipped to the home of the ex-President in New York. It is understood that in his tour of the world the General was the recipient of gifts worth double the amount of his expenses.... Timothy K. Earle, who died at Worcester, Mass., was the Prohibition candidate for Lieutenant Governor....Thomas Hughes & Co., hosiery manufacturers of Bristol, Pa., have suspended, with liabilities amounting to about $164,600, and assets not stated....The richest woman, probably, in the United States has just died at Ithaca, N. Y., namely, Mrs. Fiske, wife of a professor in Cornell University. She leaves a fortune estimated at $12,000,000.

Franklin J. Moses, formerly Governor of South Carolina, was locked up in a New York police station the other day on the charge of swindling a man out of $25.

A Hartford (Ct.) publishing house has urged Secretary Blaine to write a biography of Gen. Garfield. Mr. Blaine at first consented, and stipulated that the profits of the work should go to Miss Mollie Garfield. The publishing house, however, wanted Mr. Blaine to complete the work in six months, and Mr. Blaine felt that he could not comply and do justice to the task in that time.

Gov. Hoyt, of Pennsylvania, has notified the State Insurance Commissioner that he will not issue any more letters patent to mutual-assessment insurance companies. He does not consider that these concerns conduct their business in accordance with law.

THE WEST.

A strip of territory in the Cottonwood valley in Kansas, thirty miles long by four miles wide, was devastated by a cyclone. Twelve persons are known to have lost their lives. A tornado, which swept over Nebraska on the morning of the 30th ult., nearly demolished the town of Madison, which has a population of 1,000, and two persons are known to have lost their lives. In the village of Stanton twelve buildings were blown down and twenty persons injured.

At Washington, Ohio, Presley Cowan undertook to go up in a balloon alone. Nearing some trees, he got scared, tried to catch a tree-top and fell fifty feet to the ground.... The former war chief of Victoria died at San Carlos Reservation, and his father applied for permission to kill a squaw charged with bewitching him....John M. Forbes resigned the Presidency of the Burlington road, and Charles E. Perkins has been elected to succeed him.

Details of the destruction wrought by the recent storm in the Northwest prove it to have been one of the most violent visitants of the kind experienced for a long time. It originated, it seems, in Nebraska, and, taking a northwesterly course, swept over Minnesota and the western portion of Wisconsin. In Nebraska the town of Madison, a place of 1,000 inhabitants, was almost completely demolished, and hundreds of people were rendered homeless. At Stanton, Neb., twelve buildings were blown down and twenty people injured. The cyclone swept through the southern part of Minnesota, doing great damage at Owatonna and elsewhere, but happily causing no loss of life. A black cloud, the size of an eighty-acre farm, appeared on the sky, thickened, contracted and swooped down upon the earth, in myriad convolutions, the tornado that followed making a track half a mile wide. Great damage was done in the northern part of Wisconsin, devastating a track of eighty rods in width. About a dozen persons were injured near Wautoma, and the town of Lima suffered great loss. Branches of the same storm swept through Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Illinois. A passenger train on the Fort Dodge and Des Moines road was blown over near Farmerstown, Iowa, and a number of passengers injured. In Kansas it swept the Cottonwood and Neosho valleys, destroying property, injuring people and killing four persons near Emporia. Maryville, Mo., felt the storm severely.... A most audacious and successful bank robbery was committed at the Lafayette National Bank of Commerce. A package of $10,000 was stolen before the very eyes of the owner and in the presence of the President of the bank. While Mr. S. H. Burton, a wealthy citizen, was employed in the pleasant occupation of clipping coupons from Government bonds upon which interest had fallen due, three well-dressed men entered and, while one engaged the President of the bank in conversation, and another was conversing with Mr. Burton, the third adroitly possessed himself of the valuable package. All three of the rascals had disappeared before the loss was discovered.

The reports heretofore sent East from Arizona that the Indian troubles were about over in that Territory, seem to have been a little premature, as the following telegram from Tucson, dated the 3d inst., would indicate: "It seems that Gen. Wilcox did not reach the Indians yesterday, but Col. Sanford, with three companies, Capt. Bernard's, Lieuts. Overton's and Glass', arrived on the ground about 11 o'clock. The Indians outnumbered the soldiers and began the fight, which continued after dark. The Indians then continued their course south, crossing Arivapa valley, evidently trying to make through to the Galuri mountains, but they were headed off by forces sent out from Wilcox. In the engagement one sergeant was killed and six privates wounded. During the night the Indians proceeded south about seven miles, but failed to make the mountains, and were overhauled near Hudson's ranch, on the open plain, where the soldiers could fight to good advantage, and it is believed that Nachez and his whole band of Chiricahua Indians will be exterminated or taken prisoners. Before reaching the point where the battle took place yesterday, Nachez, with his entire band, attacked Bartolo Saminargo's train near Cedar Springs, killing him and Braulto Gomez, Sastenoso Estrado, Demetrio Carmelo and Julian Rias, teamsters. One man is missing. The herder escaped. Since yesterday morning up to this hour twelve citizens are known to have been killed, and six others are reported killed."....The Governor of Illinois has offered a reward of $500 for the capture of the notorious Williams brothers, who recently turned up in Pike county, Ill., and killed the Sheriff of Calhoun county, who attempted to capture them, beside wounding two of the posse. Since that time they have been roaming around in Calhoun county....One of Chicago's most beautiful parks—Central—will hereafter be known as Garfield park....The old way of swindling farmers is being worked very successfully in portions of Kansas and Missouri. The swindlers represent themselves as agents of a grocery house, and obtain the signatures of their victim to orders for goods, which orders eventually turn up in the banks for collection as a genuine promissory note....Orson Pratt, a famous Mormon elder, has just died at Salt Lake.

The grain warehouses of Chicago are chuck full, and, as they will accept no more from the railroads, the railroads refuse to take grain into Chicago from the interior. Such a condition of things at this time in the season has never been known. The quantity of grain in store in Chicago on the 5th of October was 12,532,512 bushels, against 7,627,451 bushels at the same time in 1880.

The steamer Dell Queen was torn from her mooring, at Kilbourne City, on the Wisconsin river, and carried over the dam, and four men were drowned in the stream.... The first through trains on the St. Paul road from Sioux City to Chicago passed over the track on the 4th inst. The Mississippi is crossed at Savanna, Ill., and entrance into Chicago is made by the road formerly known as the Chicago and Pacific....J. B. Lyon & Co., a well-known Chicago grain firm, have suspended. Liabilities about $600,000. They state they will be able to pay them in full.

Col. Bernard overhauled a band of Chiricahua Indians in the vicinity of the South pass in the Dragoon mountains. A fight ensued, and the Indians retreated across the mountains under cover of the darkness. One Indian was known to have been killed, and an Indian girl about 8 years old, richly dressed, and supposed to be the chief's daughter, was made prisoner. Three soldiers (colored) were wounded.

GENERAL.

The Garfield Monument Committee, of Cleveland, have sent a letter as follows:

> Gen. James B. Longstreet, Atlanta, Ga.:
>
> No kinder expressions of sympathy for the movement commenced to secure funds for the erection of a monument over the grave of James A. Garfield have come than many responses from the South. We believe the Southern people only want an opportunity to contribute in order to add largely to our fund. In view of this what can be done at the Cotton Exposition? To make it general will you please confer with the managers, newspapers and national banks. Send answer by telegraph. All funds collected are to be sent to the Second National Bank of this city, the authorized treasurer. If deemed advisable, we will send an accredited agent to confer and arrange with you for receiving and forming collections.

The fund, on the 1st inst., amounted to $3,839.... Once again it is rumored that the Marquis of Lorne is to return home. It is stated that after the close of the next session of the Canadian Parliament he will resign his position as Viceroy of Canada and accept a seat in the House of Lords. The Canadians will not be very sorry at his loss.

The matter of final interment of the late President Garfield's remains at Mentor or Hiram having been agitated by some people in his old district, Dr. Robinson has talked with the widow. Mrs. Garfield said that if the Trustees had not offered a lot she should have purchased one in Lake View Cemetery, as she believed, if alive, the late President would so have directed. She thought it his wish to be buried there. She added that the question of burial is no longer open, and will not be opened.

The fund for the family of President Garfield amounted to $334,679 on the 4th inst. The Cleveland committee at the same date reported the receipt of $5,137 for a monument to President Garfield.

The Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society have addressed a communication to President Arthur, asking, in behalf of a large body of Christian men and women, that in dispensing the official hospitality at the White House, and in his appointments to public office, and in his official communications to Congress concerning legislation involving the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, he will use his great opportunity to discourage all injurious social drinking usages.

The new class of naval cadets at Annapolis was treated to a vigorous hazing. Suspicion fell on members of the third class, and, as they refused to make any disclosures, the whole fifty were sent on board the Santee, to remain until further orders, no communication between them being allowed.... The manager of the Panama Canal Company has arrived at New York and reports that work on the canal is progressing favorably and rapidly. There are now 1,200 men at work, and it is expected that 8,000 will be at work by December. The sum of $250,000 has been already expended on the work, and drafts for $500,000 more are in the hands of the bankers.

It has been stated by a gentleman who had ample means of knowing that since the 12th of August and until the time of his death President Garfield had only an imperfect command of his faculties—had only lucid intervals. He was in the habit of commencing sentences, and, toward the end, his mind would begin to wander—he would lose the thread of his discourse. Many of the sayings attributed to him during that period were either misunderstood or incorrectly reported. Thus the saying: "Is it worth while to continue this struggle longer?" is said to have been made out of what the patient once said during his mental wanderings: "Is it worth while to go into this Florida business further?" being the repetition of a remark by him at the time of the Electoral Commission, of which he was a member....St. Thomas College (Catholic), near Montreal, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $400,000.

THE SOUTH.

The leader of the Iron Mountain train-robbers was a shrewd villain named Cox, about 25 years of age, and his companions were Texan cowboys, named Stephens and Delaney, aged 18 and 20. They are full of jests in regard to the events of the raid. On the charge of robbery with assault they can be sent to the penitentiary for twenty-one years. ....B. W. Hicks was executed at Spartanburg, S. C., for the murder of his wife, and made a full confession on the gallows.

Henry Metzgar, who was executed at Titusville, Fla., stated on the scaffold that he had killed seven men....Mr. James Freeman's grandson, aged 9, at Gray's Mills, Miss., being offended at a little daughter of Allen Harris, aged 2 years, blindfolded the child and threw her into a well, where she was found dead.

A villainous attempt was made near Hope, Ark.—the scene of the late train robbery—to wreck a passenger train on the Iron Mountain railroad. Spikes were drawn and the fish-bars joining the rails removed. A heavily-laden freight train, instead of the passenger, was ditched. The place where the diabolical work was done is only fifteen feet from a long trestle work.

The Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., after suffering from cancer of the stomach for the past eighteen months, died at his home in Louisville on the 5th inst. Dr. Robinson was probably the most prominent citizen of Kentucky, and was certainly one of the most prominent and one of the ablest American divines. He was born in Strabine, county Tyrone, Ireland, in the year 1814, and was consequently in his 67th year at the time of his death.

POLITICAL.

About forty temperance men of Wisconsin, acknowledged leaders, met in convention at the State capital and nominated a State ticket, as follows: Governor, Theodore D. Kanouse; Lieutenant Governor, Harvey S. Clapp; Secretary of State, Edward Bartlett; Treasurer, John Sutton; Attorney General, E. G. Comstock; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Robert Graham; Insurance Commissioner, Thomas Bracken; Railroad Commissioner, John Nader.

The proposition to make David Davis presiding officer of the Senate finds advocates in both parties. Col. L. Q. Washington is the most formidable candidate for the Secretaryship....Secretary Windom, says a Washington correspondent, insists that his resignation be speedily accepted by the President. He will reach St. Paul before the assembling of the Legislature in special session, and ask a re-election to the Senate.

It is stated that Gen. Grant told a prominent Republican, a friend of Mr. Blaine, a few days after the death of Gen. Garfield, that many of the late President's appointments were politically bad, serious mistakes, and that some of them showed ingratitude on the part of President Garfield. Gen. Grant attributes the worst of these appointments to Secretary Blaine, and held that Blaine's own appointment was the greatest mistake President Garfield had made.... President Arthur has assured Postmaster General James and Secretary Hunt that they can remain in the Cabinet as long as they desire, and both will keep their portfolios. Commissioner Dudley is being urged for the Interior Department....Hon. Nelson W. Aldrich has been elected to succeed the late Gen. Burnside as United States Senator from Rhode Island.

A Washington correspondent says "it is generally believed that Secretary Windom will retire from the Cabinet at an early date; also, that he will be a candidate before the Minnesota Legislature to fill out his own unexpired term, although Senator McMillan, who is now in Washington, thinks that Mr. Windom is on too intimate personal relations with Senator Edgerton to be a candidate against him."

WASHINGTON.

Hon. John W. Foster, Minister to St. Petersburg, has tendered his resignation.

A Washington dispatch says Mrs. Garfield is greatly shocked to learn that so large a part of the remains of her late husband is now in the Medical Museum, at Washington. She consented to the injured vertebræ and rib being taken to the capital, because she understood that they might be used in the trial of the assassin, but she never consented to the bringing there of anything else and believed that all else of the body of her husband was in the casket in Ohio. She now knows that all the inward parts, from the neck to the loins, were brought to Washington, and have been exhibited, no one knows to how many curious surgeons. She is indignant, but finds it difficult to now rectify the matter.... District Attorney Corkhill and Col. Cook, Col. Bliss and Mr. B. H. Brewster, counsel for the United States Government, appeared before Judge Cox at the Washington Criminal Court and filed an information against Thomas J. Brady, ex-Second Assistant Postmaster General; John L. French, lately Brady's chief clerk; W. H. Turner, ex-clerk of the Postoffice Department; George L. MacDonough, a star-route contractor; and Samuel P. Brown, an agent of the star-route ring. This course was taken because it was feared that the District Grand Jury could not be relied on, and that Brady had too many friends in that body.... In the case of Sergt. John A. Mason, who shot at Guiteau Sept. 11, and who is to be tried by court-martial, his counsel will plead insanity. ....Col. A. F. Rockwell has written to the President, resigning the position of Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds at Washington, D. C.

President Arthur returned to the capital on the 4th inst. Among those who called at his residence in New York was a demented person named Wilkins, who bore a long document with many signatures, and asked for a Consulship.

Dr. D. G. Lamb, who performed the autopsy upon the late President, appeared before the District of Columbia Grand Jury on the 4th inst., and explained, with the aid of a diagram, the track of the wound in the President's body. Edward L. Du Barry, a new witness, who was present at the depot and witnessed the shooting, also testified. With this witness the Grand Jury concluded their investigations. Several additional witnesses were examined and a true bill was voted unanimously. Foreman Churchman proceeded to the office of the District Attorney and placed in Corkhill's hands the presentment against Charles J. Guiteau for the murder of James A. Garfield, President of the United States, by wounding him with a bullet fired from a pistol in the hands of Charles J. Guiteau, at the Baltimore and Potomac depot, on the 2d of July, A. D. 1881..... In the Criminal Court at Washington, on the 4th inst., Brady, French, Turner and Brown, charged with star-route frauds, made their appearance. Their counsel entered motions to quash the informations filed. The District Attorney asked that the accused first enter bail for their appearance. As they stepped forward to the desk Judge Cox informed them that he would soon fix the amount of bail, and discharged each on his personal recognizance. Prominent men in the audience exhibited much sympathy with the accused.

It is stated that the investigation into the affairs of the Treasury Department, begun soon after the inauguration of President Garfield and suspended through his being shot, will be reopened under President Arthur, but not until Secretary Windom's successor has been installed in office. It is believed that Gen. Arthur wants to know how his Treasury Department was managed by John Sherman.... The number of original patents issued the first nine months of the present year was 13,684, an increase of 2,261 over last year. The receipts of the office for the same period were $69,447 in excess of the corresponding nine months of 1880. The Commissioner of Patents recommends a considerable increase in the examining corps and clerical force....Capt. Howgate reappeared in Washington the other day, and was arrested on the additional charge of embezzling $50,000.

Mr. Brown, President Garfield's Private Secretary, has resumed his duties at the White House, and will temporarily fill the place at the request of President Arthur. Mr. Brown says that the affairs of the late President will be turned over to the hands of trustees, and that it will be the purpose of these trustees to call for all the bills incurred in the expenses of President Garfield's last illness, as the family considers these expenses private debts against the estate. If Congress should afterward decide to assume the indebtedness, the trustees would undoubtedly forward them the bills.... During the month of August, 1881, $5,939,949 worth of petroleum and petroleum products were exported from this country, against $8,883,080 worth exported during August, 1880. The total value of the same class of goods exported during the first eight months of this year was $30,187,250, against $21,276,585 exported during the corresponding period of 1880....The accused in the star-route conspiracy came into court on the morning of the 5th inst., and entered bail. Judge Cox said he had somewhat hurriedly examined the information filed, and had thought it proper to make a distinction in the bail to be demanded from the accused. Brady and Brown, he said, stood in the light of principals, and for them he would fix bail at $7,500 each. For Turner and French, who were merely clerks, he would fix bail at $4,000 each.

FOREIGN.

The Lancet, the leading medical journal of Great Britain, severely censures President Garfield's physicians for not having stated in their bulletins the true condition of their patient. The Lancet says that a bulletin should be the truth, and nothing but the truth. The Bliss bulletins were not the truth; they were anything but the truth....An earthquake at Changert, Australia, in Asia, killed eleven persons. The Grand Mosque and many dwellings were greatly injured.

Rev. Sheehy, the priest recently released from Kilmainham jail, at a banquet in Dublin stated that, unless the Government released all the subjects within a month, he would advise the Limerick Land Leaguers to stop paying rent. A number of Wicklow county farmers have formed an Anti-Boycotting Association. Most of the members have incurred the displeasure of the Land League. Another association of loyal subjects has been instituted in Queen county, who will aid "Boycotted" persons. The fact that the Land League of Ennis have passed a resolution discouraging indiscriminate Boycotting seems to indicate that the Parnellites themselves think they are rather too rapid in this direction....The Farmers' Alliance of England have drafted a land bill which will give to the farmer tenants of England the same rights on tenancy and farm improvements which have been given to the Irish.... The Czar of Russia has made arrangements for a meeting with the Emperor of Austria at Warsaw at an early date.

The recent massacre of railway employes by Arabs at Wadzergha, Tunis, was prompted by the wholesale destruction of olive forests and vineyards which Gen. Sabatier deemed necessary. The station master was burned alive. The ten workmen killed were Maltese and Italians. A thorough investigation is being made by the English and Italian Consuls....Eugenie, ex-Empress of the French, has made her will, leaving all her property to Prince Victor, and declaring him to be the head of the Bonapartists.

Seventy-seven per cent. of the cases of the diphtheria epidemic raging in the Province of Orel, Central Russia, are fatal....The Ameer of Afghanistan made a public entry into Candahar on the 30th of September. There was a general illumination the 2d inst.

Business Failures.

The commercial failures for nine months ending Sept. 30, 1881, are reported by Dun, Wiman & Co. as 6,800, as compared with 3,476 for the corresponding period of 1880. The liabilities for three-quarters of the present year were $51,000,000, as compared with $45,000,000 for the same period of 1880. The failures for the last three months have been 1,024, with liabilities of $10,600,000, while in the third quarter of 1880 they were 979, with liabilities of $12,000,000. The geographical distribution of failures shows that the Southern States suffered somewhat, inasmuch as the figures indicate their liabilities for the first three months of 1880 were only $848,000, as against $1,054,000 for the present quarter. On the other hand, for the Western States the liabilities show a decline of nearly $650,000 in favor of this quarter. In the Middle States the liabilities are about $1,000,000 less in amount than in the corresponding period of 1880. In the Eastern and Pacific States the liabilities are but little different from those of last year. In Canada an exceptionally good condition of affairs has prevailed, the failures for the last three months having been but 130, with liabilities of $787,000. This is a better showing than has been made in the Dominion for any quarter in the past six years.

A MURDERER LYNCHED.

A Prisoner in the Bloomington (Ill.) Jail Murders the Jailer—The Murderer Seized and Executed by a Howling Mob.

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 3.

About 6:20 o'clock Saturday evening three discharges of a revolver following each other in rapid succession were heard in the county jail. Then the people on the street began to cry, "Police! police!" and run toward the jail building, at the corner of Center and Market streets. Immediately rumor prevailed that the prisoners had obtained pistols, had killed the Sheriff and Jailer, and were making their escape. The fact was, a prisoner named Charles Pierce, a horse thief, had murdered Teddy Franks, the County Jailer. Franks, while changing the prisoner, Pierce alias Howlett, from one cell to another, was murdered in cold blood by Pierce, who seized the jailer's revolver from Franks' hip pocket, shooting him three times and killing him instantly. The third shot, a large ball, went clear through the body.

Within a few moments after this tragedy had occurred, a large number of people had gathered in front of the north door of the jail, within which the body of Teddy Franks was lying stark in death. Walking among the people, you could hear men say: "This is too bad! This comes from the failure of our courts to punish crime. He ought to be hung." "Don't stir up a mob!" a law-and-order man would say. "Let the law take its course."

"The law be cursed," was the reply. "There is no law against murder and other crime in McLean county. He ought to be hanged."

Then some one cried: "Let us take him out!"

Cheers followed this, and other voices cried: "Take him out!"

After an hour's excitement, a rush was made and the work of breaking into the jail was commenced.

For two hours the mob worked at the jail with six sledge hammers and battering rams made of great pieces of timber.

Sheriff Alor and his deputies and the city police soon ascertained that they could do nothing to restrain the reckless men and boys who composed the assaulting crowd. Fully 5,000 persons were in the howling, yelling multitude. At last the mob gained admittance to the jail, secured the murderer of Franks, took him to a tree on Market street, near the northeast corner of Center and Market, put a rope around his neck, threw one end across a branch and pulled the culprit up. One of the mob climbed up the tree and out upon the branch to which the murderer was hanging, and, amid the cheers of the delighted people, pulled the hanging body up three or four feet and let it drop.

"Pull him up higher!" the crowd would cry. The man on the branch would comply with the request and let the body drop with a dull thud, while the savage crowd would cheer and laugh. The knot had slipped behind the head of the corpse, and the head was thrown forward. The eyes stared and the pale face turned from side to side, a spectacle which the maddened crowd seemed to enjoy. It cheered and yelled and shouted: "There's law for you!" "Curse the courts!" was cried here and there.

At last the man on the branch caught the rope, slipped down it, threw his legs around the neck of the corpse and jumped to the ground. The crowd seemed to be delighted by this feat. It cheered and yelled and shouted. About that time rain began to fall, though the great crowd lingered about, wading in the mud and, by streaming gaslight, viewing the dangling murderer.

When the murderer was raised the first time, Officer Bailey, of the police force, imperiled his life by running in, cutting the rope and letting Pierce fall to the ground. In attempting to repeat it he came near being killed. A large number of people climbed on top of a shed to witness the execution, when the building went crashing to the ground. Strangely, none were seriously hurt. After thirty minutes the murderer was cut down and the Coroner took charge of the body.

The lynchers had a keg of gunpowder ready with which to blow up the jail if they failed to batter it down.

All day yesterday (Sunday) the wrecked jail and the building in which lay the remains of the lynched man were the center of attraction. Thousands visited the jail, looked at the wrecked doors, windows and brickwork, at the terrible blood stains on the floor and on the counterpane on which Franks died, and which was saturated with the bright and vivid crimson of arterial blood. The remains of Pierce lay in a box of ice at the undertaker's, and a constant stream passed in at the front door and out at the back. The fatal rope was around his neck. The face was livid with coagulated blood, which extended down to the center of the chest, yet the face wore a peaceful expression. Many ladies fainted at the sight. At least 5,000 persons viewed the remains. A card was tacked on the elm tree, on which the following was written: "Bloomington, McLean County, Ill.—Axman, axman, spare this tree, and never touch a single bough, and may God spare this elm tree forever to grow to mark where the first justice, a murder, ever was done in McLean county, and may the good people stand by the boys that did it."

While all deprecate the method by which the end was attained, there seems to be no regret whatever that the murderer met his death.

Debris of Old Buildings.

[New York Industrial World.]

The varied materials collected from old buildings in course of demolition form enormous accumulations in some of the upper wards in New York City, where one can purchase anything in the building line from a piece of lead pipe to a magnificent French plate glass. Timber of all sort, from giant cross-beams to little joist posts, can be had in these yards, where there are also window sashes, window weights, doors, shutters, iron and wooden staircases, window frames, doorposts, flooring lathing, tiling, wainscoting, bricks, brown stone fronts, granite steps, granite columns, iron girders and iron fronts, iron stair-frames, and, in fact, anything and everything that has ever been used in a house. Door knobs, bell handles, iron railings and balconies, not to mention the cornices, are there in profusion and confusion. The profits of this business are said to be great, and while it frequently happens that large figures are paid for some houses, the profits are correspondingly great. Recently some houses on Twenty-third street were taken down, and as they were finished in hard wood, ornamented with mirrors and great spacious fire-places, the price demanded was very large, but the old brass work and glass alone paid the purchaser for what he had invested, and the wood, stone and brick of the house was all clear profit. The two firms who do the largest traffic of the kind carry to their yards about fifty truck-loads of material a day. Then there are dozens of others in the trade who do a much more modest business.

Blinkum's Cow.

Blinkum put up a notice in the post-office advertising a cow for sale. Now on a square trade Blinkum can't be beat. A neighbor wanted to purchase a cow, saw the notice, and called upon Blinkum. "I understand you have a cow to sell," said the purchaser. "Yes, sir, and she's as good a cow as ever whisked her tail in mesquite time," said Blinkum. "How old is she?" "Just 9 years old last spring, and not a day older." "Breach?" inquired the purchaser. "Not a breach," said Blinkum. "What kind of milk does she give?" "It ain't milk. It is clear cream, and forms into butter balls all stamped before you can get out of the yard. Why," continued Blinkum, warming up, "her butter has taken first premium at the Oxford county fair for the last dozen years." "Is she a farrow or a new milch cow?" "Well," said B., scratching his head, "she's—well she's—which do you want?"

POLITICAL STATE CONVENTIONS.

The New York Republican State Convention met in the Academy of Music, New York city, there being 4,000 persons in attendance. Hon. Thomas C. Platt called the delegates to order. Hon. Frank Hiscock was proposed as temporary Chairman, but declined in the spirit of harmony. The new Senator, Warner Miller, was then elected by a majority of 108 over Hiscock. George William Curtis submitted a resolution in indorsement of civil-service reform, which was referred to the Committee on Platform. Chauncey M. Depew was chosen permanent Chairman. The following ticket was nominated: Joseph Carr, Secretary of State; Ira Davenport, Comptroller; Leslie W. Russell, Attorney General; Silas Seymour, State Engineer, and F. M. Finch, Judge of the Court of Appeals. The proceedings were harmonious throughout. A lengthy platform was adopted. The first section is in memory of the late President Garfield, the second is complimentary to President Arthur; the third relates to the national finances, and favors the reduction of national taxes, but that such reduction must be made with a view to the continued protection of American industry; the fourth favors the earnest prosecution of the star-route swindlers, as well as all others wronging the Government; the fifth favors a proper civil-service reform; the sixth is complimentary to Gov. Cornell; the seventh is in favor of making the canals free; the eighth and last favors equal taxation and opposes monopolies that unjustly oppress the people.

The Massachusetts Democratic Convention assembled at Worcester and nominated the following State ticket: Governor, Charles P. Thompson; Lieutenant Governor, James H. Carleton; Secretary of State, Gen. M. L. Donahoe; Treasurer and Receiver General, Col. Francis J. Parker; Auditor, Charles R. Field; Attorney General, Gen. Patrick A. Collins. The platform declares that the tariff needs readjustment; monopolies have to be watched; corporations should have their charters revised; shipbuilding should be encouraged, not by subsidies, but by doing away with taxation burdensome to shipbuilders; prohibitory laws have not accomplished the purposes for which they were enacted, and are an invasion of the personal liberty of the citizen; the payment of the poll-tax as a qualification for voters should be abolished; the national debt should be reduced as fast as possible, and the rate of interest lowered, etc.

The Maryland Republican Convention was held at Cambridge, in that State, under the Presidency of ex-Postmaster General Creswell. Thomas Gorsuch, in Frederick county, was nominated for Comptroller. The resolutions reaffirm the supremacy of the nation over the State, the equality of all citizens before the law, demand honest voting and fair counting, legislation for the promotion of national industries and for the development of the resources of the country, and call upon Congress to provide an improved method for the ascertainment of the will of the people at Presidential elections.

The Minnesota Democratic Convention met at St. Paul and nominated the following ticket: Governor, Gen. R. W. Johnson; Lieutenant Governor, E. P. Barnum; Auditor, Rudolph Lehmicke; Secretary of State, A. L. Lamberton; Treasurer, John F. Russell; Attorney General, George N. Baxter; Railroad Commissioner, R. B. Cook. The platform is notable for its brevity, embracing, as it does, only three resolutions. The first denounces repudiation, the second expresses grief for the death of President Garfield, and the third and last reaffirms the principles announced in the last National Democratic Convention.

Base-Ball.

The contest for the base-ball championship of the United States, between the eight clubs constituting the National League, closed on the 30th ult. Chicago again captured the champion pennant, the club representing that city having won more and lost fewer games than any of its competitors. The record of games won and lost and the standing of all the clubs is as follows:

Ambition in Life.

That life is a poor one which is without ambition—which has no object to work for, no height to strive to reach. A person may be good and kindhearted while willing to live in idle ignorance, and let the world go on growing in wealth and wisdom, without his taking an active part and interest in its onward movements. He may be good, but most certainly he is dull of mind and sluggish of body. No individual destitute of ambition will make his mark in the world. He will come and go; few will note his coming, and few will grieve at his going. Ambition it is that gives to men the will and energy and the determination to accomplish great things.

Defective Logic.

Gabe Snodgrass owns a farm near Austin, and Jim Webster asked Gabe what he was doing with his farm this year.

"I has rented it on sheers to Sam Johnsing. He gets half a dollar outen ebery dollar he makes outen de farm."

"But how does yer know he gibs yer de kerrect amount ob what he makes? He kin keep back some and you will nebber know it."

"Dar ain't no danger ob dat. Don't yer see de more dollars he brings in ter me, de more half dollars he gets. You bet he ain't gwine ter keep back none. He ain't no fool. He wouldn't get no half dollars outen de dollars he would keep back."

Opposition.

A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man; kites rise against the wind and not with the wind; even a hard wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition; opposition is what he wants and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance. He who can not abide the storm without flinching lies down by the wayside to be overlooked or forgotten.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1881.

SECRETARY OF WAR LINCOLN has a a little son whose name is Abraham.

THE largest boat on the great lakes is being built at Cleveland, Ohio. It is to be of iron, 302½ feet in length, 39 feet breadth of beam and 25 feet depth of hold, and to have a capacity of 3,200 tons.

A UNIQUE will is that of Columbus Tyler, of Somerville, Mass., who left $150,000 or more to the First Unitarian Society, giving his widow the homestead, which is at all times to be free to children and nurses. Savings-bank accounts are to be opened for Sunday-school children.

THOMAS GARFIELD, the grandfather of the President, died suddenly when young. One of his sons was Abram Garfield, the father of the President, who also died suddenly while still a young man, leaving a widow and four young children. Thomas Garfield another brother, lost his life suddenly a few months ago, and now comes the death of the President, for whom the nation mourns. There seems to be a line of fatility in the family.

IN England, as in America, popular respect for medicine and surgery has been greatly weakened by the showing made by the post mortem at Elberon and a comparison in the light it gave with the previous opinions of the surgeons and the treatment by them. Mr. Jennings, the New York World's London correspondent, is told that one of the great surgeons of England held from the first that Dr. Bliss' location of the ball was all wrong, and that the same eminent authority denounced the experiment with Bell's instrument as a rank piece of quackery, absurd and ridiculous from its nature.

AN eminent New York physician makes a statement calculated to alarm the devotees of Gambrinus. "The man," he says, "who habitually drinks beer is sure to have Bright's disease. Beer in large quantities is one of the worst things a man can ruin his stomach and organs with. In Germany, where the students drink a good deal of the beer young, their kidneys and bladders are always affected. About the best thing to drink," said the doctor, "is claret wine at dinner, when it can go right into the digestion. I can't recommend anything to drink but that. All drink is more or less an injury."

THE Rev. Isaac Errett, who presided over the funeral services of the President in Cleveland, is the editor of the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, the most influential paper which the Disciples possess. He was a warm personal friend of Gen. Garfield for many years. During the war, or at some time immediately preceding it, a curious compact was made between four gentlemen—Gen. Garfield, Dr. Errett, the Rev. Harrison Jones, of Cleveland, and Dr. J. P. Robinson. By its terms, when any one of the four died the survivors were to attend the funeral and take some public part in the ceremonies. Gen. Garfield was the first to pass away, and the compact was carried out. The Revs. Errett, Robinson and Jones were all present at Cleveland and took a conspicuous part in the funeral ceremonies.

BERT WILKERSON, a Colorado outlaw who was kindly assisted "over the range" by the vigilantes, was highly connected in Indiana, as well as with the limb from which he made his last appearance in public. His granduncle was Joseph Wright, who was Governor for several terms, then United States Senator, and afterward Minister to Berlin. His grandfather was for many years a member of the Indiana Legislature. His father was a cousin of the Hon. James F. Harlan, of Iowa. Bert had for several years figured as a border bar-room hero, and the murder for which his life was taken was wanton, brutal and cowardly. When about to die, however, his bravado proved trustworthy. He adjusted the noose himself, remarking, "Boys, I'll help you all I can," and coolly kicked over the chair on which he stood.

NOT long since there died in Great Britain one of the most famous men that country has produced. Brilliant, audacious, fertile in resources, great in his capacity to judge human nature, Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, passed away after a long and eventful career. A Queen mourned his loss, and thousands of subjects offered heartfelt tributes at his bier. His rise to eminence among British statesmen has been commented upon as wonderful; and so indeed it was. Yet how stands his record as contrasted with that of our dead President? Disraeli started from the ranks of affluence, and by nearly half a century of man's endeavor won the Premiership, a coronet and the Garter. Garfield started from the home of toil, and in a quarter of a century reached the most exalted goal which any citizen in America can attain. His memory will be cherished in the hearts of his countrymen, because whether on the farm, the tow-path, on the field of battle, in the halls of legislation, or in the Chief Magistracy of the nation, he was from and of them.

"GREAT men are the sons of great mothers." Eliza Garfield, the mother of the late James A. Garfield, has demonstrated her title to greatness, regardless of her descent, in the care and training of her great son. But she sprang from a race of Christian heroes. The Ballous, of Rhode Island, trace their lineage back to the Huguenots—to one Maturin Ballou, who fled from France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and settled in the Roger Williams colony. It was he who raised the "Elder Ballou meeting-house," which still stands as a sort of Mecca, where the Ballous annually celebrate the glories of their ancestors. One of the Ballous was as poor as the Widow Garfield when she split rails with which to "fence in" the little log cabin in which James was born. He was a preacher at the time of the first Revolution, conscientiously opposed to receiving pay for his ministrations, "and yet so poor that his son in learning to write was compelled to use birch bark in lieu of paper, and charcoal instead of pen and ink." This son was Hosea Ballou. This is the stock whence the noble mother of the late President sprang. On the father's side he came from Massachusetts Revolutionary stock. His great-grandfather and his great-uncle fought against England in 1776.

AT the memorial meeting at Cleveland Dr. J. P. Robinson, the oldest friend of the late President, who gave him money to pay his school bills when a boy, made a very affecting speech. Among other things he said: Some forty-nine years ago, when that man was at his mother's bosom, I held him in my arms. I never lost sight of him fully, but I lost him for a season and a time. I found him by and by a large, overgrown boy. I found him in Hiram with my friend Mr. Rhodes and others. He was then working at a trade and going to school both. He had an old mother—blessed be God, I can speak of that mother—who was early left a widow, with him and three others. But she trusted in Israel's God. She said that He was the God of the widow and the Father of the fatherless; and she taught the little boy to bend his knee and say: "Our Father, who art in heaven." When I met that boy at Hiram he called me to one side. I went. I spent most of the afternoon with him, and I wept, as some of you are weeping now. I found what the boy wanted. He wanted a little encouragement. He wanted the solace of a friend. God be thanked, I pledged him all the friendship and all the consolation, with the means surrounding me, that I could give him. I bade him to my house, and he came, and my good old wife threw her arms around his neck as though he was her own boy. She kissed him, and they never met, from that day to this, after a few days' absence, without the same thing occurring.

Official Report of the Autopsy.

The October number of the American Journal of Medical Science contains the official report of the autopsy of President Garfield. This report is by the surgeons in charge, and is quite full and comprehensive. The appearance of the body before the autopsy is told, the manner in which the autopsy was made is detailed, and all the pus cavities, ulcerations, fractures, etc., are described at full length. It appears, as heretofore stated by the physicians, that the ball, after fracturing the right eleventh rib three and a half inches to the right of the vertebral spine, went obliquely forward, passing through the body of the first lumbar vertebra, and lodging in the adipose connective tissue immediately below the lower border of the pancreas, and about two inches and a half to the left of the spinal column. Here, the doctors again declare, the ball was completely encysted. The track of the ball between the point at which it had fractured the rib and the point where it had entered the vertebra was considerably dilated, and pus from it burrowed downward through the adipose tissue behind the right kidney, and thence found its way between the peritoneum and the right iliac fossa, making a channel which extended almost to the groin. The doctors again declare that the immediate cause of death was secondary hemorrhage, which proceeded from a rent nearly four-tenths of an inch long in the main trunk of the splenic artery. The doctors declare that this rent must have been made several days before the death of the patient. The physicians also describe the condition of the vital organs, which were more or less diseased. This last official statement of President Garfield's physicians further proves how false were the official bulletins and how completely the physicians were at fault as to the location of the ball and the direction which it took after entering. It is really surprising that Gen. Garfield lived so long as he did, considering the multitude of ulcerations, pus cavities, etc., which the fatal bullet had generated.

Absurdities of Pronunciation.

There are certain slovenly and corrupt practices which are condemned by the dictionaries and other equally slovenly and primarily corrupt practices which are approved by them. We must not, for instance, say hov'l for hovel, but we must say grov'l for grovel. We are required to hev'n and elev'n for heaven and eleven, but are put at once out of the pale of good speakers if we say Ell'n for Ellen. To say bev'l for bevel, or bush'l for bushel is to prove one's self a vulgarian; but not to say ev'l for evil is to set one's self down as an ignoramus. It is wholly wrong to say pan'l for panel, but wholly right to say old'n for olden. It is really impossible to account for these differences. They are certainly irrational, and the wonder is that they should continue to receive the support of orthoepists.

THE most economical man in the State lives at Winchester. Having ten cords of wood to saw he invited all the sawyers of the town to his wood-house and let each saw a stick. He then gave the contract to the one who had the thinnest blade.

A YOUNG man named Kibby fell from an excursion train near Greencastle. The train was stopped and run back in search of Kibby when it again gave him a terrible blow knocking him from a cross-tie on which he had placed himself—mashing the skull and killing him instantly.

THE Blue Ribbon people of Muncie made a gallant fight against the license applicants in the Commissioner's Court. They gained seven cases out of eight applications. This is the first fight made against the saloon keepers of Muncie for several years.

ABOUT 10,000 persons assembled at Elliottsville, Monroe county, to celebrate the 100th birthday of Hon. James Parks, a native of North Carolina. The old gentleman cultivated his garden alone last summer. Ex-Gov. Hendricks and Judge Franklin addressed the centenarian's guests.

IN Johnson county there is a regularly-organized gang of thieves, who carry on their operations boldly and constantly. Near Franklin tombstones have been desecrated, hogs killed and chickens and clothing stolen. One man had 225 chickens taken, and another several sacks of flour. Robberies take place every night.

IN Howard county, 510 persons have been convicted of misdemeanors by Justices of the Peace and the Mayor of Kokomo during the past year. Of this number 309 were in the city. Intoxicating liquor was directly the cause of 304 and indirectly of 158 of the offenses. The school fund realized $699.75 from fines.

ELIZABETH T. WELLS has filed a suit in the Circuit Court at Logansport against Simon Peter Kerns, asking for $2,000 damages for breach of promise of marriage. She was a domestic in the family when the alleged proposal was made, which he subsequently reconsidered and married another.

IN Huntington county some workmen on a farm, while digging a well, unearthed a fossil skeleton, including two tusks eleven feet long and as thick as a man's thigh; a rib four feet two inches long, leg bones and the skull. Two of the teeth which fell from the jaw weighed respectively seven and three-fourth and eight and one-third pounds.

THE State Bureau of Statistics has lately issued a third bulletin relative to the number of horses, mules, cattle, hogs and sheep in the several counties for 1880-81. The total shows:

	1881.	1880.
Horses	639,079	500,998
Mules	52,754	57,815
Cattle	1,261,803	1,050,788

Sheep	1,638,388	1,348,869

For 1881 Marion county shows the largest number of horses, 11,573; Vanderberg the largest number of mules, 2,329; Allen the largest number of cattle, 24,509; Rush the largest number of hogs, 47,495, and La Grange the largest number of sheep, 43,533.

The Etiology of Diphtheria.

Dr. Hubert Airy has made a report to the local government board of England, of the results of his investigations into several local outbreaks of diphtheria. The disease did not seem to be affected by elevation or dampness of site, nor by foulness nor over-crowding. He found abundant instances of its contagiousness, as in schools, from visits to the dwelling of a diphtheria patient, from making purchases at a shop where the shopwoman had diphtheritic sore throat. There was one striking case of the conveyance of diphtheria to a new locality, by a person who had been in contact with a diphtheria patient, but had not herself contracted the disease. This would show that the poison can attach itself to the person or clothes of a visitor or occasional attendant, and be thus transported for some distance. Dr. Airy concludes that diphtheria is caused by an organism which can multiply both within and without the human body, its increase in the latter case being promoted by clay soils, by the season, and by moisture. It is also capable of infecting both water and milk and seems to flourish best in the autumn months.

Vigilance.

Vigilance—eternal vigilance—is said to be the price of liberty, and to-day great success in commercial, as in every other sphere of life can be bought only with the same coin. Put plenty of it in your cargo, if you would make your voyage a success.

ANY-ONE knowing of a small boy who would not run seven blocks for a chance to ride half a block with his stomach across the edge of a grocery wagon tail-board will please bring him to this office and receive the reward intended originally for the man who should bring in a new comet tied up in an old paper.—Boston Globe.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
TradeMark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 28.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

A Disease which is Universal requires a Universal Rem'dy and none of the ills to which the human family are subject is more Universal than Fever & Ague, and no remedy has yet been discovered which has proven so universally successful in curing Fever and Ague as KRESS' FEVER TONIC. In many sections of country the atmosphere is filled with malaria, arising from great pools of water left standing from the overflow during last spring, which, becoming stagnant throw out malaria to so great an extent that in order to prevent CHILLS and FEVER from gaining a hold on the system, it is necessary that a remedy should be used which will counteract the evil, and in cases where the disease has taken hold of the system, effect a cure. For this purpose there is nothing equal to KRESS' FEVER TONIC. It is the Best & Safest Remedy known, and wherever used has given perfect satisfaction. In its composition neither Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnia, nor Mercury is used. It will cure the most stubborn cases of AGUE in a very short time and leaves the system strong and vigorous to resist MALARIA. One bottle usually is all that will be required, unless in aggravated cases, or where the patient is continually exposed to malarial poison, in such cases, a second bottle may be required. A Bavarian driver named Xavier Semmelmann, now living in the town of Iribach, near Straubing, is one of the strongest men in the world. Among the latest recorded achievments of this athlette, who claims to be the champion weight-lifter of Germany, the following deserve especial mention: A few days ago, at Hogeldorf, a suburb of Rottenburg, Semmelmann raised a blacksmith's anvil, weighing 488 lbs, with one finger, and subsequently lifted a load of bricks, 540 pounds in weight to the height of his shoulder. Last year Semmelmann commenced a starring tour in Ingolstadt, some dexterous theives succeeded in robbing him of all his personal property, and this untoward mishap so disgusted him with traveling that he resolved never again to quit his native district.

Castelfrentaro, a small town of 6,000 inhabitants, is, it is feared, about to disappear altogether. The town stands on a hill overlooking the Adriatic, and has a deep valley on one side. In 1858 a storm seemed to shake the foundations of the hill, and on the 31st of July last the alarm was given that the town was slipping down. Efforts were made to arrest the process, but in vain; and at 8 a. m. of the 1st of August the greater part of the town fell in. Of the 6,000 inhabitants, 4,000 found themselves thus deprived suddenly of house and home. The remainder anticipate a like fate in a short time.—Indianapolis Journal.

Holloway's Pills.
Never despair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's Pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. Read the advertisement elsewhere.

How Watches are Made.
It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large porportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.
THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SOLID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

Communication.

BUTTE, MONTANA, Oct. 6, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: As this is my third communication to the COURIER from Montana, since I have been a resident of this wonderfully magnificent domain. I shall now endeavor to contribute a few items of interest to the columns of your valuable Journal, hoping that its host of readers may peruse them with pleasure, and in the end have become somewhat enlightened in regard to the location and mining industries of the richest mining camp on the American continent, viz. Butte City.

Butte derived its name from the isolated Butte or Lone mountain, which stands directly westward of the city and about one mile distant. This Butte is pronounced by all mountaineers to be the most perfect Butte to be found in the Rocky Mountain range, and her beautiful and handsome form attracts the immediate attention of all who are fortunate enough to behold her proud and haughty appearance. Our beautiful mountain city is located near the central part of the territory, and about three miles distant from the main range of the Rocky Mountains on the Pacific slope, and directly on the head waters of the Columbia river. The city lies on an incline of about 20 degrees, running north and south, and extending its length from Basin valley up the gorgeous foothills to the great and powerful mining work of the Alice, Moulton and Lexington silver mines, a distance of three miles. The city is nearly two miles in width. The beautiful and gorgeous scenery surrounding this great western metropolis is grand beyond the most vivid description, and our most efficient writers have failed to do her justice in this direction. I must positively declare that to realize the magnificence of the surrounding beauties of nature, one must see it to appreciate it, and, as the casual observer looks forth and beholds, he emphatically remarks: "What marvelous works the great Ruler has created." Even the works of art astonish the tourist as he enters the city, when he observes the mammoth mining structures, fine church edifices, grand territorial and county buildings and handsome residences, built of both brick and granite.

Butte is sustained in her wonderful business transactions by her rich silver mines, which number upwards of three hundred. The names of the principal ones are as follows: The Alice, Moulton, Lexington, Acquisition, Original, Gagnon, Magna Charta, Anselmo and many others of less magnitude and value. The Lexington mine was recently sold to parties from Paris, France, for the enormous consideration of $1,000,000, cash, and 15 per cent. of the company's stock which will reach the sum of $2,500,000. The Alice mill is the largest in the world, and runs sixty stamps night and day, Sundays included. The main shaft of this mill is down to the depth of 700 feet; other shafts vary from four to five hundred feet in depth. The Moulton comes next, with forty stamps, and ore enough in sight to keep the mill in operation for five years.

In 1876, all there was of Butte, was a small cluster of cabins on the slope, and here and there on the bleak and barren mountain sides a windlass and a little dump of dirt and ore. Now it is a solid cluster of many splendid edifices, with about eight thousand inhabitants, collected together from every nation, and of every color. And it is strongly predicted that before another decade shall have passed, her population will be increased to fifty thousand people. Looking up from town, where once scraggy pines and spruce, projected from the crags and points, we see scores of substantial and attractive brick and granite residences perched upon the projections or quietly nestling in the accommodating nooks. Every available building spot is utilized. Crowning the summits, are gigantic mills and hoisting works, and there the iron flails with heavy blows, are threshing out the harvest of silver and gold; while in the valley far below lines of heavy smoke, drifting away like streamers from the tall stacks, show where the smelters are turning out monthly, a thousand tons of base bullion. Butte is certainly a "phenominal" camp. There has never been a true lead sunk in the camp that proved barren; there never has been a reverse in its fortunes; there has never been a day since 1876, when the tide of prosperity turned back.

No other mining camp on the continent has such a history. Its bullion shipments average $75,000 a week the year round; capital is flowing in early seeking investment; owners of property realize handsome sums, and are content, while the investors stock up at ten or twenty times the sum paid, and are soon producing dividends on those amounts. Laborers are paid good prices. Miners receive as a compensation for their work from $3.50 to $4.00 per day; carpenters, from $5.00 to $7.00; masons and stone-cutters from $5.00 to $10.00. Clerks and delivery-men from $75 to $100 per month; compositors 45 and 50 cents per thousand m's., and all other labor is paid for in proportion. Merchant's sales are like those of jobbing houses; manufactures have orders greater than they can fill; and colossal buildings are looming up, and every street is impeded with building material, and builders have now on hand all the work they can complete by midwinter.

To a man with means, no better opportunities for profitable investments can be found in any state or territory in the union, than now present themselves in Montana. The railroads that are now being built into the territory are opening up large sections that are rich in all the elements that constitute a prosperous country. Not a tithe of the 20,000,000 acres of our agricultural lands has yet been turned over by the plow. Only a few farms here and there, mere specks upon our vast area of fertile lands, are cultivated; the balance lays open to settlement. Mining camps are becoming the centers of attraction, and real estate in each is on the boom. New towns are springing up on the lines of the railroads with prospects that each will rapidly advance to the proportions and dignity of a city. Business in every industry in the territory that is being prosecuted is active; healthy and remunerative. As the roads advance into the heart of the territory, there industries will be enlarged and others developed untill all are included.

The only reasonable thing to do for every one now living in Montana is to drive a stake somewhere—to have something that will enhance in value with the enhancement of values about it. In our own fair city it is a matter of speculation with some, at what time the crest of the boom in her prosperity will culminate. That event, is, no doubt in the dim future. Her growth must be commensurate with the growth of the entire country. With an increase of wealth and population, must come an increase of commercial transaction with other places, which is itself an increment of growth. The general outlook, not only for the whole territory, but for the city of Butte, is full of hope, and is of such fair promise that resolute and sagacious men cannot fail to profit by it.

If I deemed it prudent, I could give the readers of my communication more intelligence of this promising country, but thinking I have already said enough to tire their patience, I will bring my remarks to a finis by a promise to contribute more at some future time. Yours respectfully,

J. F. KLINE.

Surprise Party.

On the evening of the 30th of Sept., Uriah Thomas and wife were greatly surprised by the arrival of some of their neighbors and friends in order to commemorate her fiftieth birthday. They were all cordially received, and the evening was spent in joy and mirth. There were no presents given, but a table was spread, such as kings would admire. The number would have been greater, had it not been for the stormy evening. The following are the names of those who were present.

J. Cobler and wife,	F. Keller and wife,
J. Cramer "	A. Thomas "
G. Cobler "	H. A. W. "
I. Cobler "	J. Osburn "
A. J. Carmer "	F. Thomas "
W. C. Carmer "	Mrs. Hensinger,

And a myriad of children whose names we cannot mention for want of space.

If You are Sick, Read the Kidney-Wort advertisement in an another column, and it will explain to you the rational method of getting well. Kidney-Wort will save you more doctor's bills than any other medicine known. Acting with specific energy on the kidneys and liver, it cures the worst diseases caused by their derangement. Use it at once. In dry and liquid form. Either is equally efficient—the liquid is the easiest, but the dry is the most economical.—[Interior.

H. C. Shull was in the neighborhood investigating the credentials of a school teacher. All right.

Mr. Lawhead informs us that he has all the teachers required in his township except for No. 6.

The series of evening schools at No. 7 will be renewed this winter. They are interesting and profitable.

W. B. Chissman has returned from the east where he has settled the business he went to attend to. He will teach the home school at No. 7.

We find the following rediculous statement going about in our exchanges. Its inventor's name has not reached us, but he ought to have a patent. To any one green enough to believe that any county board would allow $5,000 for doctor's bills, we would commend a copy of the COURIER of September 22, in which all the allowances are given. The following is the article itself. "The report shows that the commissioners of DeKalb county allowed at their September term $5,000 for doctor bills, while the expenses for the poor alone footed up $1,500."

LADY BEAUTIFIERS.—Ladies, you can not make fair skin, rosy cheeks, and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers of the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such rich blood, good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof. 42-3w.

Wm. Dillon, a well-known resident of the "Island" near Syracuse, was run over by the cars and kill October 1, while crossing the railroad bridge over the connection of the two lakes. It is thought he had been drinking.

FOR SALE.—Small drug store, located at Fairfield Center, Indiana. Furniture all new and attractive. Good location, and good investment to any one who means business. For particulars enquire of BOUGHMAN & RUDOLPH, 36 2mo. Fairfield Center, Ind.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A NEW YORK telegram says that Wall street operators are still praying Windom to do something to relieve the money market. They say that too much money has gone into the treasury during the past two months, and too little has come out, at this season of the year especially, when the East is enduring a steady drain from the West and South. The situation becomes aggravated by the counter drain into the treasury. The Secretary, it is reported, fears that, by opening the doors of the treasury, the incentive to speculation will be stimulated, and that he will be censured for allowing himself to be governed and influenced by Wall street appeals.

A FIRE which broke out in the Fourth avenue car stables, at New York, completely destroyed the block of buildings and caused the death of 100 horses. The flames crossed Thirty-second street and made an ash-heap of Mowell's furniture storage building, the loss being estimated at $2,000,000.

THE wholesale provision firm of Washington Butcher's Sons, which was established in Philadelphia 121 years ago, has failed. Its liabilities are admitted to be $1,000,000. It has a branch house in Chicago, where it has been speculating heavily in grain.... Parties in New York are buying up all the Confederate bonds they can secure, giving $2.50 per $1,000 for them. It is supposed an effort will be made by English and New Yorkers to secure their payment.... The loss on the Morell warehouse and Vanderbilt car stables, in New York, is now said to be about $2,500,000. About 225 horses perished.

CHARLES H. LANDENBERGER'S mill, on Randolph street, Philadelphia, was destroyed by fire. There were thirty-five persons in the building. Some of them escaped by jumping others escaped through the doors. Six persons were badly burned, about the face and eyes, and nine persons were seriously hurt in jumping. Two of those burned will probably die. .....Dr. J. G. Holland, for many years the editor of Scribner's Monthly, and well known in the literary world by the title of "Timothy Titcomb," died suddenly in New York. He was born in Belchertown, Mass., in 1819, and graduated from the Brookline Medical College in 1844.

THE WEST.

LIEUT. BERNARD, pursuing the hostile Indians in Arizona, telegraphed to Gen. Wilcox, on the 7th inst., that the savages would cross the Mexican border, and that he would follow with the sole object of punishing the murderers and robbers. The Mexican Consul at Tucson dispatched couriers to various points on the line, asking the Mexican troops to co-operate in the pursuit.

THE corn corner in the Chicago market burst last week, a decline of 14 cents having taken place in seventy-two hours. The freight blockade has been lifted in consequence.

TWO MEN who had robbed a store in a town in New Mexico were arrested at Socorro. After a confinement of one day for reflection, their bodies were found dangling from the limb of a cottonwood tree, as a notice to foot-pads and horse-thieves.

THE principal dramatic event in Chicago is the appearance of the distinguished young tragedienne, Miss Mary Anderson, at the leading theater—McVicker's—supported by a strong company. Her engagement covers two weeks, during which she will appear in "Pygmalion and Galatea," "Ingomar," "Evadne," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Lady of Lyons," "Fazio" and several other popular plays.

THE attendance at the semi-annual conference of the Mormon church at Salt Lake numbered 15,000, including delegates from Arizona, Idaho, Wyoming and Nevada.... Passengers by the Southern Pacific railroad which arrived at El Paso, Texas, on the 10th inst., report that when the train was passing Wilcox, Arizona, a fight was in progress between the citizens and Indians. The Indians seemed to have made an attack on the whites, who were thrown into great confusion, and were retreating. The firing of guns, which was fierce and constant, drowned the noise of the railroad train and was heard for a number of miles. The bodies of five line repairers were seen near the track shot through the head. Arnold's command attacked the Indians between Badacolaric rancho and the Huachuacas mountains. The Indians abandoned all their animals and took to the mountains. Two Indians were found dead. Maj. Barnard was ordered to follow the savages into Mexico if permission were granted by the Mexican authorities.

A PASSENGER train on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad collided with a freight train while passing the crossing of the Chicago and Northwestern road, near Clinton, Ill. Two persons were killed, one fatally injured, and three others badly bruised. ....The Garfield monument committee of Cleveland has requested the Governor of each State and Territory to act as general manager for his district in securing contributions.... John McDade, ex-Chief of Police at Quincy, Ill., had a shooting affray on the street with a sporting man named Thomas Jackson, in which both were mortally wounded. ....D. H. Williams, Secretary of the Relief Committee at Pittsburgh, has recently given the Michigan burned district an exhaustive inspection. He reports that the wheat is everywhere green above the ground; that contributions have been rapidly and honestly distributed, and that the farmers are deeply grateful for the aid received.

THE anniversary of the great fire in Chicago was made the occasion, by the daily press of that city, of reviewing the commercial progress. From the statistics printed by the local papers we glean that Chicago became a city in 1837. In the thirty-four years between that time and 1871 she increased her population to 306,000, a gain in thirty-four years of about 300,000, or an average gain per year of about 9,000. In the ten years between Oct. 9, 1871, and Oct. 9, 1881, the gain in population was 250,000, or an average gain per year of 25,000. In the thirty-four years from 1837 to 1871 the business of the city grew in volume until the year's sales had a money value of $450,000,000. In the ten years succeeding the fire of 1871 the volume of business was more than doubled. A year after the fire the bank clearings for the week were $20,000,000. Nine years later the clearings for the week were $89,000,000. In 1871 the value of the manufactured products of Chicago was $76,843,000. In 1881 the value is $285,000,000. The decade just ended began with a fire that destroyed nearly 18,000 buildings and $140,000,000 worth of personal property and merchandise. The fire of 1871 cut out of Chicago a city as large and as populous as was the Washington of that year. In the last ten years the lost ground has not only been recovered, but a population larger than that of New Orleans or San Francisco has been added; in other words, the city that was cut out has been restored and another city almost as large as the Washington of to-day and that of ten years ago combined has been built up around it. This rapid recuperation from the effects of a great calamity, and steady growth in population and volume of business, constitutes one of the wonders of the nineteenth century.

"BUSHY" CLARK and "Frenchy" Bardean were lynched near Socorro, N. M., for horse-stealing....James Little, a former conductor on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, was murdered at his house at Las Lunas, N. M., by a party of drunken Mexican desperadoes, three of whom were arrested the next morning and made a full confession. They were taken from the calaboose by a quiet and orderly mob and strung up to cottonwood trees along the Rio Grande.

A TRAIN loaded with building material on the Republican Valley extension of the Burlington and Missouri railroad, near Table Rock, Pawnee county, Neb., broke loose and started on a downgrade. It overtook a flat-car on which were forty-five laborers. Three of the laborers were killed. The others escaped by jumping....The Texas and Pacific road is being pushed toward El Paso at the rate of twelve miles per week, and through trains to San Francisco are promised by the opening of 1882.

MARTHA SCALES, familiarly known as old Mother Scales, died recently at Carrollton, Greene county, Ill., at the wonderfully advanced age of 110 years. She was in all probability the oldest person in Illinois at the time of her death. She was born at Halifax Court House, in Virginia, and remembered well when the war of the Revolution ended.... A daring robbery was committed near Girard, Macoupin county, Ill. Three masked men invaded the farmhouse of E. Perrine, an old resident of the county. After gagging the entire family, consisting of Mr. Perrine, his wife and two daughters and a hired man, they proceeded to ransack the house. They secured $8,000 in gold and other valuable articles.... Four masked robbers entered the farmhouse of Allan Fairbank, of Wheaton, Ill., bound and gagged four members of the family, and secured from a mattress $2,600 in money and $10,000 in registered bonds....Gov. Pillsbury sent to the Legislature of Minnesota an earnest appeal to them to pay the railroad bonds on the basis of Chamberlain's proposition by which half of the amount due, $4,000,0000 will be saved.

THE SOUTH.

COX, Stephens and Delaney, the Iron Mountain train robbers, pleaded guilty in the Hempstead Circuit Court, at Washington. They were sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of seventy years each. The sentences are cumulative, fourteen years being the limit laid for robbery. The robbery occurred on the 22d of September. They were captured on the 28th and a special term of court held to try them. They have been placed in the penitentiary at Little Rock.

IN a gambling house at Eagle Pass, Texas, where George Hauner had lost his stake, he quietly returned at a late hour and murdered the two winners, whom he found asleep on the table....A man named Church, confined in the jail at Newton, Catawba county, N. C., charged with the murder of Miss Thompson, in Alexandre county in August last, was taken out and hanged by a mob.

GEN. JOSEPH C. ABBOTT, who entered the Union army from New Hampshire, and since the war settled in North Carolina and represented that State in the Senate, has just died at Wilmington.

THE four men who captured the Arkansas train-robbers secured $9,000 of the booty, which they divided up, one of the party making some objection. The robbers would then have been released but for the large rewards offered. In consideration of their silence about the divide, a solemn pledge was made them that no effort would be spared to release them from the penitentiary. The captor who favored the return of the money to the railroad company escaped two attempts at assassination, and revealed the facts to the authorities.

IN a quarrel at Louisville, Ky., between two brothers, Budd and Henry Bassett, over the loan of the sum of 25 cents, the latter shot the former, killing him instantly. Before the shooting the two had fought, during which Henry was so badly cut that he will die.... The three young Arkansas train-robbers have made full confessions. Their names are Sam and Thomas Williams, 17 and 19, and James Delaney, the former printers. All lived in San Augustine, Texas. They wanted money to get married. One of the Williams boys was barefooted, and all were ragged. They say their captors took from them $19,000.

GENERAL.

THE Fenian dynamite plot, according to a Philadelphia dispatch, has been thoroughly unraveled by the Secret Service Bureau of the United States. It is said to be true that the scheme was organized to cheat the British Government out of the rewards to be offered. Peter H. Foye, a saloon-keeper of Philadelphia, caused the manufacture of the infernal machines and turned them over to O'Donovan Rossa. Foye then began negotiations with the British Consul at New York, and received $10,000 for information leading to the discovery made on the docks at Liverpool. He some weeks ago fled from the United States detectives at Philadelphia, and no one knows his whereabouts.

MRS. ALEXANDER OTTERSON discovered a masked robber in her house at Wheeling, W. Va. He was "going through" the bureau, taking therefrom all the valuables. She moved in the bed, whereat the robber compelled her at the muzzle of his pistol to rise and seat herself in a chair. While in this position the robber cut off her hair, which was of very luxuriant growth.... Great destitution prevails among the working people on the north coast of Labrador and on the island of Anticosti. Many families have had no flour for six weeks, and have been living on herrings and potatoes. Low fevers prevail in consequence and many deaths have occurred.

AMONG the new Directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company elected are George J. Gould, Cyrus W. Field and C. P. Huntington. President Green announced that for the year which commenced with July the gross earnings cannot fall short of $15,000,000, of which amount the net profits will be $6,500,000....The Baltimore and Ohio road has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent. and added $1,400,000 to the surplus fund.

WASHINGTON.

A SCANDAL of huge proportions has been discovered in the Interior Department. It threatens to exceed in enormity the petty peculations recently exposed in the treasury. There is a ring in the Pension Office that has had existence for several years, the operations of which are being rapidly developed. It involves a number of clerks in the examiners' branch and revising division, and among those some of the most trusted men in the office. These gentry have been working by collusion with outside parties who will soon be exposed.... The pastors of Washington, called on President Arthur at his residence. Dr. Chester, pastor of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, who had been designated to act as spokesman for the visitors, read an address to which the President responded substantially as follows: "I am glad to meet you, gentlemen; yet it is with deep sorrow under the circumstances which have so sadly devolved such momentous duties upon me. In the performance of those duties as Chief Magistrate of a God-fearing and religious people, I appreciate my dependence upon their moral support and approval under divine blessing and guidance. I thank you cordially for assurances of your support, and for your kind expressions of sympathy and confidence." At the conclusion of President Arthur's response the visitors were individually introduced to and shook hands with the President....A Washington dispatch of the 7th inst. says: "It is now probable that Mr. Scoville will not be alone in the defense of Guiteau. Intimations have been received here, within a day or two, that at least two quite distinguished lawyers will volunteer their services. The matter will be settled in the course of the next week."

THE Grand Jury of the District of Columbia appeared in the Criminal Court room at Washington, on the 8th inst., and presented the indictment against Guiteau. It embraces eleven counts, and is drawn with great minuteness. They describe the shooting as having been done at the Baltimore and Potomac depot in Washington, of malice aforethought, with a pistol, inflicting a mortal wound, from the effects of which the President died.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has appointed Mr. G. P. Clarke First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, and Mr. C. B. Walker, of Indiana, to be Deputy Commissioner of Pensions. President Garfield had determined on these appointments, and President Arthur in making them only carried out the late President's intentions.

A WASHINGTON telegram states that "Scoville, Guiteau's counsel, is much depressed by his visit to New York. He found no lawyer willing to undertake the defense without an exceptionally large retainer. Guiteau rejects Scoville's proposition to employ Robert G. Ingersoll as counsel, because the whole Christian world would be prejudiced."

THE first vignette of the late President which will appear among the treasury issues will be upon the checks for the 6-per-cent. bonds continued at 3½ per cent. These checks embrace the first issue which can be utilized for that purpose. In the Postoffice Department the vignette of the late President will be placed on the 5-cent postage stamp.

POLITICAL.

PROMINENT Democrats in New York have seen fit to write to Mr. Tilden, asking his pleasure in regard to their candidacy on the State ticket. Mr. Tilden publishes a letter, declining to assume the position of censor over candidates, declaring that he would not accept the Governorship even by a unanimous vote of the people, and asking that the Democratic party make the best possible choice of candidates.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES, on the first day of the extra session, sent President Arthur nearly 500 nominations of Postmasters for Presidential signature, as a preliminary to their transmission to the Senate. Secretary Kirkwood also sent a large number of nominations to minor offices in the Interior Department to the President for his approval.... Secretary Windom announces himself a candidate for Senator from Minnesota to fill out his own unexpired term.

ELECTIONS were held for Governor and other State officers in Ohio and Iowa on Tuesday, Oct. 11. In Ohio the election was an unusually quiet one, even for an "off year" in politics. There was a good deal of scratching on both sides, and the Prohibitionists polled upward of 10,000 votes. Gov. Foster and the entire Republican ticket, it would seem at this writing, were elected by 12,000 to 15,000 majority. In Iowa the vote was extremely light—probably 60,000 less than last year—attributed largely to rain, which prevailed generally throughout the State. The Republican majority is estimated, at this writing, at 40,000 to 50,000.

IN conversation with a friend at Washington David Davis is credited with saying: "I could not take a Cabinet position if it were offered me. I left the Supreme bench because its duties were too arduous for me, and a Cabinet position would prove far more engrossing than a Supreme Justiceship. I shall remain in the Senate."....The Minnesota Legislature convened in extra session on the 11th inst., for the purpose of considering the proposition of the holders of the old railroad bonds for a settlement at 50 cents on the dollar.

IT is stated that Judge Folger was tendered the Secretaryship of the Treasury by President Arthur, but it was declined with thanks. Judge Folger was elected Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New York last year. His term of office is fourteen years, and his salary is $12,000 per annum, and, at the end of his term—he will be then over 70—he can retire on full pay. Such a position he thinks too good to give up for a three-years' term in the Secretaryship of the Treasury.

THE New York Democratic State Convention was in session two days at Albany, under the Chairmanship of Erastus Brooks. The Tammany and Irving Hall delegations, from New York city, were excluded from seats in the convention by a unanimous vote. The following ticket was nominated: W. H. Purcell, of the Rochester Union, Secretary of State; George H. Lapham, Comptroller; Roswell A. Parmenter, Attorney General; Robert A. Maxwell, Treasurer; Thomas Evershed, State Engineer; Judge of the Court of Appeals, ex-Attorney General Schoonmaker.

FOREIGN.

MR. GLADSTONE delivered a remarkable speech at Leeds. He said that to grant justice to Ireland was a sacred duty, but he held that England and Scotland should not be forgotten. He intimated that Ireland may yet be loyal, notwithstanding the action of the irreconcilable party, and declared that the Irish laborers were the most advanced in the world. He referred to John Dillon as an honorable opponent whom he could honor (although his Government put him in prison). He contrasted O'Connell's loyalty with Parnell's disloyalty, and was very severe on the latter gentleman, whom he denounced in unmeasured terms....Advices from St. Petersburg state that the most comprehensive measures have been taken for the safety of Annitchkoff Palace, the Czar's favorite St. Petersburg residence. A subterranean passage has been constructed all around the palace, which can be patroled by sentinels, and immediately placed under water. The Czar is negotiating for the purchase of the various houses surrounding the palace.

PARNELL, in an address at Waterford, Ireland, pronounced Gladstone the greatest coercionist and most unrivaled slanderer of the Irish nation....Archbishop Croke, in replying to an address from the Land League at Dublin, advised the enormous assembly to give the new land act a fair trial. This is opposed to the Parnell policy....A Paris correspondent says it is rumored that England and France have agreed on a joint policy of defense for their subjects in Egypt, and have for this purpose dispatched ironclads to Alexandria.

AT a meeting of the Land League in Dublin, Dillon said that Gladstone's praise of him at Leeds was based on false grounds. Dillon declared that, had he had his way, he would not only have stood between his countrymen and the Land act, but would have thrown out Gladstone and his Government. Since his release from prison he had approved Parnell's entire policy. He urged the people, despite the laws, to obey Parnell. Dillon added that he regarded Gladstone as a dishonest politician, with a reputation based upon persistent and unrestrainable power of misrepresenting facts.... Parnell, at Wexford, said the movement for using only articles of Irish manufacture was more likely to succeed than any of a similar kind ever started. Ireland had plenty of capital of her own, and all the Irish wanted was full and fair scope for the ingenuity and intelligence of Irishmen. Mr. Spaight, a magistrate in Ennis, County Clare, was fired at in his house, but not injured. Outrages are reported in various parts of the country. Fifteen persons were injured in a riot at Ballyragget.... Foxhall, the famous American horse, took the Czarowitch stakes at the Newmarket (England) races. His owner, James R. Keene, won upward of $500,000, and declares him the best 3-year-old in the world....Once more a conspiracy against the life of the Czar has been discovered. The Nihilists had used the telegraph to inform the would-be assassin of the Czar's intended journey....The Portuguese court goes into four days' mourning for President Garfield.

AMONG the outrages reported by the Irish constabulary was one at Kanturk, where a man named Sullivan put needles into potatoes and fed them to the cattle of a boycotted farmer....Keene's colt Foxhall won the select stakes at Newmarket, England.

Leprosy Among the Chinese.

Leprosy exists among the Chinese to a greater extent than is generally supposed. It is one of the most dreaded of diseases in China. There is a current belief there that if a person afflicted with it can kill a young girl and eat her heart the evidences of the disease will not appear in the face, and that he can thus escape being known as a leper. This notion has probably been the cause of many murders. The leper's demand for alms is seldom refused, most Chinamen dreading the victim of this loathsome affection, and fearing that, if denied assistance, he may in some way infect them with his leprosy, as, for instance, by tainting their food.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

A COLUMBUS (Ohio) dispatch of the 14th inst. says that returns of the election from "seventy-six counties of the eighty-eight show Republican gains of 10,782; Democratic gains, 5,648; net Republican gain, 5,169, which, added to Townsend's majority of last year, gives a Republican plurality of 24,139. The twelve counties yet to hear from will not materially change the above figures. The Prohibition vote in the State will foot up a little over 15,000. The Greenback vote will not exceed 2,000. The Democrats take their Waterloo defeat very kindly, the Old Liners especially, who were told to stand back by the young Eagles, while they ran the campaign, and are now congratulating themselves that the young bloods were so thoroughly worsted." A Des Moines telegram of the 14th says that "full and reliable returns of the Iowa elections from seventy-two counties give Sherman (Republican) a net majority of 31,526. The returns sustain the previous estimates that Sherman's majority will be 45,000. The House of Representatives stands, according to present returns: Republicans, 75; Democrats, 20; Greenbackers, 5.... The Nebraska State Democratic Convention, at Omaha, nominated W. H. Munger for Supreme Court Judge, and Alex Bear and S. L. Brass for Regents of the University, and adopted a platform declaring for free-trade, honest money and economical administration, and against the high-license liquor law.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 14th inst. says: "President Arthur has determined that he will not send in the nominations for the Cabinet until after the Yorktown celebration. He said to the Senators this afternoon that he would be gratified if the Senate would not take any early step toward adjournment. He added that, of course, he would have to go to Yorktown himself, and he would be pleased to have all the Senate go. When asked further as to his wishes, he suggested that the Senate take a recess of several days to attend the Centennial and do honor to the French and German visitors. He added that he would not detain the Senate many days after the return from Yorktown."

THE explosion of a coal-oil lamp in the town of Kokomo, Col., caused nearly the complete destruction of the place. The loss is placed at $400,000. Several hundred men became infuriated by liquor stolen during the conflagration....The masked robbers who obtained $8,000 in gold from the farm-house of Ezekiel Perrin were captured at Litchfield, Ill. Their discovery was due wholly to a drunken dispute over the division of the spoils....The Garfield monument at Lake View Cemetery, Cleveland, is to cost $200,000, of which Cleveland proposes to raise $50,000.

PARNELL, the head and front of the agitation in Ireland, was arrested at a hotel in Dublin, under the Coercion act, and lodged in Kilmainham jail. The news of the arrest spread all over Ireland with the rapidity of light, and everywhere that it went the populace turned out, only to find the British soldiery armed and on duty ahead of them. The power of the English Government and the utterly helpless condition of the Irish people in any scheme of common resistance was never more terribly contrasted than in the secrecy, the suddenness, the complete success of this arrest, and the dazed helplessness with which the Irish people were compelled to learn of it in the presence of an armed force that seemed in a moment to have swarmed all over the country and taken complete possession. A cable dispatch to the Irish World, of New York, announcing the event, says that "Ireland is in a ferment. Dublin is in a state of terrible excitement. The city is an armed camp, showing that this has been premeditated and prepared for action. No event in the history of Ireland has so stirred Dublin, and the only parallel is Paris at the destruction of the Bastile."

A NEW YORK dramatic journal prints the statement that Edwin Booth and wife have separated. It is said the estrangement has grown for a year, and culminated with the discovery that the wife had willed to her mother property in Chicago deeded to her by Mr. Booth a year ago....The fire at Landenberger's mill, at Philadelphia, was much more destructive of human life than the reports at first made it appear. It is now ascertained that over twenty persons have died either from the result of injuries received in jumping from the windows of the burning building or perished in the flames of the burning structure....Col. Edwin B. Morgan died at his home in Auburn, N. Y. He was one of the stockholders of the New York Times, one of the originators of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express Company, and elected to Congress three terms....The total taxes levied upon the city of New York for the year are $31,071,840, the rate being 2.62 per cent.

AT a meeting held in Tammany Hall, New York, John Kelly declared that, although the Tammanyites were rejected, and, to some extent, humiliated by the Democratic State Convention, they were determined to bow to the decision and would give the State ticket their entire support.

THOMAS DEVEREAUX, Chief of Detectives at New Orleans, and Mike Hennessey, one of his men, engaged in a street affray, when Devereaux was fatally shot by Mike Hennessey and his brother Dave. In the struggle Devereaux inflicted fatal wounds on Mike Hennessey.

THE total value of the breadstuffs exported from the United States for the nine months ending Sept. 30, 1881, was $177,452,349, against $209,254,277 worth exported during the corresponding nine months of last year.

AT a reunion of ex-Confederate soldiers in Raleigh, N. C., resolutions were passed accepting in good faith the results of the war and condemning Guiteau's crime.

The Parasite of Malaria.

Prof. Laverau, of the Medical School of Valde-Grase, has published a work describing what he considers to be a new parasite which he has found in the blood of persons affected with malarial fever. A notice of his discovery was communicated to the Academy of Medicine so long ago as November, 1880, but it seemed to have attracted little attention, being thought to be simply one of the numerous announcements made of late years, of the discovery of the cause of malaria, which prove in the end to have no foundation. The organism described by Prof. Laveran is a minute cell, in general appearance, somewhat like a white blood corpuscle, and having, like it, amœboid movements. He considers it to be animal rather than vegetable in character, but for this there seem to be no sufficient grounds.—Sanitary Engineer.

PROFESSOR ALEXANDER WILSON, of Dublin, has calculated the amount of sugar contained in the calyces of different kinds of flowers, and the proportion of honey which insects can extract from it. He calculates that about 125 clover blossoms contain one gramme of sugar. As each blossom consists of about sixty calyces, at least 125,000 by 60, or 7,500,000 calyces, must be rifled to afford a kilogramme of sugar, and as honey contains 75 per cent. of sugar, it requires 5,000,000 calyces of clover to yield a kilogramme of the former. Hence we may imagine the countless numbers of flowers that bees must visit to be able to stock their hives with honey.

A Summary of the Wheat and Corn Yield for 1881, Compared with Previous Years.

Reports to Bradstreet's (of New York, numbering 2,000, in response to inquiries sent to all wheat and corn growing counties in the United States, enables that journal to summarize the wheat and corn crops of the United States for 1881. While the returns at hand, as might be supposed, do not contradict the gloomy accounts of total ruin to farmers of the West, it can not be said that the situation and outlook are so forbidding as some operators would have the world believe. As regards wheat and the yield in Illinois, a slight increase in acreage is reported, but the yield per acre has declined from 15.8 bushels, the figure of the census for 1879, to 7.9 bushels per acre in 1881. The total yield of wheat for the season in Illinois is estimated at 24,676,000 bushels, as compared with 51,110,502 bushels in 1879, these being the census figures, and 55,500,000 bushels last year. The story of this decline in the yield of Illinois is of a severe winter, chinch bugs and drought. The falling off from last year is about 56 per cent.

The returns from Ohio indicate a total yield of wheat for the season of 35,815,000 bushels, as compared with the census figures of 46,019,000 bushels for the crop of 1879, and 48,500,000 bushels for 1880, these latter being our own estimate, corrected in the light of the revelations of the census, a falling off of 25 per cent. The two influences which have affected the Ohio wheat yield are the severe winter and drought. The average per acre in Ohio is estimated at 12.8 bushels, as compared with 18 bushels in 1879.

The wheat crop of Michigan, this year, we place at 18,640,000 bushels, against the census return of 35,532,000 bushels for 1879, and our own estimate of 38,375,000 bushels for 1880. The average yield per acre in Michigan this year is put at 10.5 bushels. The census return indicates a yield of 19 bushels per acre in 1879. The falling off against last year is 47 per cent.

Minnesota promises a yield fully equal to that of last year, but the late and severe rains have caused a falling off. The average yield per acre this year is given at 10.17 per acre, the average for 1879 having been 11.8 per acre. The total yield for this year is placed at 33,170,000 bushels, a falling off of 8,380,000 bushels since last year.

The yield of wheat in Missouri this year is estimated at 18,890,000, against 24,966,000 in 1879, and 28,090,000 in 1880. Insects have been the cause of great damage in Missouri. The falling off in yield, compared with last year, is 33 per cent.

The yield in Iowa for this year is 24,969,600 bushels. The census reported the yield of 1879 at 31,154,000. The crop of 1880 is put down at 34,750,000, in the light of the census return.

Nebraska has been fortunate this season. Never a great wheat State, its yield is always comparatively normal. The census gives the average yield per acre in Nebraska for 1879 as 9.4 bushels, while the yield in Michigan was 19 bushels per acre. The outturn of wheat in Nebraska this year is 14,686,600 bushels, against 11,900,000 last year, thus showing a slight increase.

Kentucky is included in the Western States, and its yield for this season is put down at 8,087,000 bushels, against 11,356,000 bushels in 1879.

Indiana reports a total wheat yield for 1881 of 27,756,000 bushels, against 47,284,000 in 1879 and 48,400,000 in 1880, a falling off of 38 per cent.

The reports from Wisconsin are comparatively favorable, and show a gain in yield over last year, but a falling off as compared with 1879.

The wheat yield of Kansas for this year is estimated at 19,949,000 bushels. A substantial increase in acreage keeps the total out-turn about up to that of last year, notwithstanding a decline in the yield per acre owing to the bad season. The census report gives 17,324,000 as the yield for 1879.

Summarizing the above gives the following yield of wheat in the Western States in bushels:

STATES.	Crop of '79. (Census report.)	Corrected returns '80.	Bradstreet's. 1881.

Regarding the Pacific States it has to be admitted that, in the light of later export figures, the estimates of the yield of wheat in California must be revised. A falling off on California's yield this year is noted. The wheat crop of the State this year will reach 25,500,000 bushels, which is far below the yield of 1880. This estimate, which accords with that of the farmers, is thought too low by the shippers of San Francisco, who put the present season's yield some million bushels higher. The causes affecting the yield were a late spring, which prevented sowing, and on the heavy clay lands want of rain.

In Oregon and Washington Territory the crop of 1881 is estimated at 4,495,000 bushels in the Willamette valley, and 3,300,000 in East Oregon and Washington, making a total of 7,825,000 bushels. This, added to the yield of California, gives 33,325,000 bushels as the total wheat crop of the Pacific coast for 1881.

The Territory of Dakota this year returns a large increase of wheat acreage, and a total yield of 8,892,000 bushels, against 2,830,000 bushels in 1879. The total yield of Colorado and the Territories is estimated at 12,000,000 bushels.

The estimates for the yield of wheat in the Middle States show a falling off of 12 per cent against last year. The total yield for these States is placed at 34,000,000 bushels.

For the New England States a constantly declining yield is noted, and the estimate for the year is 1,000,000 bushels.

The total yield of the Southern States for 1881 is estimated at 40,000,000 bushels. The State of Texas reports a gain over last year.

Recapitulating the returns gives the following estimate of the wheat outturn for 1881:

	Bushels.
Western States..................	348,137,000
Pacific Coast..................	33,325,000
Colorado and Territories........	12,000,000
New England....................	1,000,000
Middle States..................	34,000,000
Southern States................	40,000,000
Total..........................	468,462,000

It is to be regretted that the returns regarding the corn crop render necessary a less-favorable summary than that of wheat. There is little to be said regarding the corn crop beyond giving estimates, save what is already notorious. The story is uniformly of the effect of the terrible drought. On the river bottoms, in some of the Western States, the drought affected the corn crop very little, but this is the exception. It is specially worthy of note that a striking increase in corn acreage has tended to equalize the defective yield.

The following table gives the yield for the Western States named for 1879 according to the census report of the Agricultural Bureau, estimates for 1880, and a summary of our returns for 1881:

STATES.	Census, 1879.	Agricultural Bureau, 1879.	Bradstreet's 1881.
Ohio........	111,877,000	119,[illegible],000	74,950,000

Total......	1,428,861,000	1,150,052,000	869,341,000

For Kentucky the yield for 1881 is 40,800,000 bushels, against a crop of 72,832,000 bushels in 1879 and 86,089,000 in 1880, the last figures being those of the Agricultural Bureau.

Tennessee reports a shortage of 48.6 per cent., the figures for 1881 being 34,500,000. In 1879 the crop of the same State was 62,764,000 bushels, and in 1880 about the same.

Virginia has a short crop, the decrease being 40 per cent.

Texas reports a falling off amounting to about the same proportion of last year's drop, or near 50 per cent., and the same thing may be said of West Virginia.

The estimate of the corn crop in the Southern States, as a whole, this year is 247,500,000 bushels, as against 262,475,000 in 1879, according to the census, and 430,825,000 in 1880, according to the bureau's revised figures.

The drought has most seriously affected the yield of corn in the Middle States. The shortage in Pennsylvania and New Jersey is fully 30 per cent. In New York State the damage has not been so great. The estimate of the yield of corn for 1881 in the Middle States is 62,400,000, against census figures of 96,789,000 for 1879, and the bureau's figures of 104,403,000 bushels for 1880. Recapitulating the above and adding the figures for New England, the Territories and the Pacific coast give the following corn crop of 1881:

	Bushels.
Western States..................	869,341,000
Southern States................	247,500,000
Middle States..................	62,400,000
New England States..............	1,100,000
Pacific Coast States............	3,800,000
Territories....................	[illegible]
Total..........................	1,1[illegible],541,000

The above table indicates that the corn crop of the United States for 1881 is short about one-third of the yield it was reasonable to expect.

GARFIELD AND BLAINE.

The Secretary's Letter Accepting the Tender of the State Department.

The Philadelphia Press publishes the letter of Secretary Blaine accepting the tender of the State Department, made him by the late President Garfield. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 20, 1880.

MY DEAR GARFIELD: Your generous invitation to enter your Cabinet as Secretary of State has been under consideration for more than three weeks. The thought had really never occurred to my mind until at our late conference you presented it with such cogent arguments in its favor, and with such warmth of personal friendship in aid of your kind offer. I know that an early answer is desirable, and I have waited only long enough to consider the subject in all its bearings, and to make up my mind definitely and conclusively. I now say to you, in the same cordial spirit in which you have invited me, that I accept the position. It is no affectation for me to add that I make this decision not for the honor of the promotion it gives me in the public service, but because I think I can be useful to the country and to the party, useful to you as the responsible leader of the party and the great head of the Government. I am influenced somewhat, perhaps, by the shower of letters I have received urging me to accept, written me in consequence of the mere unauthorized newspaper report that you had been pleased to offer me the place. While I have received these letters from all sections of the Union, I have been especially pleased and even surprised at the cordial and widely-extended feeling in my favor throughout New England, where I had expected to encounter local jealousy, and, perhaps, a rival aspiration.

In our new relation I shall give all that I am and all that I can hope to be freely and joyfully to your service. You need no pledge of my loyalty in heart and in act. I should be false to myself did I not prove true both to the great trust you confide to me and to your own personal and political fortunes in present and in future. Your administration must be made eminently successful and strong in the confidence and pride of the people, not at all directing its energies for re-election, and yet compelling that result by the logic of events, and by the imperious necessities of the situation. To that most desirable consummation I feel that, next to yourself, I can possibly contribute as much influence as any other man. I say this, not from egotism or vain-glory, but merely as the deduction from a plain analysis of the political forces which have been at work in the country for five years past, and which have been significantly shown in two great national conventions. I accept it as one of the happiest circumstances connected with this affair that, in allying my political fortunes with yours, or, rather, for the time merging mine in yours, my heart goes with my head, and that I carry to you not only political support, but personal and political friendship. I can but regard it as somewhat remarkable that two men of the same age, entering Congress at the same time, influenced by the same aims and cherishing the same ambitions, should never for a single moment in eighteen years of close intimacy have had a misunderstanding or coolness, and that our friendship has steadily grown with our growth and strengthened with our strength.

It is this fact which has led me to the conclusion embodied in this letter, for, however much, my dear Garfield, I might admire you as a statesman, I would not enter your Cabinet if I did not believe in you as a man and love you as a friend. Always faithfully yours,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

LET the soul be turned as strenuously toward good as it usually is toward evil and you will find that the simple love of goodness will give incredible resources to the spirit in the search after truth. Love, with intellect, will perform miracles.

THE treasure-house of a man's life is his heart, and he who has nothing there is poverty-stricken, though he roll in gold; while he who has a good deal there is rich, whether he has a roof over his head or not.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1881.

EXTRA SENATORIAL SESSION.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.

Caucuses were held on Saturday by both the Democratic and Republican Senators. There was quite a full attendance at both. The three new Senators, Lapham, Miller and Aldrich, were at the Republican caucus. After remaining in session an hour or more discussing the situation, the Republicans appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Edmunds, Logan, Allison, Sherman and McMillan, to confer with the Democrats on the general subject of organization. In the Democratic caucus, the sentiment in favor of electing Mr. Bayard as President of the Senate the first thing on Monday was overwhelming. It was agreed to without even a suggestion to the contrary. The next question, involving the right of the Democrats to elect a Secretary before swearing in the new Senators, was taken up, and a lengthy discussion ensued, some holding that the Secretary should properly be elected before swearing in the new Senators, and others that it was the right of the new Senators to participate in this election. Messrs. Pendleton, Garland, Voorhees, Pugh and Davis, of West Virginia, were appointed a committee to meet the Republican committee and confer with them in relation to the organization. The two committees met and were in conference just fifteen minutes. Before proceeding, Mr. Pendleton said that it was fair to the Republicans to state that the Democrats had already selected a candidate for the Presidency of the Senate, and that any conference could only take into consideration the remaining officers connected with the Senate. To this Mr. Edmunds, for the Republicans, replied that they were only authorized to confer as to the organization of the Senate. He also stated, in connection with the selection of a Democrat to be presiding officer of that body, that such an act was to offer a premium to some Democratic Guiteau or dangerous person to murder President Arthur for the purpose of placing the Democrats in control of the Government. The Republican committee returned to their caucus chamber, and made their report, when Senator Anthony was unanimously nominated the Republican candidate for the presiding officer, he being the oldest Senator in continuous service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.

Both the Republican and Democratic Senators met in caucus this morning with a full attendance. The Republicans remained in session but a short time, and merely mapped out a plan of action to govern through to-day. The Democratic caucus remained in session an hour or more, and discussed the question which occupied so much of their time Saturday, whether or not to admit the new Senators before electing a Secretary. No decision was reached, and the caucus adjourned. Senator Edmunds proposed to Senator Pendleton, Chairman of the Democratic caucus, that a Senator be elected to call the Senate to order. This was submitted to the Democratic caucus, which decided to accept, provided the Republicans would consent to the election of a Democratic Senator. This was acceptable, and both parties unanimously agreed that Senator Harris should call the Senate to order. The Senate assembled at noon. The galleries were filled to their utmost capacity. The Senators-elect—Aldrich, Miller and Lapham—occupied seats upon the floor on the Republican side. The Senate was called to order by Senator Harris. The President's proclamation having been read, Senator Pendleton moved the adoption of the following resolution: "That Thomas F. Bayard, a Senator from the State of Delaware, is hereby chosen President pro tem of the Senate." Senator Edmunds said that, of course, he did not object to the present consideration of the resolution, but he thought, under the existing circumstances, it was his duty to present the credentials of the Senators-elect, which he thereupon did. The credentials having been read, Senator Edmunds moved that the oath of office be administered to those gentlemen by Senator Anthony, the senior Senator. Senator Pendleton moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried—yeas, 36; nays, 34. Davis, of Illinois, voted with the Republicans in the negative. Mahone did not vote, and Platt and Fair were paired. Mr. Edmunds said no reason had been given why Senators-elect should not be allowed to take part in the organization of the Senate, and he, therefore, moved to amend Pendleton's resolution by providing for the immediate qualification of the Senators-elect, the oath of office to be administered by Senator Anthony. Senator Edmunds then proposed an amendment providing that Thomas F. Bayard shall be elected presiding officer for this day only. The amendment gave rise to a short discussion, but was finally rejected—yeas, 33; nays, 34—Messrs. Mahone and Davis (Ill.) voting with the Republicans. Senator Edmunds then offered another amendment, to substitute the name of Senator Anthony for that of Senator Bayard as President pro tem. A vote was at once taken and the amendment defeated—yeas, 32; nays, 34. Mahone voted with the Republicans. Senator David Davis did not vote. The original resolution, introduced by Senator Pendleton, was then adopted by 34 to 32. Davis, of Illinois, did not vote. Mahone voted with the Republicans. The chair then appointed Senators Anthony and Pendleton to escort the President pro tempore elect, Senator Bayard, to the chair. When Mr. Bayard was installed as President of the Senate he returned thanks, and invoked the consideration and co-operation of the Senators. He referred to the sad circumstance which caused the call of the Senate, and said the grief which penetrates every household in the land should soften the party asperity in the Senate and lead to harmonious action. The Senate then, without the transaction of any further business, adjourned for the day.

The only business transacted in the Senate, on the 11th inst., was the swearing in of Messrs. Miller, Lapham and Aldrich, and the appointment of a committee to wait on the President and notify him of the organization of the Senate. Before Messrs. Miller and Lapham were sworn in, Mr. McPherson presented to the Senate a petition received by him from certain Democratic members of the New York Legislature, alleging [illegible] gentlemen were not entitled to seats in the Senate. He did not present the petition with any desire to delay action upon the administration of the oath. Mr. Edmunds said that he would not object to the presentation of the petition, and it was laid upon the table. Mr. Edmunds presented a resolution that the standing committees of the last session be continued for the present session, and that the President pro tem. fill any vacancy that might exist. Mr. Harris promptly objected, and the resolution went over under the rule.

Mr. Kellogg offered a resolution on the 12th, calling on the Secretary of State for information in regard to the seizing of Vincenzo Ribello, in New Orleans, and his subsequent extradition to Italy as a bandit. Mr. Edmunds then called up his resolution continuing for the present session the standing committees of the Senate as constituted last session. After some opposition by Mr. Garland, Mr. Edmunds said he would not press the resolution at once. President Arthur sent in a long list of nominations, including the following: William W. Dudley, of Indiana, Commissioner of Pensions; Otis P. Clarke, of Rhode Island, First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions; C. B. Walker, of Indiana, Deputy Commissioner of Pensions; Noah C. McFarland, of Kansas, Commissioner of General Land Office; C. H. Howard, of Illinois, Indian Inspector; Addison Brown, of New York, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York; George M. Duskin, of Alabama, Attorney of the United States for the Southern district of Alabama; Robert S. Foster, of Indiana, Marshal of the United States for the District of Indiana. After the adjournment of the Senate, the Republican Senators met in caucus and formally nominated David Davis for President pro tem. of the Senate. The only one to raise an objection was Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts. To a committee of Republican Senators who inquired of him if he would accept the position, Mr. Davis replied that they must be guided by their knowledge of his character. The Democratic Senators also held another caucus and decided on a policy of inaction in regard to the Secretaryship of the Senate. The caucus also came to the conclusion not to investigate the "points" raised by certain Democratic members of the New York Legislature against the validity of the election of Senators Lapham and Miller, and that the best and wisest policy is to let the Senate committees stand as at present constituted.

On the 13th inst., Mr. Edmunds called up his resolution continuing the standing committees as constituted at the last session. Mr. Garland offered an amendment providing that only the following committees shall be continued: Foreign Relations, Finance, Commerce, Military Affairs, Judiciary, Postoffices and Roads, Public Lands, Pensions, and Indian Affairs. He contended the committees named were the only ones that would have any work to do during the special session. Mr. Edmunds opposed the amendment. Mr. Garland stated that he would modify his amendment so as to continue the Committees on Privileges and Elections and Contingent Expenses. He thought it would then include all the committees necessary to organize at this time. Mr. Garland's amendment was rejected—yeas, 35; nays 37. Davis (Ill.) and Mahone voting with the Republicans. Mr. Edmunds' resolution was then adopted—yeas, 37; nays, 35. The standing committees are, therefore, continued as constituted at the last session, and the President pro tem. is authorized to fill vacancies which may exist. As soon as the result was announced, Mr. Logan offered a resolution for the election of David Davis, a Senator from Illinois, as President pro tem. of the Senate. The resolution was adopted—yeas, 36; nays, 34—Bayard and David Davis not voting. On taking the chair, Senator Davis made a brief speech, in which he said the high honor conferred upon him came without any expectation on his part. If the compliment had carried any party obligation with it he should have felt constrained to decline it. A number of nominations were sent in by the President, including among others, Hannibal Hamlin, Minister to Spain; Walker Blaine, Third Assistant Secretary of State; Mark S. Brewer, of Michigan Consul-General to Berlin; De Alva S. Alexander, of Indiana, Fifth Auditor of the Treasury; Benjamin F. Davis, of Massachusetts, Deputy Fourth Auditor of the Treasury; Jacob H. Hoffenstein's Business Rival.

Grandpa.

The grandpa iz a individual, aged sumwhare between 50 and 100 years, of a promiskious temperament, and iz a common occurrence in all well regulated familys. Next to a helthy mother-in-law, they have more aktive bizness on hand than enny other party in the household. They are the standard authority on all leading topicks, and what they don't kno about things that took place sixty-five years ago, or will take place for the next sixty-five years to cum, iz a damage for enny one to kno. Grandpas are not entirely useless, they are handy to hold babys, and feed the pigs, and are very smart at mending a broken broom handle, and sifting coal ashes, and are good at putting up the clothes line on washing days. I hav seen grandpas that could churn good, but i konsider it a mighty mean trick to set an old fellow ov eighty years to churning butter. I am a grandpa miself, but i won't churn butter for no concern, not if i understand myself. I am az solid on this konklusion az a graven image. I am willing to rok baby all the time while the wimmin folks are bileing sope, i am willing to kut rags, to work up into rag karpets, they can keep me hunting hens' eggs wet days, or picking green currants, or i will even dip kandles, or kore apples for sass, or turn a grind stun, but, bi thunder, i won't churn. I have examined miself on this subject, and i will bet a jak knife, so long az he remains in his' right mind, Josh Billings won't churn. Az a general thing grandpas are a set of konsaited old phools who don't seem to realize that what they kno themselfs is the result of experience, and that younger people hav got to git their knolledge in the same way. Grandpas are poor help at bringing up children, but they hav got precept, and katekism enuff, but the young ones all seem to understand that grandpa minds them a heap more than they mind grandpa.—Josh Billings.

VANDERBURGH is sending more convicts to the penitentiary than any other county. Since the September term of court opened sixteen convicts have been sent from that county.

MISS FLORA MOORE, a school teacher at Treaty Station, near Wabash, took an overdose of a remedy for removing pimples and was poisoned. Prompt medical attendance saved her life.

BY an act of the late Legislature administrators and executors are now required to report every six months, publishing a notice of each report similar to the final-settlement notice.

JOHN LYNCH, a resident of Terre Haute, was instantly killed at Lynn Station by a tree falling on him while engaged in clearing a piece of timber. He was 72 years of age and unmarried.

GEORGE L. DUNHAM, of South Bend, was out in his yard splitting firewood. In raising the ax it struck against a clothes-line and came down on his own head, cutting a severe gash in the skull.

WILLIS SMALL, Frank Mathers and George Lacy, three boys whose ages are between 13 and 16 years, ran away from their homes in Shelbyville lately. They boarded a freight train going west, and have not been heard from since.

WHILE digging a cistern in the foundation excavations of the new car-wheel works, at Lafayette, the workmen struck a spring of such abundance that it flooded the whole excavation, and ditching had to be resorted to to allow the work to go on.

SEVERAL attempts to wreck Ohio and Mississippi trains near Vincennes caused detectives to be set at work and the mystery was unraveled. Hice Garing, William Sister and John Boher were arrested at Sand Ridge cave, and two of them made full confessions.

CAPT. SAMUEL WINSOR, of Greencastle, who suffered concussion of the brain by the passage of a shell at Chickamauga, and has been in the insane asylum for several years, died of convulsions a few days ago. His wife is State Librarian.

JOHN and Willie Kepler, aged 11 and 16, took shelter under a large oak tree in Mount Vernon during a storm. Lightning struck the tree, tearing their clothing into shreds and blistering them somewhat, but otherwise leaving them intact. The tree was torn to splinters.

DR. ISAAC SPARKS, of Plainfield, Hendricks county, aged 85, married Mrs. Sophronia Orton, of Attica, aged 72. The affair was celebrated with great eclat by the citizens of Plainfield. The groom is one of the pioneer settlers of Hendricks county.

JAMES HIBNER, aged 90, was found dead in bed at Dupont, Jefferson county. He had his coffin made about ten years ago, and since that time has had it under his bed. Some rats bored holes in the coffin, and he had them plugged up and had it lined with tin, and was buried in it.

THE first case under the new law of Indiana, that a deserting husband can be made to provide for his family, has been brought by the wife of Charles Hoffman, of Fort Wayne, from whom $1,500 is demanded. He holds considerable property, while his family are living on the charity of neighbors.

JUDGE WILSON, of Bedford, asked the Grand Jury in the Circuit Court to see if it could find sufficient evidence to indict the officers of the New Albany road for nuisance in maintaining their depot on the public square. It has become next to impossible to transact business in the court-room, owing to the noise of trains and the hissing of steam.

THE Lafayette Journal says: There is a good deal of new corn growing in the fields, self-sown, and now more than knee-high. The farmers cut and gathered their corn about six weeks ago, and wherever grains have been dropped or shelled from the ears they have germinated, with result as stated. It is very unusual to see fresh growing corn in October.

FRANK WADE, the 18-year-old son of Eli Wade, of Carlisle, Sullivan county, was indulging in an acrobatic performance with a cousin about the same age. He had taken a revolver and other articles from his pocket and laid them on the bed before starting, and his cousin picked up the revolver. While fooling with it it discharged, and the ball struck Frank in the left hip and entered his body, inflicting a mortal wound.

JOHN ARNOLD, a farmer and a single man, was murdered near Bedford, Lawrence county, by a tenant named McLane, with whom he was boarding. As far as can be learned the murder was unprovoked, McLane coolly taking down from its place on the wall an old United States musket and shooting his victim. McLane fled, and was followed by a party of men, who came up with him near Campbellsburg, Washington county. McLane refused to surrender, and took refuge in a cabin, placing his body against the door to prevent the entrance of his pursuers. The parties outside then began firing, three balls passing through the door into the murderer's body and killing him.

GEN. MCNAUGHT, in an address at the Spencer reunion, made this timely reference to the Second Indiana, at Buena Vista: "There had been a blunder in the operations of the day, and the Second Indiana was a convenient scape-goat to carry official sins into the wilderness. I was an eye-witness to the affair, and know whereof I affirm. The Second Indiana met in open field the advance of the Mexican army, as it deployed into the plain from a canon in the mountain, and, single-handed, fought it with great gallantry, without a waver, until it had fired twenty two rounds, checked and driven back the advancing Mexicans, when Col. Bowles galloped along the lines and ordered a retreat, and fled at the top of his horse's speed. Still not a man in the line wavered until the gallant Bowles was more than a hundred yards away from his post in wild retreat, and the approach of a large body of lancers made flight, in their exposed and unsupported position, a necessity. Had they been properly supported, and reinforced at the proper time, the history of that battle would have been very different, and the Second Indiana would have been the brightest star in the Mexican war to-day. Some men say, 'For God's sake say nothing of this to reflect upon the memory of General Taylor.' But the honor of Indiana soldiers is dear to us. No braver or better regiment than the Second Indiana fought on the plains of Mexico, and it has rested under the odium of Jeff Davis' lies long enough to be set right before the world, no matter whose reputation may suffer."

Emperor and Page.

Frderick II., King of Prussia, used to rise early, and he gave strict orders to attendants never to allow him to sleep longer than four o'clock in the morning, and to pay no attention to his unwillingness to rise. One morning, at the appointed time, the page whose duty it was to attend him, and who had been long in his service, came to his bed and woke him.

"Let me sleep but a little longer," said the monarch, "I am still much fatigued."

"Your majesty has given positive orders that I should wake you early," replied the page.

"But another quarter of an hour."

"Not one minute," said the page. "It has struck four; I am ordered to insist upon your majesty's rising."

"Well," said the king, "you are a brave lad; had you let me sleep on, you would have fared ill for your neglect."

SOME fifty years ago, at a dinner given by a private gentleman of New York, at which John Quincy Adams was one of the guests, there were fifteen varieties of Madeira wine on the table, and such an expert and connoisseur was Mr. Adams that he was able to name nine of the varieties by the tastes and bouquet without seeing the labels on the bottles.

WHILE small proprietors are to be the salvation of Ireland, in Bavaria 3,739 farms were sold last year because the small proprietors could not keep their heads above water.

IN a MS. calendar of the time of Henry VI. is one vellum page, filled with a list of unlucky days upon which it would be "perilous to take any sickness, or to be hurt in, or to be wedded in, or take any [illegible] upon or begin any work on, that he would well speed."

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 5 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 28th, '78.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 24, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box [No. 2] for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 26.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box is in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, OCT. 20, 1881.

J. A. BARNS, D. Y. HUSSELMAN, EDITORS.

GOV. WILTZ, of Louisiana, died last Sunday morning.

GEN. JOHN C. FREEMONT has resigned the governorship of Arizona Territory.

THE Mississippi river is within one foot of the greatest height ever known, and still rising.

SENATOR BAYARD was president of the senate but two days, when David Davis was elected to succeed him.

THE high water in the west still continues. There is great fear that the embankment at Quincy will give way, as the Mississippi is still rising.

DR. HOLLAND, so long and favorably known as the chief editor of Scribner's Magazine, died very suddenly at his residence in New York City last week.

MRS. ABRAHAM LINCOLN is at present stopping at the Clarendon hotel, New York. Her health is very poor, so much so that she is not able to see visitors.

SENATOR MAHONE has been arrested on suspicion of having accepted a challenge from Gen. Early to fight a duel. If we were Gen. Early, we would prefer a bigger mark to shoot at.

THE election in Ohio last week, resulted, as was to be expected, in the election of Foster, for governor, and all the rest of the republican ticket. The pluralities ranged from 20,000 to 25,000.

GEN. JAMES B. STEEDMAN did not succeed in being elected to the state senate in the Toledo district last week, as was at first supposed. He is about 200 votes behind Brigham, his republican opponent.

CONKLING is at his home in Utica seriously ill. He has been in ill health for some time, and his physicians now require that he shall not receive callers, and think he should not leave his room for some days at least.

ORSON PRATT, one of the original Mormons who were with Jo. Smith at the beginning of the Mormon business, died at Salt Lake recently. He was the ablest man they ever had, and for years was the main stay of the church.

IT now begins to look as though the star route thieves would slip through without punishment after all. There has been a great deal of windy boasting of what would be done sometime, but the thieves are too high up in the ranks of the republican party to be in much danger.

THE case against Guiteau has been set for trial November 7. The defense will be, first, insanity; second, that the president's wound was not necessarily fatal, and that death resulted from malpractice of his physicians; third, that the courts at Washington have no jurisdiction of the offense.

WHEN Guiteau was brought into the court room for trial the other day, a member of Garfield's old regiment happened to be present, and created quite a flutter by trying to borrow a revolver to shoot the assassin. He was prevented from carrying his purpose into execution, much to his disgust.

CHARLES S. PARNELL, the Irish land leaguer, was arrested by the government officers last Thursday, at Kingsbridge Island. The charge against him is inciting the people to refuse the payment of rent, and obstructing the action of the recently enacted land laws. He was taken while on his way to address a convention at Kildare, and was imprisoned in Kilmainham jail, where he remains at present.

A DISASTROUS fire occurred in Philadelphia last week. Landenburg's mills, employing a great many hands, including a number of women and girls, caught fire, and about fifty of the employes were enclosed by the flames. The fire spread so rapidly, that when escape seemed impossible, they threw themselves out of the windows. Quite a number lost their lives in this way, and several perished in the burning building.

IT seems that the original of Mrs. Stowe's Uncle Tom, is still living in New Haven, Conn. An eastern paper says: "He went recently to see Uncle Tom's Cabin, played at a theater there, and wept profusely. 'Does it bring back the memory of old times?' was asked him by the manager. 'Do sorrows long forgotten come back to you and make your heart ache?' 'No,' he said, 'It ain't dat I'se weepin' ober. But, gemmen, if you beheld yo'selves po'trayed as dat mis'able idiot po'trayed me, wouldn't you weep?'"

SEVERAL parties in Chicago have been arrested, on charge of defrauding the government in importing horses from Canada without paying the regular duty. The way they operate, is to go into Canada and buy a certain number of horses, getting as many mares as possible. Under the revenue laws, mares for breeding purposes are imported free of duty. These dealers, by claiming that they use the mares for that purpose only, get them in free, and then put them at work with the others, or sell them, thus evading the statute. An investigation shows that the fraud has been extensively practiced.

THERE has been something of a stir lately among European holders of the defunct Confederate bonds. This is owing to the revival of the report that there is still a balance in the bank of England, deposited there by the Confederate government sometime during the war, to secure purchases of arms and supplies for the Confederates. It is thought there is nearly a million dollars of this fund on hand, including a reasonable amount of interest, and holders of the bonds are hoping, by some means to get hold of a part of it.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer has the following consolatory article in regard to the recent Ohio election: "Democrats can stand defeat. They do not depend upon official fodder for sustenance. They are accustomed to earn an honest living by hard knocks. If republicans were to encounter defeat in politics, they would have a tough time of it. Their lily-white hands, unused to toil, would be unequal to the occasion. All the work would have to be performed, and only democrats to do it. Perhaps things are better as they are."

JOHN C. NEW, of the Indianapolis State Journal, is also chairman of the state central committee. Also, we might add, that he is a candidate for a cabinet position under Arthur. To show some of the claims that Mr. New has on the country, the Indianapolis Sentinel has the following very pointed article:

"No amount of persuasion can induce Hon. John C. New, chairman of republican state central committee, to deny that the Star Route thief, Dorsey, offered to furnish money to perpetrate the crime of importing votes from Illinois to carry the state for Porter and Garfield. The charges made by Mr. Conner play with threatening vividness around Hon. John C. New's castle. If he denies the charge, Conner will prove it, with some other things. Hence, silence, which in some cases is equal to admission.

HAMILTON COUNTY, N. Y. is still in a state of nature, so to speak. It comprises some of the wildest portions of the state, and much of it is of a character to prevent its ever being settled or cultivated. They have just tried and hanged their first murderer ever brought to trial in the county—a man named Earle—who was found guilty of killing his wife. Sageville, the county seat, has four dwellings, one hotel, a court-house, jail and county clerk's office. There is not a lawyer in the county, not excepting the county judge, who is a tanner, nor the district attorney, who stammers badly and is a lumberman. The county borrows a county judge and lawyer to hold courts. The jail has had three inmates in three years, two for misdemeanor and Earle. The jailer goes out hunting deer nearly every day, and is not obliged to travel beyond sight of his jail. The lumbermen settle their quarrels with their fists.

THIS week they are celebrating at Yorktown, the surrender of Cornwallis, which occurred there one hundred years ago yesterday. The combined armies of Americans and French invested the British position on the 28th of September, and on the 6th of October trenches were opened at a distance of 600 yards from the enemy's lines, and cannonading begun. On October 11 the allies advanced their trenches to within 300 yards of Cornwallis' works. On the night of the 14th, the British out-works were carried by storm. On the morning of the 16th, the enemy made a sortie, in the hope of being able to drive our forces from their investing lines, but failed. He also tried to escape across the river that night, but was forced back by a furious storm. On the 18th he proposed to surrender, and on the 19th his army laid down their arms. The army, numbering 7,247 English and Hessians, surrendered to Washington, and the fleet surrendered to the French fleet under Count de Grasse.

RIDDLEBERGER, who was last spring the republican candidate for secretary of the senate, and on whose account partly the dead lock was maintained, has got himself into trouble, in the present political campaign in Virginia. While stumping for the re-adjusters, he managed to insult Congressman G. D. Wise and Mr. Beirne, editor of the Richmond State. After some long range sparring through the papers, and on the stump, Riddleberger challenged both his opponents. A hostile meeting was had, when it was found that the men who brought the pistols, had forgotten the caps. They met again the same day, near Atlas station, on the Ohio & Chesapeake railroad. At the first fire, Wise's pistol snapped, but he, himself, was unharmed. Another round was not much better, as only Riddleberger's coat was grazed. At the third round both failed to hit, and a reconciliation was then effected. The parties then started to go home, but met Beirne, who was waiting for his share of Riddleberger's gore, if any should be left in the market. But a magistrate coming on the scene at the same time, arrested Beirne, and so prevented further waste of powder. The whole affair was one of the most remarkable episodes that ever happened on the "field of honor."

Around About Us.

It is said that the Ligonier band has been organized into a fire company.

The Middlebury Record has a full sized cotton plant on exhibition, that attracts a great deal of attention.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Harlan Independent, a paper published at Harlan, Allen county. It floats the names of A. P. Cosgrove and our old-time friend, D. M. Allen. Success, gentlemen.

They came near having a small pox scare in Ft. Wayne recently. We are not able to learn that more than one case was reported, and that was so carefully guarded that there is no possibility of its spreading.

The cars will be running between Ft. Wayne and Fostoria by Nov. 1, over the New York, Chicago & St. Louis railroad, and the entire line from Buffalo to Chicago will be open by May, 1882.—[Hicksville News.

Senator Foster, proprietor of the Fort Wayne Journal, was last week assulted by one of the employs of the office. Mr. Foster put the man out of doors, but in the struggle received a severe cut on the bridge of his nose.

A box car loaded with merchandise on the Pittsburg road, was broken into by thieves at Warsaw last week, and a valuable amount of goods consigned to different merchants of this place were taken by the pillagers.—[Columbia City Commercial.

We see by the Columbia City papers, that J. L. Ferguson's group of statuary, "Rock of Ages," took first premium at their fair. This was the fine piece of work in grey marble, on which Mr. F. was at work, when we last saw him. We are glad to hear of his success.

John Crowl attended the Waterloo fair last week, and a pickpocket relieved him of about $150. He went there with the intention of buying stock, and while getting off the train his pocket was cut open, and the money taken. Money in another pocket was unmolested.—[Hicksville News.

Some miscreants placed some ties on the track of the C., W. & M. road near Claypool last week, with the intention of wrecking the train. But owing to its nearness to the station, the train was slowing up, and the engine only, was thrown from the track. It was considerably injured, but no one was hurt.

The bar docket for the September term of court contains twenty-one suits for divorce. That is rather good for one county. In fifteen out of the twenty-one cases, the woman is the plaintiff. This shows that the women are the first to tire of married life.—[Middlebury Record.

The Wabash Courier of last week contains an interesting account of the death, in that county, of a man named Robert Badskie, a queer character who has resided there several years. It is claimed that the deceased was a regular dog-eater, and had in his time, sent hundreds of dogs to the kettle and frying pan. He was also, a kind of hermit, and is by some, believed to have money buried in his hut.

We take the following deserved compliment from the Columbia City Post, to show the estimation in which one of our citizens is held in his native county: "Mr. J. J. Martin, ticket and express agent of the B. & O. road at Auburn, Ind., was in the city last Saturday, on his way to his father's, Mr. A. F. Martin, of Richland township. J. J. has been in the employ of the B. & O. road for over six years, and stands high in the estimation of the company."

At the Whitley county fair, it took two days to decide the running race, so close was the contest. It was finally decided in favor of Slippery Jim, a home horse, against his leading competitor, Comet. But it is claimed that the race was a very unfair one. Comet had won two heats, and was in a fair way to take the third, when some parties on the inside of the ring, threw a cap at him, as he came down the home stretch, causing him to bolt, and lose the heat. The next heat, a crowd of the friends of the home horse, took away by force, Comet's mother, which had been stationed at the home to keep him from bolting. He bolted, and the race was lost.

Monday night of last week, Mr. Frank Vivia, conductor on the Pittsburg express train, No. 3, telegraphed from Plymouth, that Mr. Ed. Stewart had lost from the train a large black valise, fastened with two straps, and containing two new suits of clothes, a new pair of hand sewed boots a gold watch chain and other articles, which it was supposed was stolen from the train. The police failed to find a clue to the property, but this morning while unloading a car of coal, Mr. James Fox found the valise inside and intact. The name of the owner was marked on it, and the thief must have removed the property while the train halted at Fort Wayne, and dispairing of getting away with it had thrown it into the car.—[Ft. LAPORTE CO., Oct. 12, 1881.

MR. EDITOR:—Thinking that your many readers would like to hear from this part of the state, I will try and give them a few items of news:

The health of the people of this county is as it usually is, very good.

We had two very severe droughts this summer. One in April and May, and the other from the 20th of July until Sept. 9, with only a few "small sprinkles," and the crops were very much injured.

Potatoes are very scarce and high, from $1 to $1.50 per bushel.

New wheat 1.43, and some have been offered $1.50 for old wheat.

Butter and eggs hard to get at any price, and all the way from 16c to 25c.

Fruit in some places a failure, in others all kinds plenty except peaches.

Cattle and hogs looking well and in good demand.

Wheat on the ground looking first-rate, although in some places there is some fly, but not enough to injure it.

Since Sept. 9 we have had almost too much rain. Rain once a week and hard ones too, and lately about every day—rainfall ranging all the way from ½ of an inch to 2½ inches.

At some future day I will give you an account of the rainfall during the summer.

Corn very good considering the small amount of rain we had.

MRS. B. A. DAVIS.

Forged Paper.

We take the following additional facts in regard to the recent forgeries on Huestis & Hamilton, of Fort Wayne, from Monday's Daily News:

Much excitement was caused in New York commercial circles yesterday by the discovery that some clever forger had succeeded in floating forged paper bearing the name of Messrs. Huestis & Hamilton or this city, and Messrs Hoag & Luddington, brokers, at 1440 Pearl street, and sold considerable amounts of it.

The discovery was made at the Broadway National Bank, and the amount was variously estimated at from $35,000 to $300,000. Some of the paper held by the bank was thought, however, to be genuine. Detectives are at work on the case. The firm of Huestis & Hamilton is among our staunchest jobbers, and their paper has always been paid on maturity.

A reporter of the News called upon Huestis & Hamilton this afternoon. Mr. Hamilton was met, and stated that all the house knew of the affair was, that a few days ago they received a notice from the Broadway National Bank, informing them that on Monday, Oct. 17, a note for over $4,000 would fall due. The cashier immediately replied that the house knew of no such paper maturing. Mr. Huestis, who had been to New York, returned from there on Thursday and being apprised of the notice received was more or less alarmed, and immediately left for New York again to investigate the matter.

Messrs. Huestis & Hamilton do not have any suspicion in whose favor the paper was made, nor do they know how much is afloat; between $9,000 and $10,000 is all they have any knowledge of at present.

Military Michiganders.

Two special trains went south on the Jackson road Saturday last. Each was composed of seven or eight B. & O. coaches and baggage cars, and contained the Michigan state troops, the governor and his staff, and quite a number of invited guests, including several ladies. They rattled through town at a lively rate, and remained at the Junction only long enough to switch on to the B. & O. track, when they left for their distant destination. The day was disagreeable and rainy and but few of our citizens were present to see our Michigan friends and wish them a pleasant journey and safe return. L. P. Welling, who has been for sometime assistant train dispatcher, at Jackson, preceded them to assist in keeping the way clear, and keeping up telegraphic communication while the special trains were going over his road. He came to the Junction on the morning train, and remained there till the specials had passed.

Obituary.

Died, near Hudson, Oct. 18, 1881, Catharine E. Gonser, aged 48 years, 4 months and 2 days.

Catharine E. Gonser, the subject of the above notice, was born in the town of Somerset, Somerset county, Penn. At the age of one year her parents moved to Berlin, Holmes county, Ohio. Catharine was brought up in the atmosphere of an intelligent christian family, and arriving at womanhood, she was married to Mr. Daniel Gonser, March 9, 1849. November 1856, they moved to DeKalb county, Ind. Mrs. Gonser being a strong believer in the christian religion, in the year 1870 she united with the Presbyterian church and remained a faithful member until her death. Four years she was afflicted with paralysis, but she bore her suffering with christian patience, never complaining, but always looking forward to a brighter future. She was beloved by a large circle of friends, was also a kind mother and an affectionate wife, and in her death they sustain a great loss. She leaves a husband, eight children and an aged mother to mourn her absence.

EDITORS COURIER: When wife and self returned from the meeting of the synod Monday evening, the 18th inst., we met at the Lutheran parsonage in Spencerville, a very jolly set of folks, who were awaiting our coming, the object of which was, we soon learned, to have a reception social. And, on entering the house, behold! several large tables were richly spread with viands strongly tempting the hungry. After a season of feasting and social enjoyment, we were presented, by one of their number, with a surprise log cabin, the contents of which we were requested not then to examine, but were assured in a few fitting words, that it contained nothing else than tokens of high esteem and well-wishes. Without questioning the truthfulness of those utterances, we received it with emotions of gratitude that lips could not express. May the Lord bless the donors.

SAMUEL KELSO,
Oct. 15, 1881. Spencerville, Ind.

—Nicholas Ensley returned from his trip to Baltimore and Washington this week. At the latter city he got permission to visit Guiteau in the jail. Mr. Ensley does not take any stock in the insanity plea. He brought back with him a piece of the bread to which Guiteau is treated daily. It is a plain case of corn meal and water, and although clean and well cooked, is not a very appetising kind of food. It, however, does away with the stale stories that the assassin is daily fed on dainties. His entire fare is the same as that furnished the other prisoners. We have not met Mr. Ensley since his return, but are indebted to his good natured partner, Mr. Harter, for the above facts.

—Jerry Plum and 'Squire Wolf, of Waterloo, called on us last Friday. They are two of our oldest settlers, and among the most reliable of our citizens. The 'squire was one of those who dispensed justice to the people in the early times, when he received a shilling for issuing a summons, and Mr. Plum, as constable, was allowed the same fabulous sum for serving it. Mr. Wolf was elected justice in the spring of 1850, and served in that capacity for twenty-nine years continuously. He was succeeded in the spring of 1879 by O. P. Smith, the present incumbent.

—The town of Butler is certainly becoming famous. They now come to the front with a lawyer who recently telegraphed to Mr. Scoville tendering his services in Guiteau's defense. Wonders will never cease. We know of no law, however, in this state against a man's making a fool of himself, if he wants to.

Thus far we have avoided dunning you through the columns of the COURIER. We now want all delinquent subscribers to take notice, that we want them to call without further delay, and settle up. ANDERSON BROS.

—On Monday of this week one Jacob Vail was arrested and brought before Justice Walburn and a jury of twelve men, for attempting to provoke Geo. W. Pierson to commit an assault and battery on him. At a late hour Monday night the jury agreed to a fine of $1 and costs, making a total of $36.50. In his argument to the jury one of the counsel for the defense alluded to our friend constable Smith, as resembling one of the old patriarchs. Quite a compliment and very pertinent to the issues.

—We received a pleasant call last Friday, from H. G. Zimmerman esq., of Albion. We remember Mr. Z. as a fellow worker in the cause of education, as he was for some time principal of the Ligonier schools, and served a term as county superintendent of Noble county. He is now practicing law at Albion, and sat as judge during the term of our court that has just closed. We learn that he has given excellent satisfaction in that capacity.

Waterloo.

The fair is over, and the grounds there begin to look quite deserted. We have not learned the exact amount of receipts, but understand it is up to the usual amount. If so, it will be sufficient to pay all expenses, and something on the indebtedness besides.

I. S. Goodwin is still canvassing for the Indiana Farmer, and we learn is meeting with considerable success.

Quite a number of our people went to Angola last week, to attend the fair. They say the fair was a good one, and would have been a success, but for the continued bad weather. It was continued on Saturday. It is believed that the fair will pay, in spite of all the drawbacks.

LOST AT SEA.

BY ROSE HARTWICK THORPE.

I stood where the [illegible]
  Spread away over sea and glen,
Like the hands of loving angels
  Reaching down to the hearts of men.

And the sea, with a smile, reflected
  The infinite lights above;
The quivering, resplendent heavens
  All smiling with peaceful love.

And the waves o'er the white sand creeping
  Brought ripples of joyous glee,
As the lines of the purple heavens
  Bent over to kiss the sea.

"Oh treacherous sea!" I murmured,
  "Restore to my arms, I pray,
The treasure I gave to your keeping
  One golden autumn day."

A ship with its precious burden
  Sailed out from my longing gaze,
Away from the peaceful harbor
  In the bright October haze.

And a sweet face, looking backward,
  With a tear and a smile for me—
The dearest of all my treasures
  I gave to the treacherous sea.

Lake Michigan, darkly hidden
  In thy secret bosom lies
The face that I fondly cherished,
  The beautiful love-lit eyes.

For the ship that left the harbor
  In the calm October haze
Bore its precious freight forever
  Away from my longing gaze.

THE PHENOMENA OF DEATH.

It is our purpose to discuss, as briefly as possible, some of the most important aspects of dissolution. Addison said that there was nothing in history more imposing than, nothing so pleasing and affecting as, the accounts of the behavior of eminent persons in their dying hours; and Montaigne remarks, while speculating on death, that, of all the passages in the annals of mankind, those which attracted and delighted him most were the words and gestures of dying men. "If I were a maker of books," he continues, "I would compile a register with comments of various deaths, for he who should teach men to die would teach them to live." There are three elements presented in this fear of death: First, the extinction of life's pleasures, interests and hopes, to which the mind looks forward with a degree of apprehension proportionate to the amount of happiness they are capable of affording. With the young and vigorous the loss of these animal enjoyments is contemplated with extreme misery; hence the custom among the early Greeks of bearing the lifeless body of youth to the funeral pyre at the break of morn, "lest the sun should behold so sad a sight as the young dead." Second, the dread of the unknown future, also depending upon the nervous temperament. And lastly comes a fear more powerful than either, which is the dread of pain, inherent in nature. From time immemorial the actual moment of dissolution has been supposed to be accompanied by a throe of anguish, known as the "death agony." This is believed to occur at that moment when the spiritual and physical forces that have been so intimately blended for many years are torn asunder—the one to molder and decay, the other to take upon itself that new life beyond the ken of man.

This last element properly belongs to the physiologist, and as such we propose to consider it. Sir Francis Bacon, in one of his essays, published for the first time in the year 1577, gave to the world the following profound thought: "It is as natural to die as to be born; and to the little infant, perhaps, the one is as painful as the other." In profundity of thought and depth of research Bacon stepped in advance of his contemporaries, and lived in the future. Thus we find that, contrary to the generally received opinion of even this latter day, nature evidently designed that the end of man should be as painless as his beginning.

At birth the babe undergoes an ordeal that, were he conscious, would be more trying than a most painful death. Yet he feels it not. Born in an unconscious state, the brain incapable of receiving conscious impressions, his entrance into this hitherto unknown world is accomplished during a state of oblivion, known as nature's anæsthesia:

> Painless we come, whence we know not—
> Painless we go, whither we know not!

From the earliest period of human history death has been considered as necessarily accompanied by pain; so general is this belief that the terms "death agony," "last struggle," "pangs of death," etc., have been in almost universal use in every age and under all conditions of society.

Nothing could be more erroneous; the truth is, pain and death seldom go together—we mean the last moments of life. Of course, death may be preceded by weeks and even months of extreme suffering, as occurs during certain incurable diseases.

So exaggerated has been this notion that it has been considered an act of humanity to anticipate the "death struggle" by violence; for ages it was customary among the lower classes of Europe to hasten death by suddenly jerking the pillow from beneath the head of the dying, thus throwing the head backward, straining the pharyngeal and thoracic muscles, rendering the respiration, already difficult, shortly impossible. A Venetian Ambassador, in the time of Queen Mary, asserted that it was a common custom among the country people to smother the dying by means of a pillow placed over the face, upon which leaned or sat the nearest relative. This was founded upon the pious belief that the short road was the best one. This custom was handed down from generation to generation, parents performing it for their children and vice versa. But perhaps the saddest privilege ever allowed the friends of a dying man occurred occasionally during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when through executive clemency—executions by hanging—they were permitted to grasp the feet of the suspended criminal and, by clenching to the extremities, precipitate their additional weight on the body, thereby hastening strangulation. It is needless to say that these theories are false in both conception and practice. Death is a physiological process, and, like all other animal functions, should be painless.

When the fiat of death went forth, nature kindly provided an anæsthetic for the body. As the end of life draws near, the respiration becomes slow and shallow, interrupted now and then by a deep, sighing inspiration, as though the lungs were vainly endeavoring to throw off the palsy slowly creeping over them. As the intervals between the inspirations grow longer the blood becomes saturated with carbonic-acid gas—the same which is formed from burning charcoal, whose deadly fumes have so often aided the suicide painlessly to destroy life.

While the power of breathing is gradually failing, the heart, which is in close sympathy with the lungs, begins to contract with less force, propelling the blood only a short distance through its arterial channels, thus causing the extremities to grow cold.

The blood sent to the brain is not only diminished in quantity, but it is laden with carbonic-acid gas, which, acting on the nerve centers, produces a gradual benumbing of the cerebral ganglia, thereby destroying both consciousness and sensation. The patient gradually sinks into a deep stupor, the lips become purple, the face cold and livid, cold perspiration (death damp) collects on the forehead, a film creeps over the cornea, and, with or without convulsions, the dying man sinks into his last sleep. As the power of receiving conscious impressions is gone, the death struggle must be automatic. Even in those cases where the senses are retained to the last, the mind is usually calm and collected, and the body free from pain.

"If I had strength to hold a pen, I would write how easy and delightful it is to die!" were the last words of the celebrated surgeon, William Hunter; and Louis XIV. is recorded as saying with his last breath: "I thought dying had been more difficult."

That the painlessness of death is due to some benumbing influence acting on the sensory nerves may be inferred from the fact that untoward external surroundings rarely trouble the dying.

On the day that Lord Collingwood breathed his last the Mediterranean was tumultuous; those elements which had been the scene of his past glories rose and fell in swelling undulations, and seemed as if rocking him asleep. Capt. Thomas ventured to ask if he was disturbed by the tossing of the ship. "No, Thomas," he answered, "I am in a state that nothing can disturb me more—I am dying; and I am sure it must be consolatory to you and all who love me to see how comfortably I am coming to my end." In the Quarterly Review there is related an instance of a criminal who escaped death from hanging by the breaking of the rope. Henry IV., of France, sent his physician to examine him, who reported that after a moment's suffering the man saw an appearance like fire, across which appeared a beautiful avenue of trees. When a pardon was mentioned the prisoner coolly replied that it was not worth asking for. Those who have been near death from drowning, and afterward restored to consciousness, assert that the dying suffer but little pain. Capt. Marryatt states that his sensations at one time, when nearly drowned, were rather pleasant than otherwise. "The first struggle for life once over, the water closing around me assumed the appearance of waving green fields. * * * It is not a feeling of pain, but seems like sinking down, overpowered by sleep, in the long, soft grass of the cool meadow."

Now, this is precisely the condition presented in death from disease. Insensibility soon comes on, the mind loses consciousness of external objects, and death rapidly and placidly ensues from asphyxia.

In spite of the natural antagonism to death, a moment's reflection will show that it is as much a physiological process as life; the two terms are correlative, the degree of vital activity depending on the extent of molecular death occurring at the same time. Strange as the paradox may seem, without death we cannot live; every thought emanating from the brain, every blow struck by the arm, is accompanied by destruction of nervous or muscular tissue. The bioplasmatic or living matter which enters into the formation of every animal tissue is constantly germinating into cells (the origin of all life), and as constantly passing into decay, their places being taken by other protoplasts, thus keeping up the "active dance of life."

This dissassimilation, or interstitial death, occurs to such an extent that nature, in her wisdom, has provided excrementory organs for the purpose of removing from the system the effete material thus produced. Every living structure, after passing through certain stages of development, maturity and, finally, retrogression, must come to an end. This may be but the ephemeral existence of some of the lower forms of fungi which, born in the cool of the morning, die as the sun goes down; or, like the famous dragon-tree of Teneriffe, may outlast the pyramids that keep watch by the Nile.

The last topic for consideration is the pseudopia of death, or visions of the dying. This subject, coming under the realm of mental science, properly belongs to metaphysics rather than physiology. Various theories have been advanced to explain these phenomena, but they must remain as hypotheses at best, for they are not susceptible of demonstration. It is not an uncommon occurrence for the dying, after living some hours in a semi-conscious condition, to start up suddenly, and, with glowing face, point eagerly to some object invisible to the bystanders, and, with animated voice and gesture, state that they behold the glories of heaven or the familiar countenance of some friend long since dead.

The question naturally arises as to whether these conditions are merely the fantasies of a disordered and fast-disorganizing brain, or are the dying actually permitted a momentary view of those mysteries hitherto unknown.

The traditions and superstitions of the past have led to a popular belief in the latter theory. Shakspeare expressed the sentiment of his day when he placed in the mouth of the dying Queen Katharine these words:

> Saw you not even now a blessed troop
> Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
> Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

Science, with its iconoclastic hand, has swept away these pleasing fancies, and in their places has constructed a fabric founded on analogy. In the anæsthesia induced by chloroform a condition is produced closely resembling that immediately preceding death (caused by the carbonic-acid poisoning) in which visions are constantly presented to the mind, the character of which depends upon the natural temperament of the individual. Thus it often occurs that a patient, when under the influence of chloroform, has beatific visions similar to those of the dying. It is my fortune to have at present a patient who invariably when under the influence of chloroform asserts that she sees angels hovering around her bed. The impression is so strong that she becomes much annoyed if the reality of these visions is disputed. The asphyxia produced by burning charcoal is oftentimes accompanied by disturbed fancies similar to those preceding death, and the natural inference is that they are the resultant in both cases of one and the same cause. During the last moments of life the mind gradually loses cognizance of external surroundings and is rapt in self-contemplation. Though still in a semi-conscious condition the weeping of friends and the voices of attendants fall upon dull ears. The eyelids are closed, the pupils slightly contracted and rolled upward and inward. The dying man has forgotten the present, for he is living in the past. One by one the events of a whole life appear; its joys and sorrows, perchance long since forgotten, rise before him in startling distinctiveness, and then disappear in the swiftly moving panorama. The familiar faces of the friends of his youth are thrown upon the mental retina, their cheery voices reverberate in his ears, and the thought of meeting these friends in the near future is perhaps his last conscious impression. As this drowsiness creeps over the system, these images, molded from the past, become as realities to the disordered imagination. The germs from which originate these strange combinations have probably been lying dormant for years in the registering ganglia of the brain.

These death-bed visions are of comparatively frequent occurrence, and are generally accepted as realities. The theory which we promulgate, though not new, will naturally excite prejudice; but it is better to know the truth than cherish a belief, however pleasing it be, founded on error.—Thomas D. Spencer, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

A Thief Disguised as a Noble Lady

A noble lady from Holland landed here with a secretary, a maid, and a colored footman, the little set putting up at the White Horse Hotel, in Leopoldstadt. The Countess, in taking the best suite of apartments intimated to the hotelier that she expected her father-in-law, who was to be married shortly to an Austrian noble of the best blood, and that the wedding banquet would take place in the Hotel. She hired a handsome carriage and drove out every day with her footman on the box by the side of the coachman. During her drives she stopped at many shops, ordered samples and patterns to be sent to her hotel, and at the same time made purchases of silks, laces, fine trousseau linen for the bride, etc., never disbursing a single kreuzer, for the colored footman so thoroughly represented wealth and inspired confidence that shop-keepers were only too glad to send to the noble dame's hotel double the stuffs she ordered. The Countess also called on several jewelers, one of whom had just received a handsome garniture in brilliants, which at once took her fancy, being valued at the lowest at 50,000 florins, and the father-in-law being expected on the following day the jeweler was requested to bring the set to the hotel at a given hour. This was done, and when the diamond merchant came he was requested to be seated, and the Countess took the little case into the next room, where the father-in-law was dressing, she said. After waiting a quarter of an hour, Mr. Jeweler knocked at the door and got no answer; tried the door and found it locked. A noise in the passage attracts his attention. A rush, and he is in the portier's loge, where he finds the Countess disguised in man's clothes and guarded by a police. Providence had warned the portier, and he had stopped the Countess in good time as she was gliding past in her disguise. He saved the Vienna trades-people from the loss of many thousands, and placed a set of dangerous thieves under the lock of justice. The trades-people are very grateful, and the portier has received their thanks with many bows and salams. The jeweler, I believe, offered him a shilling, but he declined to take it.—Vienna Letter.

Is Germany an Empire?

In the first place, the German term "Reich" does not designate an empire as a form of government distinguished from a kingdom, for instance, or a republic. Strictly taken, it means "realm," or even "commonwealth," while the technical term for empire is "Kaiserreich." Thus the Roman Empire might be called a Reich, as was the old German Empire, because, for one reason, the hereditary principle in both was weak, or did not exist; and in the present confederation, or Reich, the so-called Imperial dignity, though hereditary in the Royal House of Prussia, is not hereditary in the House of Hohenzollern as such. If the Hohenzollerns should ever cease to be Kings of Prussia they would cease ipso facto to be Emperors of Germany. But the Napoleonic Empire in France was always called in German the "Kaiserreich," because the Imperial principle, whatever that may be, was visibly incorporated in the public law of the State. The same observation held true of the head of the State in Germany. The press and the public in other countries speak of him commonly as the Emperor of Germany, which is incorrect. There is no such personage. The Federal Constitution simply declares that the Presidency of the Confederation is vested in the King of Prussia, who shall bear the title of German Emperor. Our usage of language and our habits of political thought do not, indeed, make any clear difference between the title German Emperor and the title Emperor of Germany; but to Teutonic—nay, to Continental—dialecticians the distinction is of vast importance. The King of Prussia is then merely President of the German realm, and there is nothing Imperial about him except his title. There is no Imperial crown; no Imperial privy purse; no Imperial civil list; no Imperial suite, or court or palace. He is simply the King of Prussia, intrusted with certain executive functions in the German federal system.—Prof. Herbert, in Harper's Magazine.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Meeting of the National Body at Chicago.

The second annual meeting of the National Farmers' Alliance was held in Hershey Hall, Chicago, on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 5 and 6. Delegates were present from Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin and New York.

The Secretary reported that the alliance was in a favorable condition. There were nearly 1,000 subordinate alliances in existence, with a membership of 24,500. The alliances were distributed as follows: Nebraska, 291; Kansas, 245; Iowa, 150; New York, 60; Wisconsin, 51; Michigan, 19; Missouri, 10; Indiana, 10; Illinois, 45; Minnesota, 50.

The presiding officer, W. J. Fowler, made a brief speech, in the course of which he stated that the alliance had so extended its field of usefulness and its capacity for work that it could take hold of questions which a year ago it was unable to grapple with. The alliance would now be able to go for some of the patent monopolies, such as the barbed-wire swindle, for instance. There was money enough to carry the barbed-wire cases up to the higher courts, and thus much material aid could be given to the farmer.

Mr. Mulholland reported that the prospects of the alliance in Kansas were flourishing.

Mr. Williams, of Iowa, said the situation in that State differed a good deal from that in most of the others. A State Alliance had been formed at Des Moines, and the only objection raised to coming into the National Alliance was the life-membership rule. He thought that the voting should rest with the active members, and that men should not be allowed in on the strength of their money.

Mr. Anderson said that Wisconsin had not had a farmer representative in Congress during the twenty years he had been a resident of the State. He thought the farmers should unite to support the alliance. The Wisconsin State Alliance was well officered and was doing well.

Mr. Wood, of Illinois, reported a very encouraging feeling throughout his State, and a firm determination on the part of farmers to join in the movement. If the two great political parties continued to neglect the interests of the producers, the latter would swing loose and vote independently. They would go into their own political conventions and vote for their own men, and, if they could not carry their point, they would support independent men. The farmers of Illinois had voted long enough against their own interests, and had been led like lambs to the slaughter every time the ballot box was passed around. The alliance was not designed to form a new party, but to encourage independence among the members of the existing parties.

Mr. Norton, of Wisconsin, said that as long as the farmers were content to be led by the ears by the leaders of the two old parties it suited the managers well enough. When the farmers were satisfied there was no hope from either side they would come out and act for themselves.

Mr. Wood, of Illinois, said it was a mistake to think that nothing could be got from existing political organizations. The trouble was that farmers stuck too close to their fields and barns, and allowed the moss-back politicians to run the caucuses and conventions. He did not think it necessary to form a new party, for experience had taught them that they could secure their ends and yet remain in the existing parties. The farmers formed 50 per cent. of the voting population of the country, and, by influencing nominations, could compel the legislation they wanted.

Mr. Williams said the farmers could not control nominations. The politicians put up the conventions and freely distributed drinks, lunches, and money if necessary. The combined influence of the whisky and railroad interests was brought to bear, and the farmers got left.

Mr. Root, of Nebraska, said the great trouble in Nebraska was with the "machine," which had run the State until the meanest men in it got all the offices. He proposed that members of the alliance should nominate their own men, and if Republicans or Democrats choose to vote for them, so much the better. In Nebraska the farmers sought to get equal taxation, and that monopolies should treat all men and all places alike, and not pull down or set up men at their pleasure. Railroads should not be allowed to freeze out men by a system of rebates—another name for robbery. Nebraska farmers wanted no legislation to protect the interests of the producer, and only asked such legislation as would prevent other men from stealing.

The committee on changes in the constitution presented a report recommending several minor changes in the document. The only important changes suggested was one abolishing the life-membership clause, which was adopted. It was decided that a national lecturer should be added to the list of officers of the alliance. An amendment to the effect that each State having an alliance should be entitled to two delegates and to one extra delegate for every 10,000 individual members of the alliance was adopted. A proposition to admit representatives of all farmers' societies to the deliberations of the alliance was debated at extreme length, the chief question raised being whether or no the Grange representatives should be allowed to vote. The rule on this subject was allowed to stand as before, so that the outsiders can both talk and vote.

The Committee on Resolutions then reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Farmers and others are oppressed by unequal taxation, by subsidies to monopolies, by selfish and dishonest officials, by railroad extortion and unjust discriminations and by other privileged classes; and,

WHEREAS, Congress only can regulate commerce among the States, and a national union of all interested is necessary for success—

Resolved, That farmers, and all in sympathy with them, unite in a local, State and national society for mutual agreement and united action.

Resolved, That all property, real and personal, corporate and individual, should be equally taxed, and that the holders of mortgages and other liens of property should be taxed for their lien, and the owner for the balance of his property.

Resolved, That we favor a just income tax.

Resolved, That the salaries of all public officials should be only a fair compensation for services rendered; that all Government positions should be elective as far as practicable, and that the appointment of Postmasters and other officers by the successful party is a gross violation of civil-service reform and a fruitful source of corruption.

Resolved, That we emphatically condemn the practice of receiving free railroad passes by Judges, members of Congress, Legislatures and other public officials.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the General Government to at once exercise its constitutional right to regulate commerce between the States by passing such laws and establishing such regulations as will secure to the whole people just and impartial rates for the transportation of freights and passengers.

Resolved, That the combination and consolidation of railroad capital and influence of the United States in the maintenance of an oppressive and tyrannical transportation system is an accomplished fact, demanding instant, vigorous and unceasing action on the part of the producers of the country to remedy the same; and we earnestly urge all farmers to organize through the Farmers' Alliance or other organizations for systematic and persistent political action, and to subordinate other political questions to the emancipation of the people from this terrible oppression.

Resolved, That we demand such changes in our Patent law as will give patentees a remedy for the infringement of their claims, from the sellers of patents only, and not from their users, who are usually innocent purchasers of rights which they are made to believe are valid.

Resolved, That all persons should be allowed to make patented articles on payment of a royalty of a per cent. of the price of the article; royalty to be the same on all patents.

Resolved, That the adulteration of food is as dishonest and more injurious than counterfeiting money, and should be punished as severely.

Resolved, That, as delegated nominating conventions are frequently controlled by trading and bribery and fail to justly represent the people, we recommend the plan of nominating all elective officers by direct vote with all members of the organization.

The Chick-a-dee and the Eagle—A Fable.

Once upon a time a Chick-a-dee and an Eagle had nests in the same forest. The forest was plenty large enough for both, and peace and harmony might have prevailed but for the jealousy of the Chick-a-dee. Having been created by nature for a small bird, and having digestive organs for only bugs and worms, it made him wroth to behold the Eagle having such spread of wings and such appetite for large game.

One day after the Chick-a-dee had put in ten hour's hard to work for small grubs he beheld the majestic Eagle pounce down and secure in a moment a fish large enough to last him three days. This capped the climax, and the Chick-a-dee flew higher up in the tree to consult the Buzzard as to what could be done.

"I'd lie about him," was the advice of the Buzzard after thinking it over.

The Chick-a-dee therefore flew through the forest spreading lies and slander regarding the Eagle, but the results were not satisfactory. No one seemed to believe them, and many advised the Chick-a-dee to continue his grubbing and let other Birds do as pleased them best. In this emergency the tiny Bird again appealed to the Buzzard for advice. The unclean Bird picked his teeth over the subject and replied:

"You must go to the Eagle and tell him what you think of him."

Early the next morning the Chick-a-dee set out on his mission. Meeting the Eagle in mid-air he began a tirade of abuse, but the Eagle did not seem to hear. Enraged and exasperated, the Chick-a-dee used still stronger language, but the result was the same.

"Say! say! I'm abusing you!" he finially called out. "I've slandered you, lied about you, and now I insult you, and you dare not resent it."

"Little atom," replied the Eagle, as he slowed up a little, "if struck by an Eagle I should strike back. When a bird of your size bothers me I cannot even afford time to stop and eat him."

Mortimer Collin's Little Friend.

Collins loved to notice and make friends with the birds and "small deer" that lived around him, and often a pleasant intercourse was carried on between them. Like Thoreau, though in a lesser degree, he knew how to make friends with the feathered folk that built their nests in his trees; and the intimacy seems to have proved agreeable on both sides. Here is a bit of cheerful gossip about a winter guest:

"I have made a very pleasant acquaintance—a young and vivacious person, musical and garrulous, grateful for small kindnesses, and never a bore. He is, to avoid the mysterious, a robin red-breast—a young cock, whose waistcoat has not yet attained its fullest scarlet nor his song its complete music. There are lots of them on my lawn, in various stages of adolescence; but this little beauty got into my book room one morning, and flew in a fright against the window when I entered, and fell on the floor half stunned. I took him up, and got him to drink a little water, and put him on the grass. He soon recovered, and now he follows me all over the place. He waits to welcome me the first thing in the morning. He perches on my knee as I sit writing on the lawn, and twitters out a sweet low song. He is very inquisitive about every thing new that comes out when we encamp under the trees, examining work-baskets, writing-baskets, straw hats, with an evident thirst for knowledge. He comes on my writing-table to pick up crumbs; then suddenly darts away in a hurry to seize something more enticing—a fat spider, or a daddy longlegs, or a butterfly. There is something curious in the friendship of this feathered atom born out of gratitude."

Mrs. Collins adds in a note: "He continued to be friendly until the spring of the following year, and spent the greater part of the winter in the house, thereby causing great jealousy to two other robins, who were great favorites, who used to watch for him to come out of the house and attack him.—The Spectator.

How a Pretty Jewess Saved Her Life.

There is a pretty story told of how a lovely Jewess in a Russia town saved her property and her life during the recent attacks upon the Jews. A great, hulking ruffian entered her shop and bought a loaf of bread. After swallowing a couple of mouthfuls he threw himself on the ground outside the shop door and began to howl piteously that he was poisoned—the Jews had poisoned him. Of course an infuriated crowd instantly assembled, and it would have fared ill with our Jewess if she had not dashed out of the shop, and, snatching the bread out of the impostor's hand, began to eat in sight of them all. The crowd stopped, thunderstruck. A broad grin dawned on every countenance. One of them called out to her: "Aloshs, lend me your knout, will you?" Then the impostor started to his feet and scudded off, pursued by a mischievous, but no longer sanguinary, crowd.

IN 1581 two priests and a lawyer suffered death by fire at Smithfield, on account of some disturbance between the superior and inferior clergy. At the same time a cook was boiled to death for poisoning seventeen persons.

IT is estimated that the Mammoth cave would furnish store-room for 2,500,000 barrels of lager and 1,000,000 limburger cheeses.

HANDLING MILLIONS A DAY.

Scenes at the New York Custom House—How Duties on Imports Are Paid In.

[From the New York Tribune.]

In a small room on the main floor of the Custom House and occupying the southwest corner of it, the cashier, with a force of fifteen clerks, receives all the money for duties levied by the Government on imports, excepting the small amount assessed on passengers' baggage, which is collected on the wharf.

Some idea of the amount of business done in this office may be gained when it is stated that the money received in a single day has several times lately amounted to $2,000,000, and the number of entries made has exceeded 1,000. The manner in which this large amount of money is handled is as follows:

The merchant or broker's clerk, after first making out his entry in the rotunda of the building where the amount of duty is calculated on the entry by the [illegible] takes his place in the line before one of the receiving clerks, and deposits the amount of his entry in a small box, and with it a ticket on which he has entered the merchant's name, with the date and the sum inclosed, whether in gold, silver, notes or certificates.

Gutta-percha boxes are used to prevent unnecessary noise from the clinking of the coin. The receiving clerk takes the box of money and hands it to a teller to count from the entry in a blotter. The teller does not look at the cash ticket until he has counted the money and marked it on the back of the ticket. He then turns it over and if the count is correct he checks it and returns it to the receiving clerk, who then signs a permit for the delivery of the goods. The entries then go to the book-keepers who enter the amount on "sheets," and at the close of the day the money is counted and compared with this record of the book-keepers.

So carefully is this system carried out that there is rarely a variation of a cent between the money and the accounts, and the office has thereby gained the reputation of being more exact than any other similar institution in the country which handles such an amount of money coming in so many different payments, from $5 to $5,000.

Should any discrepancy occur, the clerks carefully compare both sides of the tickets with the clerk's blotter; and then the [illegible] checked off with the book-keeper's sheets. By some of these methods the error is certain to be discovered. As account is kept of each kind of money separately, the tellers can see at a glance if a mistake is made in the gold, silver certificates or notes.

When the coin has been counted and put into small canvas bags it is placed in boxes holding [illegible] in gold. These boxes are put in a hand cart outside the building and wheeled to the sub-treasury, which gives a receipt to the Custom House for each deposit.

Nearly a ton of coin has to be transferred daily in this manner. An officer fully armed accompanies the porters, and there are also armed men in the cashier's office. The cashier, clerks and tellers are men of efficiency, and the responsibility of the office makes their position more permanent than that of the average Custom House officer. The tellers acquire great skill in detecting counterfeits as well as in rapid counting. Some of the ways of counterfeiting which come under their notice are curious.

The Chinese in San Francisco are expert enough to split a $10 gold piece, cut out the center, fill it with base metal and join it together so nicely that only an expert could detect the fraud. The patient Chinaman also finds it profitable to "sweat" gold by shaking the coin in a bag and gathering the gold dust which accumulates from the abrasion of the metal.

Another device is to file gold coin across the edge, thus destroying the raised milling. All the silver and nickel coins are counterfeited, from the 3-cent piece to the legal-tender dollar. They are first stamped from base metal and then plated with silver. Even this the counterfeiters do not buy, but obtain by immersing silver coin in acid, which removes from the coin enough silver for the counterfeiters' use, while the "sweated" silver can still be passed at par.

The cashier's office performs only a small portion of the work of the Custom House in all its branches, but, as it is one of the main resources of the public purse, it is perhaps the most interesting. As one passes along the dingy corridor, he catches sight of the three lines of men cramped and crooked around in the little room, boys and gray-haired men, with their little gutta-percha boxes full of gold ready to be emptied into the capacious pockets of Uncle Sam.

Double Glazing.

A writer in the English Mechanic points out some of the advantages of double-glazing in promoting the health of homes in winter. Skylights, he says, ought never to be put up unless double or double-glazed. Double-glazing answers perfectly if the sashes are grooved out for glass on each side, and are then glazed with an air space of one-half inch or more between the panes of glass. The glass must be put in with its inner faces perfectly bright and clean, and the glazing should be done on a cold, dry day, so as not to include watery vapor, which in cold weather will condense inside the air space, and cause mistiness. This double-glazing, with an air-space makes a window almost as warm as a brick wall, and not only keeps up the temperature of a room in winter, and saves fuel, but it keeps the room cool in hot weather, and it makes the temperature more uniform throughout the apartment. With ordinary thin glazing in winter, the inmates are always being chilled on that side which looks toward the window, and baked on the side which is toward the fire. Double-glazing our window sashes would save all this trouble.

An Occasion for Boycotting.

In reply to a correspondent who indignantly asks if nothing can be done to stop the vandals who are transforming the face of the country into one vast advertising medium, the Springfield Republican observes that one obstacle in the way of preventing such outrages is the melancholy fact that farmers and landed proprietors "don't care, or, if they do, it is only $1 or $2 worth. The disapproval of the advertising fiend is chiefly felt by persons who don't own any fences or sheds or rocks—who have nothing but a sensitive taste and a powerless indignation. These unfortunate people can't do anything except swear never to buy a particle of the soaps or dentifrices or elixirs or suspenders or other contrivances so insolently advertised, and never to deal with the advertisers. We should like to see a league formed, bound by that solemn obligation—it is a perfectly proper occasion for boycotting."

A Fatal Thirst.

From the London Lancet we learn that "many years ago a case was recorded by Dr. Otto, of Copenhagen, in which four hundred and ninety-five needles passed through the skin of a hysterical girl, who had probably swallowed them through a hysterical paroxysm; but these emerged from the regions below the diaphram, and were collected in groups, which gave rise to inflammatory swellings of some size." It would seem from the cases on record that needles in the system rather assist in the digestion and promote longevity. For instance, we will suppose that the hysterical girl above alluded to, with four hundred and ninety-five needles in her stomach, should absorb the midsummer cucumber. Think how interesting these needles would make it for the great colic promoter. We can imagine the cheerful smile of the cucumber as it enters the stomach, and, bowing cheerfully to the follicles standing around, hangs its hat upon the walls of the stomach, stands its umbrella in a corner, and proceeds to work. All at once the cucumber looks surprised and grieved about something. It stops in its heaven-born colic generation, and pulls a rusty needle out of its person. Maddened by the pain, it once more attacks the digestive apparatus, and once more accumulates a choice job lot of needles. Again and again it enters into the unequal contest, each time losing ground, till the poor cucumber, with assorted hardware sticking out in all directions like the hair on a cat's tail, at last curles up like a caterpillar, and yields up the victory. Still this needle business will be expensive to husbands if wives once acquire the habit and allow it to obtain the mastery over them. The woman who once begins to tamper with cambric needles is not safe. She thinks she has power to control her appetite, but it is only a step to the maddening thirst for the soul-destroying darning-needle, and perhaps to the button-hook and carpet stretcher. We once knew a sweet young creature, with dewy eye and breath like timothy hay. Her merry laugh rippled out upon the summer air like the joyful music of bald-headed bobolinks. In a thoughtless moment she swallowed a cambric needle. This did not satisfy her. The cruel thraldom had begun. Whenever she felt depressed and gloomy there was nothing that would kill her ennui and melancholy but the fatal needle-cushion. From this she rapidly became more reckless till there was hardly an hour that she was not under the influence of needles. If she could not get needles to assuage her mad thirst she would take hair-pins and door-keys. She gradually pined away to a mere skeleton. She could no longer sit on one foot and be happy. Life for her was filled with opaque gloom and sadness. At last she took an over-dose of sheep-shears and monkey-wrenches one day, and on the following morning her soul had lit out for the land of eternal summer. We should learn from this to shun the maddening needle-cushion, and never tell a lie.

Nevada Jurors.

[Carson Appeal.]

A number of men were sitting in front of the Ormsby house discussing the big mining suit in Eureka between the Richmond and Albion. Gen. Kittrell, W. W. Bishop, Sine Barnes, Johnny Moore, and others were interesting the crowd with recitals of the suit they had seen. Bishop and Kittrell insisted that of late years the atmosphere of the courts had been purer than in the earlier days.

"That is," said Barnes, "thinner and weaker; in other words, jurors cost less than formerly."

Both the lawyers agreed that coin had a potent influence. When the law was all on their side and the jury on the other, they could only explain it on a coin hypothesis.

At this point an old grizzly-bearded man who had been listening slid up and remarked:

"Minning suits ain't what they used to be. There has been no real live litigation to speak of since the Raymond & Ely suit with the Hermes in Pioche."

"Ware you in town?"

"Well, rather; I traveled four hundred miles on a mule to get in a jury box. I struck the town about 6 o'clock at night, and walking into the lead bar-room, inquired if the suit had begun. Inside of half an hour a man came up and asked me what my name was. He wrote it down on his shirt cuff and then he said: 'Pard if you want to stay and see the suit, let me see you through on your expenses;' and he handed me $500, remarking that he thought the R. & E. had the bulge on the law. I said that I thought that myself, and then I sauntered off. In about an hour a man came to me and told me I was drawn on the jury. I said I didn't mind, and agreed to stand in. About 9 o'clock a man tapped me on the arm and handed me $500, remarking that the Hermes had about all the law and facts on their side that was necessary. He thought I might need a little money for expenses. Of course I took the money, he seemed so anxious to get rid of it, and then I slipped into a back room, put on a pair of false side-whiskers, a thin silk duster I had been carrying under my coat, and I was a changed man. By 10 o'clock I was on a good horse that I paid $300 for, and started off on a prospecting trip. I couldn't bear the idea of holding the scales of justice in a case like that. I was fearful for further corruption, you see. But on the trial I was represented by a proxy. On the road I met old Bill Damon, dead broke and discouraged. I put him on the lay, and he started double quick for Pioche. He struck the ledge rich, I guess, for when I next heard of him he was drivin' a spankin' team and enjoying life."

A STEEL bar held in the natural direction of a needle, and struck several blows with a hammer, will become magnetized.

LONG-LIVED PEOPLE.

Betsey Trentham, of Tennessee, died in 1834, aged 154 years. The following particulars of this individual are given in the National Gazette, from an account dated Murfreesborough, Tenn., February 22, 1834: She was born in Germany, and emigrated to the British colonies in American at the time when the first settlement was made in North Carolina in the year 1710. At the age of 120 years her eyesight became almost extinct, but during the last twenty years of her life she possessed the power of vision as perfectly as at the age of 20 years. For many years previous to her death she was unable to work, and is said to have received great attention in her friends to prevent the temperature of her body from falling so low as not to sustain animal life. At the time of her death she had entirely lost the senses of taste and hearing. For twenty years before her death she was unable to distinguish between the taste of vinegar and sugar. At the age of 65 she bore her only child, who is now living, and promises to reach an uncommonly advanced age.

Solomon Nabit, of Laurens county, N. C., died in 1820, aged 143 years. Nabit was a native of England where he lived until he was 19 years of age. He then came to this country, and resided in the state of Maryland till about fifty-five years before his death, when he removed to South Carolina, where he passed the rest of his life. He never lost his teeth or his sight, and a few days before his death, he joined a hunting party, and actually killed a deer.

Henry Francisco, of Whitehall, N. Y., died in 1820, aged 134. Francisco is stated to have been born in France, in 1686, but at the age of 5 years left that country in company with his father, who fled from religious prosecution, and went first to Holland, and afterward to England. He was present at the coronation of Queen Anne, and was at that time 16 years old. He fought in the wars of that Queen, under the Duke of Marlborough. In the early part of the last century he came to New York, with his father. He was wounded in Braddock's defeat, was carried to Quebec, during the Revolutionary war, and suffered much from wounds.

Wonder Booker, a negro, of Prince Edward county, Va., died in 1819, aged 126 years. This individual was a slave belonging to George Booker, of Prince Edward county, Va. He received his name from the circumstance that his mother was in her 58th year at the time of his birth. He was of great strength of body, and his natural powers, which were superior to those of people of color in general, he retained in a surprising degree. He was a constant laborer in his master's garden till within eight or ten years of his death.

The most extraordinary instance of longevity in modern times, with regard to satisfactory evidence that can be found, is that of Peter Torton, of Zorten, a native of Kafrock in Hungary. He died January 5, 1724, at the age of 185. A few days before his death he walked, with the assistance of a staff, some miles to ask charity of the travelers. He had but little sight, and his hair and beard were of a greenish white color, like moldy bread, and few of his teeth remained. His food consisted of pulse and bread with a little brandy.

John Rovin and his wife, also natives of Hungary, died in the year 1741—the former in the 172d and the latter in the 164th year of her age, having been married 147 years.

The most extraordinary instance of longevity in Great Britain was exhibited in the person of Henry Jenkins. He was a native of Yorkshire, lived to the amazing age of 196 years, and died on the 8th of December, 1670. Next to Jenkins we have the famous Thomas Parr, who was a native of Shropshire, aged 159, and died in January, 1768. James Bowels, aged 152, lived in Killingworth, and died on the 15th day of August, 1656. Colonel Thomas Winslow, a native of Ireland, aged 146, died on the 20th of August, 1766. The Countess of Desmond, in Ireland, saw her 140th year. Williams Evans aged 145, lived in Caernavon, and in the year 1872 still existed, and Dumiter Radadoy, aged 140, lived in Harmenstead, and died on the 15th day of August, 1656.

No Good Preaching.

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a lawsuit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. Spelling.

Mr. Topnoody went to the minstrels and the funny conundrums and jokes he heard set him to thinking. So at breakfast he began on Mrs. Topnoody. She was warm and not much in the humor for pleasantry, but Topnoody slashed away.

"I say, Mrs. Topnoody, can you spell 'hard water' with three letters?"

"No, I can't; I might, though, if you had taken me to the minstrels last night." This staggered him a little, but not seriously.

"And you can't spell it?" Well, i-c-e, ain't that hard water?"

Mrs. Topnoody never smiled and Mr. T. went on:

"Now spell 'money' with four letters."

"I don't know how," she said.

"Ha, ha, that's too good. A woman never can get at this sort of thing in the same clear-headed way a man can. Well, the way to spell it is c-a-s-h, ain't that money?"

Again did Mrs. Topnoody fail to smile, and Mr. Topnoody started out with another.

"Hold on a minute," she interrupted, looking ugly; "I've got one; lets see if you can get it; Spell 'Topnoody' with four letters." Topnoody scratched his head a while, and gave it up.

"Ha, ha," laughed Mrs. T., "that's too good. A man never can get at this sort of thing in the same clear-headed way a woman can. Well, the way to spell it is f-o-o-l, ain't that Topnoody?"

But Topnoody never smiled, and the breakfast was finished in silence except an occasional chuckle from Mrs. Topnoody's end of the table.—Steubenville Herald.

If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. AN Elkton (Md.) paper mentions the case of Mr. T. Deenan, of that place, who suffered severely with rheumatic pains until he tried a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, which completely cured him.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Journal.

EXCAVATIONS in Yorkshire have brought to light skeletons proved to be those of Britons of a time previous to the landing of Cæsar. One of the skeletons presents signs that the man was a martyr to rheumatism.

CITED by the Washington (Ind.) Gazette is the fact that the colts in that locality have a sort of lameness in the joints. J. F. Myers cured his by anointing it with St. Jacobs Oil.

THE passion for feasting increased so much in England in the fourteenth century that when Lionel, son of Edward III., was married, there were thirty courses, and the fragments of the table fed 1,000 people.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound has done thousands of women more good than the medicine of many doctors.

THE King of Italy is out of debt, pays cash, stands in with the church and invites editors to "come up to the shanty and have a nip with me." A King might as well be a good fellow as a mean old grizzly.

MEN and women that pursue sedentary occupations need to take Kidney-Wort.

ADHERE rigidly and undeviatingly to the truth; but, while you express what is true, express it in a pleasing manner. Truth is the picture, while the manner is the frame that displays it to advantage.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

A FAIRY AFLOAT.

The following description of the fairy vessel represented on this page is from the Cincinnati Commercial: The hull is of the finest selected white oak, braced, bolted and riveted in the most skillful and workmanlike manner, and is 64 feet in length, 14 feet breadth of beam, 2½ feet depth of hold, and draws twenty inches of water. She carries a tubular boiler, and two beautiful little engines, made expressly for her, by the Ohio Machine Co., Middleport, O. The dining-room is situated between the boiler and engine rooms, and is artistically grained, with frescoed ceiling. It is furnished in the Queen Anne style, and the silver, china and table linen are of the finest character. The pilot-house, cabin, main salon and Captain's office are on the saloon deck and are luxurious in their furnishing and decorations. The saloon proper is frescoed and gilded in Eastlake style, and the flooring is covered with Turkish carpet. The furniture, in raw silk and walnut, of the Queen Anne pattern, like that of the dining-hall, and rich curtains of damask complete the impression of a veritable floating palace. The four state-rooms, containing two berths each, are also carpeted with Brussels and handsomely furnished. The boat belongs to and was built under the directions of Messrs A. Vogeler & Co., Baltimore, Md., for their own exclusive use upon the Ohio, Mississippi and other Western rivers, and is run by a picked crew of efficers and men in their employ. The object of this little steamer is to carry neither freight nor passengers. She was built for the firm above named, to be used exclusively by them for distributing their printed matter in the river towns for ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great German Remedy for rheumatism and other painful ailments.

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.
GENTLEMEN:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

An Old Doctor's Advice.

It was this: "Trust in God and keep your bowels open." For this purpose many an old doctor has advised the habitually costive to take Kidney-Wort—for no other remedy so effectually overcomes the condition, and that without the distress and griping which other medicines cause. It is a radical cure for piles. Don't fail to use it.—[Translated from the New York Zeitung.

The name of Maria is so popular in Ottumwa, Ia., that when a cat climbs a back fence in a well populated neighborhood and plaintively vocalizes, "Mariar," twenty windows are hastily thrown up and twenty female heads are thrust out, wildly answering: "Is that you, Charley?"

An Erie young man has been turned out of church for dancing. He now wishes he had gone to a Sunday-school picnic and hugged and kissed the girls in a religious game of copenhagen, and thus retained his good standing in church.

That was a funny mistake of the man who took up a Testament and glancing at the running title, "S. Matthew," said he always knew Stanley was smart, but didn't know he ever wrote on religious subjects.

"Annie," said a fond husband to his wife, "what were the current expenses for last month?" "Oh," she answered, "only 28 cents." "Why, how was that?" "Well, you see I only baked cake twice and, therefore, used very few currants.'

'Why didn't yer put on a clean collar afore yer left 'ome this morning?' Sweep—'Cause yer mother haven't sent back my dress shirts from the wash this week.'

The ticket office of the Lake Shore road at Goshen was entered one night last week during the fair and about $20 taken.

Holloway's Pills.

Never despair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's Pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. Read the advertisement elsewhere.

How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large proportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SOLID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

AT EVENTIDE.

At eventide, when summer breezes blow,
We seek our little porch to rest;
All labor ended ere the parting glow
Of day has faded in the west.

We gladly cast with sense of sweet release
The shackles of our cares aside,
And softened hues and hush of eve in peace
Enwrap us like a mantle wide.

Like drifting clouds the pleasant moments go,
Though we would fain their flight arrest,
While deeper the creeping shadows grow,
And stars shine out at night's behest.

Robins Getting Drunk on the Berries of the China Tree.

In Georgia and some other parts of the south there is a large, spreading tree, very beautiful in early May when covered with its delicate veil of lovely bloom, which is variously known as the "Pride of China" and "Pride of India." Its berries, as it appears from the following brief reference to the tree in a letter to Forest and Stream from Bartow, Ga., have the property of intoxicating birds. The writer of the letter, it appears, had said so, and been laughed at as a fraud. In another letter he maintains it as a fact. The experiment we quote was made before the war:

"During last May I wrote you a little sketch, a continuation of "southern wood notes," in which I mentioned in rather a playful manner the habits of some birds. No attempt was made at a scientific description, but some notes were inserted concerning the habits of our migratory birds, which I trusted might prove interesting to northern naturalists. Among other birds mentioned were the crow and robin. About the robin especially several of your correspondents have been much exercised in their vast and powerful minds. A storm of righteous indignation is poured upon me for my sins, in that I made Cock Robin a cool, deliberate, unmitigated inebriate.

I notice that robins were in the habit of falling stupefied to the ground after a long continued feast upon berries of the China tree. Again, some were not stupefied at all, but were as sober as judges, and they looked with ill-concealed contempt upon their more convivially-inclined associates. Some, in the frolicsome stage, would buffet their companions with their wings, and, altogether, would present a most rakish and dissipated appearance. Now here was a seeming contradiction. All ate of the berries. Ergo, if one got drunk, all should get drunk; or they must be seasoned "bummers" among them, who, being drunk, carried it off as some men do, with an owl-like gravity and a wisdom most edifying to behold.

To satisfy myself that these birds were drunk, and, like honest Cassio, had "put an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains," I took several one evening to my room, which room was the chosen resting-place of my-self and an incipient sawbones. He knew enough of medicine to know the most powerful antidotes to alcoholic poisoning, and we applied them in a diluted and cautious way to the gay and festive robins, our patients. I am sorry to record that not one thanked us for our efforts, but they flew out of the window, nor paused to pay any medical fee.

'Perfectly recovered?' Had you seen them as they went careering over the tree-tops you would have thought that some fellow had been giving them hock and soda after a night's debauch.

But the most curious part of the whole affair was the comical resemblance each robin bore to somebody of our acquaintance when in his cups. There was one old robin, a very Falstaff in size and vinous tendencies, who had the same moist eye the same love of sack and the rakish air of Sir John.

One, when the antidote had its full effect upon him, actually winked at me and the immature sawbones in the most paternal manner. Another, on staggering to his feet, like old Colonel L——, tried to get into an affair of honor, for he pecked fiercely at us both.

Having established to my satisfaction that some robins did get gloriously drunk, while others eating the same food did not leave the thorny paths of sobriety, I determined to investigate the matter.

Well, I found it just as I stated it to be. Some berries contain the alcohol in solution; others do not. Why, is one of those things we cannot find out. So, Cock Robin gets hold of one or more of those berries in a morning and gets drunk. 'Well, wot of it?' He gets drunk and enjoys it, and he is not ashamed."

Miami Indian Treaties.

In view of the fact that payment of the principal sum due the remnants of the Miami Indians of Indiana is soon to be made by the Hon. Calvin Cowgill, of this city, appointed a special Indian agent for the purpose, a review of the treaties under which this payment is made may prove of interest to the general reader.

This principal sum amounts to $221,257.80, and is to be equally divided between the descendants of the tribe—322 in number—who were alive on the 1st day of June, 1880, amounting in round numbers to about $687 to every member. The first treaty made by the government with the Miami Indians, was concluded near the mouth of the Mississinewa, upon the Wabash river, on the 23d day of October, 1826, the United States agreeing to pay to the Miamis a permanent annuity of $25,000 as long as they shall exist together. Subsequently, at the forks of the Wabash, between this city and Huntington, a treaty was made, by which the government stipulated "to possess the Miami tribe of, and guarantee them forever, a country west of the Mississippi river, to remove to and settle on when said tribe may be disposed to emigrate from their present country." By a still later treaty, concluded at the same place, on the 28th of November, 1840, the tribe agreed to remove to the country assigned them within five years, it being stipulated, however, that the families of the national chief, Richardville, the war chief, Godfroy, and the village chief, Me-shin-go-mesia, together with a few others named in the treaty, might remain in Indiana upon reservations assigned to them, and receive their share of annuities in Indiana. The descendants of Richardville, Godfroy and Me-shin-go-me-sia, are the Indians still residing in this vicinity.

After the removal of the larger portion of the Miami Indians to their new homes in the west, a delegation of both the eastern and western Indians visited Washington, the eastern delegation headed by Me-shin-go-me-sia, and the western by Na-we-lan-quah, or "Big Legs," and entered into a new treaty. George W. Manypenny was then commissioner of Indian affairs. By the last treaty, $231,004.00 was stipulated to be paid to the eastern Indians at the expiration of twenty-five years, in lieu of a permanent annuity, the government to annually pay, until said principal sum was paid, five per cent. interest upon that amount in the form of annuities. Two families were permitted, however, to draw their share of the principal sum, leaving a balance of funds due the Indians of $221,257.80, and this is the money soon to be distributed.

The Miamis have perhaps been as fairly treated as any Indian tribe in the country, but they, too, have been most outrageously swindled. The treaty made in 1854, when Franklin Pierce was president, by which they sold their permanent annuities, was a piece of sharp practice which cost them at least $300,000, as the annuities were worth more than double the amount agreed to be paid for them. For thirteen years, too, over 100 names were carried upon the pay-roll of Indians who were without a trace of Miami blood, and who drew from the fund during that time probably $200,000 to which they had no shadow of title. They were also compelled to accept annuities in greenbacks during the war, and this, too, was no inconsiderable loss.

A Daughter of Texas.

[San Angela Times.]

A report that Miss Josie House was lost startled her many friends in town last Thursday. She had been lost the night before, however, while returning from a neighbor's house, but was found by a party hunting her about 12 o'clock that night. When Miss Josie found she had lost her way, and after becoming satisfied she could not find her home that night, she deliberately unsaddled her horse, staked him out, and, making a bed out of the saddle blankets and a pillow of her saddle, was soon sound asleep, and was asleep when awakened by the shouts of the gentlemen who found her.

Correspondence.

EAST TOLEDO, OHIO, Oct. 21, 1881.

EDITORS COURIER: Since I left Waterloo the 11th of last May, I have been employed by Wm. S. Smith, hardware merchant of this city, and since I have been in the city, I have learned that business with business men meant business.

I suppose the people of Waterloo think it rather queer because I did not remain there longer, when there recently, and I will explain: The reason I did not stay longer, was on account of having to attend court, as a witness. Through the kindness of Mr. Smith, I was allowed to go home during the fair. I left Toledo October 4 to go home and visit my parents and friends, with the understanding to be back to my work positively no later than Tuesday, October 11, or would undoubtedly have lost my position. While I was at Waterloo, I made three trips to Auburn, and reported at the clerk's office each time. I also told them it would be impossible for me to be there after Monday, and asked to have my deposition taken, but was told that a deposition could not be taken in a criminal case; and, well-knowing that I would lose my position if I were not back on time, I took the train Monday afternoon (after bidding my parents good-bye), and went to Butler, stopped off to see a lady friend of mine, and that night went to Toledo. If further information is wanted, it can be had by addressing me, at No. 56 Front street, East Toledo, and enclose photograph, for answer by return mail. Very respectfully yours,

SCOTT LOTZENHISER.

The Origin of the Duchess Tribe.

A writer in the Mark Lane Express gives the following history of the most valuable families of Short-horn. He says: As the Duchess tribe is so famous, and sells at enormous prices, I may here give a few particulars regarding it. The first of the family we hear of was bought by Chas. Colling from the Duke of Northumberland's agent at Stanwix, a massive short-legged cow, of a yellowish red, with the breast near the ground. She had a wide back and was a great grower. Colling called her Duchess, and had often described her to Bates as a very superior animal, particularly in her handling, and told him he considered her the best cow he had ever seen, but that he could never breed so good a one from her. She was descended from the old stock of Sir Henry Smithson of Stanwix. Thomas Bates bought of Colling one of the descendants of this cow in 1805 for 100 guineas, being a fine dairy animal; and he bought another at Colling's sale in 1810. For the latter he paid 183 guineas, and styled her First, and from her all of the present family descended. Bates says he was induced to select this tribe from having found they are great growers and quick feeders, with fine quality of meat, consuming little food in proportion to their growth, and also finding that they are great milkers.

School Report.

Report of Pleasant Hill, No. 9, Fairfield township, for the month ending Oct. 14. Names of pupils who were perfect in attendance and deportment:

Bertha Wells, Arthur Bower, Elmer Bower, George Gushwa, Claude Gushwa, Berchie Chilcoats, Charlie Reinoehl. Number enrolled 29, average daily attendance 25, number of visitors 8. Term standing 23 daily attendance. The scholars manifested a desire for study, and were ready to answer when called upon. The patrons have the school at heart and are working for its advancement. They have my thanks for the kindness and hospitality bestowed upon me while tarrying with them.

J. A. McINTYRE, Teacher.

The clock in the old church-tower at Newark, N. J., has been keeping bad time. A thorough examination revealed a mass of hay, twine, cotton, grass and feathers tangled in the wheels. A pair of birds have tried for weeks to build a nest in the machinery, which tore their work to pieces. They kept on, notwithstanding, until their persistence stopped the wheels. They had so completely hidden their operation that they were carrying it on in cog.

LADY BEAUTIFIERS.—Ladies, you can not make fair skin, rosy cheeks, and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers of the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such rich blood, good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof. 42-3w.

What Soda Water is Flavored With.

INGREDIENTS OF SO-CALLED FRUIT EXTRACTS—FEW DRINKS WHAT THEY CLAIM TO BE.

[New York Tribune.]

The reported poisoning of a picnic party by that beverage known as picnic or Sunday school lemonade, hitherto supposed to be extremely harmless, has led to some inquiries regarding the composition of other so-called mild and harmless summer drinks. Among these soda water probably is the most popular. The danger of drinking this lies not so much in the soda water itself, as in the flavor which is added to give it a pleasant taste. To learn what these flavors were composed of a Tribune reporter recently called on a chemist in this city who has made their manufacture a study and a specialty.

"The reason why natural flavors are not employed," said the chemist, "is that they are not strong enough. Besides, they would be very costly. Few of the sirups and extracts sold have the remotest relation to the extract of the fruit they sham on that account. The sources from which these are drawn are numerous. The pine-apple oil of commerce, which is used in a great many sirups, extracts and perfumes, is the chemical butyric ether, obtained from rancid tallow or fat. The flavors of strawberry, raspberry, orange, apple and pear are gained from fusel-oil or the chemical amyle. An extract of goal-tar, known as diethyl, and benzoic acid, extracted from naphthalin, are also used. The more acid essences, as lemon, lime and gooseberry, are gained from oxalic acid."

"Are any of these substances injurious to the health?"

"Not necessarily, because they are naturally present in the fruits they represent. Oxalic acid is found in gooseberries, citric acid in lemons, butyric acid in pineapples and tartaric acid in wine. Taken pure in large quantities, they would no doubt be poisonous. For example, cyanide of potassium can be obtained from bitter almonds by a fortunately difficult chemical process, and is the strongest poison known to chemistry. Yet there is no reason why the extract of bitter almonds, as used in French and Italian liquors, should not be perfectly harmless. Oh, yes, some of these celebrated Italian and French cordials are as much adulterated by flavors as our humble soda water is. That delicious cordials, curacao, which smells so strongly of oranges, is very often not the pure extract of oranges, but owes its flavor to vile fusel-oil. So it is with Italian vermouth and German kirschwasser. The latter is frequently nothing but alcohol charged with the extract of bitter almonds or the cyanide of potassium. The name (cherry-water) is due to the fact that bitter almonds have much the taste of the kernels of cherry pits, which are supposed to be present in the genuine kirschwasser. Is is not very pleasant to think that the delicious cordial or liquor one drinks is really the product of the chemical laboratory and primarily of street-sweepings; but what is genuine nowadays?"

Things Learned by Experience.

If your coal fire is low, throw on a table-spoonful of salt, and it will help it very much. A little ginger put into sausage meat improves the flavor. In icing cake, dip the knife frequently in cold water. In boiling meat for soup, use cold water to extract the juices; if the meat is wanted for itself alone, plunge in boiling water at once. You can get a bottle or barrel of oil off of any carpet or woolen stuff by applying dry buckwheat plentifully and faithfully; never put water to such a grease spot or liquid of any kind. Broil steak without salting. Salt draws the juices in cooking; it is desirable to keep these in if possible. Cook over a hot fire, turning frequently, searing on both sides. Place on a platter; salt and pepper to taste. Beef having a tendency to be tough can be made very palatable by stewing very gently for two hours, pepper and salt, taking out about a pint of liquid when done, and letting the rest boil into the meat. Brown the meat in the pot. After taking up make a gravy of the pint of liquid saved. A small piece of charcoal in the pot with boiling cabbage removes the smell. Clean oilcloth with milk and water; a brush and soap will ruin them. Tumblers that have had milk in them should never be put in hot water. A spoonful of stewed tomatoes in the gravy of either roasted or fried meats is an improvement. The skin of a boiled egg is the most efficacious remedy that can be applied to a boil. Peel it carefully, wet and apply to the part affected. It will draw off the matter and relieve the soreness in a few hours.

The fly is a great pest to horses in warm weather, and to get rid of them is a good thing. A writer says to prevent them from bothering a horse make the application, before harnessing, of a mixture of one part of crude carbolic acid with one or more parts of olive oil. This should be rubbed lightly all over the animal with a rag, and applied more thickly to the interior of the ears and other parts most likely to be attacked. This application may need to be repeated in the course of the day, but while any odor of the acid remains the flies decline to settle, and the horse is completely free from all their annoyance. The nervous, irritable state into which some horses get from the attacks of these insects, is also not an infrequent cause of accidents, and those, therefore, may also be obviated.

THE INDIANA WEEKLY SENTINEL!

Has been enlarged and improved until it is now the LARGEST and the VERY BEST paper published in the west.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL is in all regards a superior eight page 56 column paper.

The merits of the Sentinel, as a general newspaper are so well known, that commendation of it is deemed superfluous. We will add, however, that the management has arranged and fully determined that no paper shall furnish so great a practical value to its patrons for the money.

In its news, its editorials, its literary and miscellany—in a word, in its general reading—it shall not be surpassed by any paper circulated in the state. It will be particularly adapted to the family circle. No reading, thinking man in the state can afford to do without the Weekly Sentinel at the small cost at which it is furnished.

THE SENTINEL will continue to be the same earnest advocate of true American democracy in the future that it has been in the past; indeed, it proposes to battle more vigorously than ever against the party of centralization and corruption. Vast monopolies own and control the republican party, and in the future, as in the past, it cannot do otherwise than foster class legislation, thereby trampling upon the interests of the producing masses.

The motto of the Sentinel is: "Hold fast to the democratic faith and battle on," and as certainly as God reigns victory will ultimately be with the people.

The republican party cannot survive its crimes. Its monumental iniquities cast their shadows athwart the land. Just men of all political opinions are horrified at its colossal crimes. Its ambition is for plunder and imperial power. Its downward progress, from the days when Grant's thieves organized the whisky ring to raise a corruption fund, to Guiteau's tragedy, has been marked by infamy at every step. From the days when John Sherman sheltered federal officers for perjuries to seat Hayes, crimes have followed each other in rapid succession. The flood-tide of star route thieves, treasury thieves, navy department thieves, war department thieves and signal service thieves, and Indiana has had Dorsey, the notorious star route thief and secretary of the republican national committee, in the state, organizing crimes to carry the state against the will of the people. The Sentinel will invite the people of Indiana to contemplate these republican methods to obtain and maintain power. It will keep its readers informed with regard to republican fights for spoils, the mutual denunciations of its factions, their criminations and recriminations, their mutual hates which culminated in the assassination of the president, thereby capping the climax of horrors and completing the work of infamy.

With this record of crime, the republican party asks for a new lease of power, and it will be the high ambition of the Sentinel to defeat its purposes and emancipate the country from its debauching grasp.

THE SENTINEL, in addition to its superiority, is, moreover, an Indiana paper, devoted to, and specially represents Indiana's interests, political and otherwise, as no foreign paper will or can do, and ought, therefore, to have preference over the papers of other states, and we ask democrats to bear this in mind, and select YOUR OWN STATE PAPER when you come to take subscriptions and make up clubs.

THE Nasonville Woolen Mill, in Burrillville township, R. I., has burned down. Loss, $70,000; insurance, $44,000. …The discovery in New York of forged paper of a Fort Wayne firm for $92,000 was speedily followed by the development that spurious notes of J. K. McIntyre, of Dayton, and Stevens, Wood & Tucker, of Columbus, had been negotiated in large amounts. It transpires that John Stevens, Jr., had been the New York buyer for all three of the firms named, and detectives are vainly searching for him.

THE police of New York are investigating an attempt to burn the Cunard steamer Bothnia. Four bottles of phosphorus and gasoline were found on the upper deck. Some burning carpets were thrown into the water. ….Thomas Bradley, an extensive butcher of Philadelphia, has been driven to the wall by indorsing paper of Washington Butcher's Sons for $135,000.

THE WEST.

VERY complete reports by telegraph to the Chicago Times from the great corn belt of the West show that the crop is in an unsatisfactory condition. In Illinois, Indiana and Iowa considerable damage has been done by the recent prolonged rains, and the crop will probably fall 20 to 30 per cent. short of an average, the quality being inferior also. In Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas the rains have been beneficial in the main, and hopes are entertained that the yield will be heavy. Owing to the high prices which corn has commanded of late, farmers have been selling liberally, and but a small portion of last year's crop now remains in their hands. The reports agree that the number of hogs now fattening is very much smaller than usual, and they will not come up to the average in weight…. A fire which originated in a blacksmith-shop on Spear street, San Francisco, destroyed a large planing-mill, valued at $100,000, a lumber-yard, a shipping-loft, a ship-carpentershop and other property. The total loss is placed at $150,000. The charred remains of two men were taken from the ruins….Pilot Temple, famous as a trotter a quarter of a century ago, fell a victim to the disease known as pink-eye, at St. Louis. ….Telegrams from Arizona state that the hostile Indians have crossed the border into Mexico. Col. Sanford followed them as soon as he got permission from the Mexican authorities.

PEOPLE near Independence, Mo., are greatly excited over the finding of a body hanging from a tree. It is believed that there has been a lynching by a Vigilance Committee for participating in the Glendale train-robbery. William Ryan was sentenced to twenty-five years in the penitentiary, which so unnerved him that he leaned on a chair for support…. In a scull-match at St. Louis, for $500 a side, Trickett defeated Plaisted by less than a length.

THE police of Minneapolis were recently advised that plans had been laid to rob a hat store on Nicollet avenue. Two officers spent five nights in a room on the second floor, with no result; but on the sixth evening they gave one burglar a double charge of buckshot and forced his accomplice to surrender to the Chief of Police.

OWING to a defective rail in the Northern division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, near Pewaukee, eight carriages were thrown from the track and rolled down a ten-foot embankment, the smoking-car getting partly below water. Many persons were seriously injured, but it is considered wonderful that no one was killed.

CAPT. ADAMS, of the whaler Arctic, visited in his recent voyage the scene of the loss of the ships Erebus and Terror, of Sir John Franklin's polar expedition (1845), and was informed by the Esquimaux of the sad fate of the last survivors, who tried to reach Hudson's bay overland, but died on the way.

WASHINGTON.

THE German Ambassador, Herr Von Schloezer, had an audience of the President, and on behalf of his imperial master of the imperial and royal family and Prince Bismarck, expressed the deep sympathy they had felt for the late President during his period of suffering and for the American nation in his loss. President Arthur, in response, acknowledged the kindly feeling which had prompted the message of condolence…. The French and German guests of the nation were formally presented to the President in the rotunda of the Capitol. Gen. Sherman and staff and the Justices of the Supreme Court were in attendance. The visitors were subsequently escorted to the Senate Chamber and presented to Acting Vice President Davis.

GUITEAU is becoming morose and suspicious. He has not been visited by his counsel for some days, and is greatly displeased thereat. He says that if some great criminal lawyer does not volunteer to defend him, he will defend himself.

MR. SCOVILLE, Guiteau's counsel, has published the following: "To the Public: The trial of Guiteau is fixed for Nov. 7. The short time allowed makes this appeal to the public necessary. Will the press kindly copy it? Guiteau attempted to lecture on religious subjects through several Northern States. It is believed that there are many people in that direction who can, if they will, furnish evidence of his insanity. Will they not do so in the interest of patriotism, justice, humanity and mercy? Patriotism, because if he is hanged as a sane man it will be an eternal blot on our history. Justice, so that it may not be said hereafter that he, being denied of the guidance of reason, was put to death contrary to all law, human and divine. Humanity and mercy, that should prompt the laying aside of passion and dealing with this case in Christian charity. If any person knows of facts bearing on this question, will he not furnish me information? No one will be called to testify unless it seems important to a just defense and fair trial. Please communicate with George Scoville, Washington, D. C."

POLITICAL.

DAVID DAVIS suggested to the President the name of Judge Gresham for a seat in the Cabinet.

GOV. FOSTER'S plurality in Ohio will fall a few votes short of 25,000….A Washington telegram of the 18th inst. says: "The President's determination to delay sending in the Cabinet nominations until week after next has broken all the slates, and it is asserted that he is more embarrassed than has hitherto been supposed. The rumor that Conkling is to be a member is renewed, and Blaine's friends say that the intention to appoint Conkling has never been abandoned. A Western Senator said this evening that he had felt that such an appointment would be so nearly fatal to the success of the administration, and to the future of the party, that he had gone to the President and protested against it. The President listened calmly and courteously, but did not indicate in any way his intention. In reply to a question, the Senator said Conkling would be confirmed unanimously. There could be no objection to him on the score of ability or of integrity, but the appointment would, nevertheless, wreck the administration."

EX-SENATOR MCDONALD, of Indiana, who is in attendance on the Supreme Court at Washington, urges upon the Democratic Senators the rejection of the nomination of Marshal Dudley for Pension Commissioner, on the ground that he prostituted his office to partisan work in the Presidential election.

The other nominations for city and county officers Tammany conceded to Irving Hall.

FOREIGN.

IROQUOIS, Mr. Pierre Lorrillard's horse, won the Newmarket Derby. Another American victory….Parnell's arrest was followed up with the proclamation of the whole of Ireland except the county of Derry, and the arrest of Quinn, the Land-League Secretary. A warrant was also issued for the arrest of Healey, Member of Parliament for Wexford, and Parnell's secretary.

FOLLOWING the arrest of Parnell, a number of other prominent Land Leaguers have been arrested, among them being John Dillon, Member of Parliament from Tipperary; Mr. William O'Brien, the editor of United Ireland, the Land-League organ; Mr. James O'Kelly, Member of Parliament for Roscommon, and at one time a well-known correspondent of the New York Herald. Mr. Forster, the Irish Secretary, has issued a proclamation threatening with arrest persons who participate in "boycotting." The arrests and the proclamations seem to have had little effect on the agitation. At a meeting held in Belfast, attended by 3,000 persons, including twenty priests, a general strike against rent was advocated. A similar meeting was held in Limerick. Several additional outrages have been reported. Proclamations forbidding the Sunday meeting at Limerick were torn down before daylight. Sahara Not Below Sea Level.

The curious cosmographic error has has long prevailed that the surface of the great Desert of Sahara, in Africa, was depressed below the ocean level. Some have seriously suggested that a canal be cut from the Atlantic or the Mediterranean, by which the desert might be filled with water, a new sea formed, intercommunication facilitated, and commerce increased with the interior. Dr. Lenz has recently lectured in Paris on his journey from Morocco to Timbuctoo. He says the great desert is actually a plateau about 1,000 feet above the level of the ocean, and that nowhere is there such a depression as formerly imagined. The fossils found are fresh water kinds, so that the Sahara is not the bottom of a dried up sea. The timid who have apprehended that the revolving earth might be thrown out of balance by the placing of a broad, deep sea on the surface of the great desert, may calm their fears.

THE Southern States possess a chicken syndicate. Six firms virtually control the poultry market. The combined capital is $50,000. OLD men's eyes are like old men's memories; they are strongest for things a long way off.

THE YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL.

Ceremonies at the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Surrender of Yorktown.

YORKTOWN, Oct. 19.

Yesterday's proceedings in the celebration now in progress may be briefly described as follows:

At 10 o'clock salutes were fired from Gen. Hancock's camp. The steamer Excelsior, with the Yorktown Congressional Commission on board, arrived, and was received with salutes from Gen. Hancock's camp and the war vessels in the harbor. Shortly after the Dispatch and Tallapoosa hove in sight, and were saluted by the camp and gunboats.

President Arthur left the Dispatch at 11:30 and proceeded to Lafayette Hall, where he was received by the Governor of Virginia.

The distinguished guests, including the descendants of Lafayette and Steuben, Governors of States and Congressmen, began to arrive at Lafayette Hall about 11 o'clock. Gen. Hancock arrived at noon and paid his respects to the Governor of Virginia.

At about 12:30 President Arthur, accompanied by Secretaries Hunt, James and Lincoln, was driven to the entrance of Lafayette Hall, and was received by Master of Ceremonies Corbin. The President shook hands with the distinguished persons present. The line was then formed, and the party marched to the grand stand, where the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the monument was to take place, under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity.

President Arthur was loudly cheered by the crowd during the march to the grand stand. When all had taken the places assigned them the ceremonies were opened with prayer by Rev. Robert Nelson, grandson of Gov. Nelson, who commanded the Virginia militia at Yorktown. He thanked God for 100 years of blessing vouchsafed this country, for Washington, for our allies and for our victory, and prayed that the people of the land might not pride themselves too much upon their own achievements and prosperity, but that they might thank and trust the Lord. He prayed for peace among all nations and for fraternal concord among the sections of our common country. He prayed for the rulers of the land, that they might be pure, and for the people that they might learn to love and serve the Lord.

At the conclusion of the prayer the band played the "Star Spangled Banner" with artillery accompaniment.

Gov. Holliday, of Virginia, then delivered the address of welcome. The Governor has a fine presence, clear voice and earnest manner, and was frequently applauded, especially by the distinguished gentlemen who sat around him. His allusions to the unity of sentiment, purpose and destiny of all sections of our common country were greeted with enthusiastic applause.

United States Senator J. W. Johnston, of Virginia, Chairman of the Congressional Commission, then made a few appropriate remarks, in which he sketched the history of the surrender, read from original documents an account of the action of Congress at the time, exhibited the sword voted to the messenger who bore the news of the surrender, and alluded to the fact that W. W. Henry, grandson of Patrick Henry, and the Rev. Dr. Nelson, grandson of Gov. Nelson, were on the stand.

In conclusion, he said that the column, now to be erected, was to commemorate not only the victory of the colonies, but the part taken in that victory by France. Recognition and acknowledgment of aid given by France to this country in the hour of its need was a solemn duty left by the Continental Congress to its successors, and now, after the lapse of 100 years, the Congress of thirty-eight States and 50,000,000 of people, the Congress of the nation which stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is fulfilling that duty. Three millions of people and thirteen colonies accomplished the great work, and now 50,000,000 of people and thirty-eight States are celebrating it. Participating in this celebration are the representatives of the French nation, here at the invitation of this Government. Again French soldiers tread American soil, and French vessels again ride York river. The model of the monument to be erected is here before us. Thirteen female figures representing the thirteen colonies seem to support on their shoulders a column inscribed with the names of thirty-eight States, and crowned with a figure of Liberty. This embodies the idea that from the thirteen colonies grew thirty-eight States, and sprung the truest and most thorough and genuine liberty ever enjoyed by any people. On four sides of the base, and carrying out the original design of the Continental Congress, are emblems of the alliance between the United States and his Most Christian Majesty, and a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis; and now, as an appropriate opening of our celebration, the corner-stone of the monument will be laid with all the grand and solemn ceremonies befitting so great an occasion by the order of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, of which Washington himself was a chief member.

The workmen, under the direction of the Grand Master of Virginia, then laid the corner-stone according to the ancient and honorable rite. The chair occupied by the Grand Master on the occasion was one which Lord Boutetort, when loyal Governor of the Old Dominion, presented to the Grand Lodge of Virginia, and in which George Washington sat when Grand Master of Virginia Masons. The sash and apron worn by Grand Master Peyton S. Coles, of Virginia, were worked by Mrs. Lafayette, and were presented to Washington in 1784 at Mt. Vernon. Afterward, in 1812, they were given to Washington Lodge, of Alexandria, Va., by Maj. Lawrence Lewis. The gavel was made from a portion of the quarter-deck of the United States frigate Lawrence, the flagship of Commodore Perry at the battle and victory of Lake Erie, Sept. 10, 1813, and was presented to the Masonic Veterans' Association by a venerable brother of the Rev. Marshall B. Smith, June 2, 1830.

Judge B. R. Welford, of Virginia, Masonic orator, then made an eloquent address, at the conclusion of which the ceremonies ended.

Immediately afterward President Arthur and party left for the steamer Dispatch. The steamer bearing the French Commission, Secretary Blaine, and others, was in the stream some two hours and a half before they were first discovered from shore, and while the corner stone was being laid Secretary Blaine came to the Government dock and sent word to the authorities in charge; but it was too late, as the ceremonies were completed, and the party returned to the Tallapoosa.

The scene on the river front was an inspiring one. Men-of-war, steamers, tugs, yachts, sailing vessels, all decked with flags and streamers, salutes to arriving dignitaries, gay uniforms, military, Knights' Templar, etc.; the music of bands and drums and fifes as the troops landed and marched to quarters, and the crowds of people of all nationalities and conditions who gathered at the batteries or wandered over the grounds—all combined to make a scene of deep interest. There were the usual drills at the camps all day, and they were witnessed by thousands of spectators.

The pyrotechnic display at night was a success. All the war-ships were brilliantly illuminated, presenting a beautiful sight. On the Franklin the lights were so arranged as to show the outlines of the ship and the rigging with a magnificent effect. There were also other designs, one being a schooner apparently under sail. From the yachts in the harbor went forth a constant stream of rockets, etc.

Troubles increased on Secretary Blaine's shoulders as the day went by. It is reported that the French grew jealous of the attention paid the Germans, and the Germans refused to come on the same ship with the French after leaving Fortress Monroe. The Germans came on the Catskill, while the French came on their own vessel.

YORKTOWN, Oct. 20.

About 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon Secretary Blaine and the French and German delegations, in full uniform, arrived at Lafayette Hall. On entering, the Marine Band, of Washington, played an appropriate air, the military officers, Congressmen and other persons of distinction greeting them as they passed. At the end of the hall the President met the distinguished guests, and an informal interchange of courtesies took place. In a few moments the party started for the grand stand, President Arthur and Secretary Hunt leading. They were received with cheers as they appeared upon the platform. Next came Secretary Blaine, escorting the French Legation. Gen. Sherman, with his staff in uniform were next in line, Gen. Hancock and staff following. Gen. Hancock was given three cheers.

After a general handshaking, the proceedings were opened by prayer by Bishop Harris. He invoked divine blessing upon the United States and the Republic of France, and, in conclusion, asked God's blessing upon all the crowned heads of the world.

The "Poindexter Centennial Hymn" was then sung by the choruses from Baltimore, Richmond and Washington.

President Arthur was then introduced by Secretary Blaine, and delivered the following address:

"Upon this soil, 100 years ago, our forefathers brought to a successful issue their heroic struggle for independence. Here and then was established, and, as we trust, made secure on this continent for ages yet to come, that principle of government which is the very fiber of our political system—the sovereignty of the people. The resentments which attended, and, for the time, survived the clash of arms, have long since ceased to animate our hearts. It is with no feelings of exultation over a defeated foe that to-day we summon up a remembrance of those events which have made holy the ground whereon we tread. Surely no such unworthy sentiments could find harbor in our hearts, so profoundly thrilled with the expression of sorrow and sympathy which our national bereavement has evolved from the people of England and their august sovereign, but it is altogether fitting that we should gather here to refresh our souls with the contemplation of the unfaltering patriotism, the sturdy zeal and the sublime faith which achieved the results we now commemorate; for so, if we learn aright the lesson of the hour, shall we be incited to transmit to the generation which shall follow the precious legacy which our fathers left to us—the love of liberty, protected by law. Of the historic scene which we here celebrate, no feature is more prominent, and none more touching, than the participation of our gallant allies from across the sea.

"It was the presence of the gallant allies from across the sea which gave fresh and vigorous impulse to the hopes of our countrymen, when well nigh disheartened by a long series of disasters. It was their noble and generous aid, extended in the darkest period of the struggle, which sped the coming of our triumph, and made the capitulation at Yorktown possible a century ago. To their descendants and representatives, who are here present as honorary guests of the nation, it is my glad duty to offer cordial welcome. You have a right to share with us the associations which cluster about the day when your fathers fought side by side with our fathers in the cause which was here crowned with success, and none of the memories awakened by this anniversary are more grateful to us all than the reflection that the national friendships here so closely cemented have outlasted the mutations of a changeful century. God grant, my countrymen, that they may ever remain unshaken, and that ever henceforth, with ourselves and with all nations of the earth, we may be at peace."

Max Outrey, then, in behalf of the French delegation, was introduced by Secretary Blaine, and delivered an address.

Mr. Outrey said the French Government has felt much touched by the friendly sentiments which inspired the United States with the thought of asking France to participate in the celebration of the Yorktown Centennial, and heartily desires to respond in a manner worthy of both republics to the invitation sent by the President of the United States in behalf of the people of America. Manifestations of public sympathy following the initiative taken by the Congress of the United States bidding France to this national festival, have been looked upon by us not only as an act of the highest courtesy, but especially as a mark of affectionate regard, having the noble aim of cementing yet more closely the ties which unite the two republics. In commemoration of this day, which represents one of the grandest events in the political existence of this country, the French Government has sent a mission, composed of special delegates from the different departments, and the President of the French republic, wishing to mark his personal sympathy, has sent one of his own aides-de-camp. They thus desire to show particularly their appreciation of the graceful compliment paid to our country. Each and all of us are proud of having been called to the honor of representing France on this auspicious day. The monument which is here to be erected will not only recall a glorious victory; it will perpetuate the recollections of an ever-faithful alliance—faithful through the trials and vicissitudes of an eventful century; and, as the President of the French republic has so truly said, it will consecrate the union sprung from generous and liberal aspirations, and which the institutions we can now boast of in common must necessarily strengthen and develop for the good of both countries. In coming to this Yorktown centennial we come to celebrate the day which ended that long and bitter struggle against a great nation, now our mutual ally and friend, who here, as under all skies where her flag has floated, has left ineffaceable marks of her grand and civilizing spirit. We come to celebrate the glorious date when the heroes of independence were able to set their final seal to the solemn proclamation of the Fourth of July, 1776. We come also to salute the dawn of that era of prosperity where, led by her great men, America permitted the intelligence of her people to soar and their energy to manifest itself, and thus the power of the United States has strengthened and every year has added to the prestige which surrounds her star-spangled banner.

When France brought from beyond the seas the co-operation of her army and navy to this valiant people engaged in the war for independence, when Lafayette, Rochambeau, DeGrasse, and many other scions of our illustrious families, came here, they yielded to a generous impulse, and came with disinterested courage to sustain the cause of liberty. A blessing went with their endeavors and gave success to their arms, for when 100 years ago, as to-day, French and Americans grasped each others' hands at Yorktown, they realized they had helped to erect the corner-stone of a great edifice. But surely the most foresighted among those men would have started had he been able to look down the long vista of a century and see at the end this republic, then young and struggling with all the difficulties which surrounded her, now calm, radiant and beaming with the halo of prosperity. The great Washington himself, whose genius foresaw the destiny of this country, could not have predicted this. Truly the United States have made, especially in these latter years, gigantic strides along the route to still greater progress, by showing the world what can be accomplished by an energetic and intelligent nation, always as respectful of its duties as jealous of its rights. America has given a great example, and has been the cause of rejoicing to all true lovers of liberty. France is proud of having contributed to found this great republic and her wishes for your prosperity are deep and sincere. Mutual friendship is founded on many affinities, tastes and aspirations, which time cannot destroy, and future generations, I trust, will assist again in this same place at a spectacle unprecedented in the history of two great nations; renewing, from century to century, compact fraternal and imperishable affection.

I will not close without thanking the Federal Government, the different States of the Union of which the delegation have been the guests, also the people of America, for the sympathy and welcome extended to the representatives of France. Each of us will treasure the recollection of American hospitality and friendly sentiments which have been manifested to us in every place and every sphere.

Marquis de Rochambeau made a graceful response in French. He said: "Citizens of the United States, you have invited us to celebrate with you the great achievement of arms, and we have not hesitated to brave the terrors of the ocean to say to you that what our fathers did in 1781 we, their sons, would be willing to do to-day, and to attest our constant friendship, and further show that we cherish the same sentiments of our fathers in those glorious days we celebrate. In the name of my companions, who represent here the men who fought, permit me to hope that the attachment formed in those days around this monument which is to be erected, will be renewed to peace and will again celebrate a victory which joined our fathers in comradeship and alliance."

Baron Steuben then responded in German in an appropriate speech, which was loudly applauded.

There were vociferous cheers for the distinguished guests of the nation.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies at the monument there was a reception by President Arthur in Lafayette Hall, to which the general public was admitted.

The following order was read by Secretary Blaine at the celebration to-day:

"In recognition of the friendly relations so long and so happily subsisting between Great Britain and the United States, in the trust and confidence of peace and good-will between the two countries for all centuries to come, and especially as the mark of the profound respect entertained by the American people for the illustrious sovereign and gracious lady who sits upon the British throne, it is hereby ordered that at the close of these ceremonies, commemorative of the valor and success of our forefathers in their patriotic struggle for independence, the British flag shall be saluted by the forces of the army and navy of the United States now at Yorktown. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will give orders accordingly.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

By the President:

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

YORKTOWN, Oct. 21.

The great event of yesterday, the military review, was successfully carried out. All the organizations presented a fine appearance and marched well. The route was about four miles over broad fields. One hour and twenty minutes were consumed in passing a given point. When the procession reached the grand stand Gen. Hancock and staff rode at the head, but then fell out of line, and, with President Arthur, his Cabinet, foreign guests and other dignitaries, reviewed the troops from the stand. Gen. Hancock stated to the President there were 9,500 men in line. The States represented by volunteers were Georgia, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maryland, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Virginia, New York, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Vermont, Kentucky, Michigan and Connecticut.

The President was quite enthusiastic over the magnificence of the display. The only colored troops in line were two companies from Richmond, composing part of the First Virginia regiment. They were loudly cheered by the spectators from the North.

On the grand stand, to which admission was obtained only by ticket from Gen. Hancock's quarters, beside the President of the United States and members of his Cabinet, Senators, Representatives, Governors of States, Gen. Sherman and staff, the French and German delegations, were a large number of other distinguished men as well as many ladies.

The marching of the troops generally was very fine and excited great interest among military men, and elicited loud cheers from the multitude. Gen. Hancock and Gen. Fitzhugh Lee were both loudly cheered wherever they appeared, as a tribute to "the Blue and the Gray," and recognition of the fact that both are now marching under the common flag of a common country. The men of Kentucky and Michigan were loudly cheered, as were also the First Connecticut, the Georgia battalion, which has with them two of the guns captured from the British at Yorktown 100 years ago, and the regulars that marched from their several stations North to Yorktown.

The State troops vied with each other in drill and discipline, and the friends of each claim the palm. The regulars excited general admiration.

Fully 10,000 troops were present during these exercises.

In the afternoon Gen. Hancock gave a reception on board the steamer St. John. Among the guests were President Arthur, David Davis, President pro tem. of the Senate; the French and German visitors, officers of the army and navy, Congressional Commission, Governors and other officers of States.

The commission cut off one day from the programme, and the much-looked-for naval engagement took place in the afternoon, and was witnessed by immense crowds from the bluffs. The large barges and steamboats crowded with people, the naval vessels covered with bunting, the yachts, tugs, sail and row boats with streamers, the music from the bands and the firing of the salutes combined to make the scene long to be remembered.

The Way to Health.

The only true way to health is that which common sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason. Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excesses in anything, and preserve a conscience "void of offense." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear out their lives by indolence, and some by over-exertion; others are killed by the doctors, while not a few sink into the grave from the effects of vicious and beastly practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a farthing to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world can not save him from a premature grave. With a suicidal course of conduct, he is planting the seed of decay in his own constitution and accelerating the destruction of his own life.—Scientific American.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1881.

FROM all parts of the country encouraging reports are heard in relation to the success of the fall fairs. The chief reason is, of course, universal good prospects among farmers and an era of high prices for all varieties of farm products. At no time within twenty years has there been so many entries, and the liberal premiums offered throughout the country have drawn out a class of exhibitors who had become indifferent to the result of competition.

THE statistics of the railway accidents in England for the year seem to be as fixed a quantity as the number of letters which are posted without addresses. The total number killed last year was 1,136, and the number of injured 3,958. Of these 143 persons killed and 1,613 persons injured were passengers. The remainder were employes of the companies, and 447 killed and 365 injured were trespassers, suicides and other persons. The number of persons who traveled as railway passengers last year, exclusive of season-ticket holders, was nearly 604,000,000, being an increase of 41,000,000 over the number who traveled in the year before, showing that of 4,250,000 persons who travel one is killed, and more than one in every 500,000 is injured.

ACCORDING to the rule heretofore governing it, that fatal epidemic, the Asiatic cholera, will be due in America in 1883. It is raging with virulence now upon Russian and Austrian territory. The facilities for transfer are now greater than in former years, and there is a possibility, and even probability, of its reaching our shores a year earlier than its usual seventeen-year period. It first visited this country in 1832, again in 1849, and a third time in 1866. The authorities of every city in the land, working with the National Board of Health, should spare no effort, not only to ward it off, but to place every locality in the best sanitary condition. The food of a cholera epidemic is well known, and its advent should not inaugurate a panic, and would not if the proper precautions were made to meet the enemy.

ASTRONOMERS are on the lookout for a mysterious star known as "the Pilgrim," the light of which comes within the range of earthly observation only at intervals of about 309 years. At the last appearance of this star, which happened in the year 1572, it was brighter than Jupiter. "Such was its brilliancy," wrote a chronicler of the time, "that persons were able to detect it at noon in a clear sky, and at night when the sky was so overcast as to hide all the other stars." The Scientific American is authority for the statement that, if "the Pilgrim" appears, it will probably be visible for several weeks in the constellation of Cassiopeia. This constellation is situated in the northern portion of the heavens, on the opposite side of the pole from the Great Bear. The latter constellation, probably the best known of all, is the one which contains the familiar "Dipper."

LIEUT. D. A. LYLE has eaten grasshoppers out West, and he lately read a paper before a Springfield science association, praising them as food. Although they naturally have a disagreeable smell, he says that when cooked they become pleasant to both smell and taste, no disguise being required. They can be eaten after boiling two hours, with pepper and salt, and thus prepared are not easily distinguished from beef broth. Fried in their own oil they have a nutty flavor. One drawback to their use as food is the bones in the small locusts, though in the larger ones these can be easily removed. Some residents of St. Louis have tried a dinner of these skillfully prepared, and liked it very well, and, after becoming accustomed to the flavor, they are considered a desirable addition to the bill of fare by some. These locusts feed on vegetable matter and so may properly be classed as clean food.

THE following pathetic speech of the late President Garfield was delivered on the occasion of the college-class reunion in his honor on the night of March 3 last—the night before his inauguration:

CLASSMATES: To me there is something exceedingly pathetic in this reunion. In every eye before me I see the light of friendship and love, and I am sure it is reflected to each one of you from my inmost heart. For twenty-two years, with the exception of the last few days, I have been in public service. To-night I am a private citizen. To-morrow I shall be called to new responsibilities, and on the day after the world's wrath will strike. It will strike hard. I know it, and you will know it. Whatever may happen to me in the future I shall feel that I can fall back upon the shoulders and hearts of the class of '56 for their approval of that which is right, and for their charitable judgment wherein I may come short in the discharge of my public duties. You may write down in your books now the largest percentage of blunders which you think I shall be likely to make, and you will be sure to find in the end that I have made more than you have calculated—many more. This honor comes to me unsought. I never had the Presidential fever—not even for a day; nor have I it to-night. I have no feeling of elation in view of the position I am called upon to fill. I would thank God were I to-day a free lance in the House or in the Senate. But it is not to be, and I will go forward to meet the responsibilities and discharge the duties that are before me with all the firmness and ability I can command. I hope you will be able conscientiously to approve my conduct, and, when I return to private life, I wish you to give me another class-meeting.

THERE is a misapprehension in the minds of the journalists touching the Presidential succession in the event of the death of Arthur, says the Chicago Times. It is supposed that the President of the Senate pro tem. would serve out the full Garfield term. The matter is regulated by the law of 1792. The President of the Senate succeeds only until a President of the United States is elected. The provisions for such election are as follows:

SEC. 147. Whenever the offices of President and Vice President, both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the Executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State.

SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States, as follows:

First—If there shall be the space of two months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, such notification shal specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding such first Wednesday in December.

Second—If there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and such first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in the year next ensuing; but if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office will expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.

SEC. 149. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notification prescribed by the preceding section shall meet and give their votes on the first Wednesday of December specified in the notification.

GUITEAU, THE ASSASSIN.

Arraigned in Court, He Enters a Plea of Not Guilty—The Trial Fixed for Nov. 7.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.

Charles J. Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield, was arraigned yesterday in the Criminal Court of this District, Judge Cox presiding. The court room was full, but there was no disorder. Mr. Scoville, counsel for the prisoner, entered and took his seat at the lawyers' table, and immediately afterward the door of the witnesses' room opened and gave entrance to Marshal Henry and two Deputy Marshals, having between them and hustling along the bowed and cowering figure of a man, for whom they made way to a seat reserved for him beside his counsel. Then one of the guards unlocked the handcuffs, giving the prisoner the use of his hands. Guiteau looked broken down in health, and uncared for in person. His dark clothes were rusty and shabby and his whole person presented a miserably neglected appearance. After the excitement attending his entrance had subsided, District Attorney Corkhill rose, and, addressing the Judge, said: "The Grand Jury of the District of Columbia has indicted Charles J. Guiteau for the murder of James A. Garfield. The prisoner is in court. I ask that he be arraigned and required to plead to the indictment." The prisoner was ordered to stand up, and in a languid manner obeyed. The Clerk said: "Is your name Charles J. Guiteau?" The prisoner assented by a nod. The Clerk then proceeded to read the indictment, the prisoner standing up with his head most of the time inclined to the right shoulder, his eyes half-closed or wholly so, his hands crossed as if still handcuffed, and his general air that of sickly indifference. The reading occupied nearly half an hour, and during all that time Guiteau hardly once changed his attitude or bearing, and rarely opened his eyes. He did not manifest the slightest degree of interest in the scene in which he was the chief actor, and but for an occasional slight movement might be supposed to be asleep in a standing attitude. Upon the conclusion of the reading of the indictment the Clerk, addressing the prisoner, said: "What say you to this indictment, guilty or not guilty?" The prisoner, in place of response, fumbled in his waistcoat pocket and drew out a soiled and crumpled scrap of paper.

District Attorney (imperatively)—"Enter your plea of guilty or not guilty."

The prisoner—"I enter the plea of not guilty, if your Honor please, and I desire to make a statement."

The Court—"At some other time. It would not be appropriate just now. Sit down."

The prisoner thereupon took his seat.

The District Attorney—"In this case I ask that trial be set for next Monday morning peremptorily. The Government is ready for trial now."

Mr. Scoville here presented an affidavit of the assassin and one made by himself, in regard to the necessity of witnesses, the latter document announcing that the defense will claim the insanity of the defendant and insist that the bullet wound was not necessarily mortal. The court is asked to sanction the summoning of various witnesses as to insanity, and of four medical experts as to the President's surgical treatment.

Judge Cox fixed the trial for Nov. 7, and intimated that assistant counsel might be assigned from the Washington bar.

When the hearing concluded the officers gathered about Guiteau and securely fastened his handcuffs, and the prisoner was taken from the court-room.

While Guiteau was in court a large-sized man, who afterward gave his name as George H. Bethar, approached one of the court officers and asked for the loan of a pistol. His inquiries aroused suspicion, and he was taken to the police headquarters. He there said he wanted the pistol to kill Guiteau. Bethar said he fought in Gen. Garfield's regiment, and showed wounds in his legs and on the side of his head.

Mrs. Lewis has now broken up housekeeping, and will reside with her son till things assume another shape. The affair is dark.

FOR the inhuman treatment of a stepson, about 12 years of age, George Laforce was tried in the Circuit Court, at Bedford, and fined $10. The indictment shows that Laforce had tied the little fellow to a stall or post in the stable, where he remained all day without any water or food, until he was released by some one whose attention was attracted by his cries for help.

A BITTER personal controversy has been conducted for some time between the editors of the Sun and the Republican, at Mount Vernon, which culminated in the revival of an old scandal regarding Mrs. Barter wife of the Sun man. The other morning she met C. F. Wertz, editor of the Republican, on the street, and shot at him, but his timely flight and her bad aim saved a tragedy.

A YOUNG man applying for admission to Purdue College, Lafayette, Ind., was refused admission on the ground that he objected to subscribe to the regulations of the officers, who will not tolerate secret societies. He applied for a mandamus for the President and faculty, requiring them to show cause, etc. This will be a precedent in cases of literary institutions legislating against secret societies.

Richardson, of Indianapolis, for a broom; Elijah Bunch, of Richmond, for a spring-bed bottom; Moses Crawford, of Indianapolis, for a hog-scraping machine; D. A. Foster, of Green's Fork, for a vehicle-wheel; George W. French, assignor of one-half to J. R. Brown, of Frankfort, for a buckle; William W. THE celebrated Muncie school case, entitled Garrett D. Leech vs. the State ex rel. Harry R. Wysor, was recently decided by the Supreme Court, Judge Worden writing the opinion, which reverses the verdict of the lower courts. The opinion is very lengthy, and discusses thoroughly all the points in the case. The record shows that one McClintock was trustee of the schools of the city of Muncie. On the 1st day of March he sent his resignation to the City Council, to take effect March 5. The day the Council received the resignation it accepted it, and elected Garrett D. Leech to fill the vacancy. Leech immediately entered upon the discharge of his duties, and has served until the present. Fifteen months after Leech's election the Council held a second election to fill a vacancy which they supposed existed from McClintock's resignation, and elected Wysor to the same office they had formerly given to Leech. This suit is a quo warranto on relation of Wysor against Leech for possession of the office. The Supreme Court holds that the election of Leech is valid, and that he is entitled to the office.

IN the suit of Thomas Hopper against the town of Covington, Judge Gresham, of the Federal Court, decided that municipal corporations cannot issue bonds without special legislation. This ruling was made on a demurrer to a complaint in the suit of Thomas Hopper vs. The Town of Covington, the plaintiff seeking to recover the value of interest coupons detached from certain bonds issued by said town. These coupons are in the ordinary form, and contain no recital of the circumstances under which the bonds were issued. In holding as above, the court explained that municipal corporations are created for local, governmental and administrative, but not for business, purposes; and they cannot issue bonds or other commercial securities without legislative authority, either expressed or clearly implied, and then only for the purposes as provided by law. Municipal bonds not issued in pursuance of expressed legislative authority, and for the purposes prescribed, possess none of the qualities of commercial paper. Bonds which contain no recitals are not commercial paper, and holders are bound to know, if they do not contain recitals; that they are issued under express legislative authority. This decision will affect a number of towns throughout the State.

Frontier Criticism.

The editor of a mining camp newspaper went to Denver to hear Emma Abbott sing, and in a lengthy review of the opera, says: "As a singer she can just wallop the hose off anything that ever wagged a jaw on the boards. From her clear, bird-like upper notes she would counter away down on the bass racket and then cushion back to a sort off piritnal treble which made every man in the audience imagine every hair on his head was the golden string of a celestial harp over which angelic fingers were sweeping in the inspiring old tune of 'Sally put the kettle on.' Here she would rest awhile, trilling like an enchanted bird, and then hop in among the upper notes again with a git-up-and git vivacity that jingled the glass pendants on the chandeliers and elicited a whoop of pleasure from every galoot in the mob. In the last act she made a neat play and worked in that famous kiss of hers on Caste. He had her in his arms, with her head lying on his shoulder and her eyes shooting red-hot streakes of galvanized love right into his. All at once her lips began to twitch coaxingly and get into position, and when he tumbled to her racket he drew her up easy like, shut his eyes, and then her ripe, luscious lips glued themselves to his and a thrill of pleasure nabbed hold of him and shook him to till the audience could almost hear his toe nails grind against his boots. Then she shut her eyes and pushed harder and—oh, Moley Hoses!—the 'smack' that followed the stitching in every masculine heart in the house. She's a thoroughbred right from the start, and the fellow that takes in her kisses is more to be envied than the haughtiest monarch that ever squatted down on a gold-plated throne."

English Speaking Men.

At the present time this race numbers rising 100,000,000. Outside of the Chinese they are the largest body of men speaking a common language. They rule in all the continents. Two continents—that of North America and the island continent of Australia—are absolutely dominated by them. They are in possession of the southern part of Africa. They own groups of islands and strategic positions in all parts of the globe. Two hundred millions are subject to them in India.—San Francisco Bulletin.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

THE rumor of the death of the Czar, turns out to be false.

IT is rumored that Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, will be made attorney general.

GEN. THOS. M. BROWNE, of Winchester, Indiana, has been seriously ill for a short time.

GEN. FRED. KNEFLER, of Indianapolis, has recently been divorced from his wife, with whom he has lived since 1859.

THE New York forgeries on Huestis & Hamilton are said to be so well executed as to deceive the members of the firm themselves.

EDWIN D. MORGAN, ex-governor of New York, has been offered the appointment of secretary of the treasury by President Arthur, but has declined.

MR. JERNEGAN, who has so long presided over the Michigan City Enterprise, has retired from his editorial labors. He was succeeded by Mr. Lew. Merril.

MR. CONKLING'S chances for a place in the cabinet are improving. It is believed, however, that he will wait until popular prejudice against him has partly cooled down.

THE assistant secretary of the treasury says that the demand for subsidiary silver coin has been greater for a short time past than ever before. This he thinks is mainly owing to the scarcity of small bills.

A GLASS manufacturing firm in Pittsburgh advocates the making of bricks for building purposes out of glass. It is more lasting than brick, and will stand greater pressure. They claim that under the improved process of the present time, they can soon be made as cheap as bricks.

PROF. KLEIN, a Louisville astronomer, writes the Courier-Journal that for many weeks he has been watching a strange double comet, which is attended by nine smaller comets or cometary fractions. He believes it to be the comet of 1811 and 1845, the latter of which was thought to have been destroyed.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR ordered the military and naval forces of the United States at Yorktown to salute the British flag at the close of the celebration last week. This was done to the gratification of the British representatives there, and, though they represented the party that was so signally defeated there one hundred years ago, they seemed to enjoy the occasion nearly as well as the others.

SINCE the arrest of Parnell, there has been the most intense excitement all over Ireland and among the Irish residents of other parts of Great Britain. The general tone of the resolutions adopted at mass meetings, is in favor of paying no more rents until Parnell is released. Several other agitators have been arrested and lodged in jail. Riots have occurred at different points, but no serious outbreaks so far.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT SHINABERGER, of Porter county, has been removed from office by the commissioners of that county for acts of gross immorality. The township trustees were convened to elect a successor, but Mr. Shinaberger appealed the case to the circuit court, and got out a restraining order, enjoining the trustees from electing a successor, and thus is master of the situation for the present.

WE have received the first number of a new democratic magazine, published in the city of Washington. It is called the American Register, and while it will be a fair and impartial chronicler of all passing events, will make it an aim to advocate and teach the principles of the democratic party. If there is a place in the country where democratic principles and teachings are needed to stay the current of political corruption, that place is Washington, and hence we hope the new paper may be a success.

THE report of Assistant Postmaster General Tyner, in regard to the star route frauds, has just been published. It is dated August 5, 1879, and contains a pretty thorough exposure of the whole business. This, if acted on at the time it was written, would have saved the country vast sums of money and an abundance of disgrace. But Tyner claims that he suppressed it at the direction of Postmaster General Key, and it has remained in obscurity, and he in silence till now. He claims that the president, in asking him to resign, is acting under the supposition that this valuable document was suppressed by Tyner himself, and that such a course was an act of bad faith, and had for its purpose the covering up of frauds which Tyner knew existed. If Tyner's statement is correct, then Key is the one who ought to have been punished. But just at present it is difficult to say which version is the correct one.

WE take from the Indianapolis Sentinel, the following facts in regard to the recent immigration from foreign countries. The present troubles in Ireland will, no doubt, add materially to our foreign population next year, making the increase even greater than it has been this year. The Sentinel says: "The tide of immigration from the old world to the United States continues at the flood, showing a continuous increase over former years. A circular from the Bureau of Statistics, dated October 18, 1881, gives the following summary: During the month of September, there arrived in the custom districts of Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, Huron, Minnesota, New Orleans, New York, Passamaquoddy, Philadelphia and San Francisco, 69,924 passengers, of whom 58,452 were immigrants, 8,380 citizens of the United States returned from abroad, and 3,092 aliens not intending to remain in the United States. Of this total number of immigrants, there arrived from England and Wales, 8,997; Ireland, 5,633; Scotland, 1,974; Austria, 1,043; Belgium, 241; Denmark, 460; France, 613; Germany, 19,608; Hungary, 490; Italy, 1,162; Netherlands, 548; Norway, 1,953; Poland, 195; Russia, 795; Sweden, 3,703; Switzerland, 866; Dominion of Canada, 8,710; China, 976; and from all other countries, 488."

THE PRESS last week went some distance out of its way to make a small personal attack on the editor of the COURIER. He asserts that we were dissatisfied because the agricultural society did not make us its secretary. It is charitable to suppose that Brother Baxter is not so ignorant of what is done under his very nose, and hence is aware we have never asked a vote from any member of the society, for any purpose. He must also know, that when the secretary resigned in June, the place was offered to us, and its acceptance urged, but we declined. In view of these well known facts, it is a little strange what motive could have induced the editor of the "oldest and best" to drag his paper out of the legitimate channels of journalism into the misty relms of personal fiction. Neither are we so vain as to believe the public cares a straw about the matter. We therefore suggest that at the present, when all respectable newspapers are scraping off the moss of personal journalism, would be a fitting time for the Press to follow their example. At all events, if a paper must be filled up with personalities, let it show a little less of the fatty degeneration of its editor's moral perceptions.

THE French and German guests who attended the Yorktown centennial, at the invitation of our government, were chiefly the descendants of those who assisted us in the Revolutionary War. But they could not, even on this peaceful occasion, forget the ill feelings engendered between the two countries by the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. On several occasions, this ill feeling was shown in a way that was more pointed than dignified. This was especially the case on the return of their steamer to Washington, and while waiting to land, some of the Germans threw some small coins to the negroes on the wharf, and into the water, to see the boys dive for them. The French at once began to throw larger pieces, and then each tried to out do the other. Gold pieces and bills were tossed into the water until the thing became so ridiculous that the contestants were ashamed of themselves, and stopped the expensive sport.

WE take the following from one of our exchanges: "A San Francisco paper states that Mr. M. L. Hallenbeck, the revivalist, who will be remembered as having conducted a successful gospel temperance revival here a few years ago, has been making a most vigorous raid on sin and the sinners at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. It is said that almost the whole population in Honolulu, from the Princess Regent down to the most degraded of the Kanakas, has been deeply moved. They have thronged the gospel meetings, and great numbers of all classes have been converted. The old missionary influence seemed to have been largely lost, but a revolution was in progress. As many as 300 persons have risen for prayer on a single night. Petitions and songs of Zion were heard on every side. The Princess Regent wept for joy over the reformation already accomplished."

THE Columbia City papers complain of the indifference with which their citizens treated Gen. W. H. Gibson at the soldier's reunion in that place. No one met him at the depot to escort him to the hotel, but, like any other traveler, he found his way there as best he could. It was the same when he again took the train on his way home. But for Col. I. B. McDonald, he would have been obliged to go to the train through the darkness alone. His address is spoken of as a fine one, and the apathy of the citizens, as shown by their shabby treatment, seems all the more strange in view of this fact. It was evident that he felt somewhat chagrined at the coolness of his reception.

Waterloo.

F. P. Day is on the sick list.

Frank Less has been stopping in town a few days. He expects to have a situation with the well-known Townsend troupe.

Mrs. S. B. Johnson and her daughter, Mrs. F. P. Day, returned Tuesday evening from their protracted visit to Ohio. Doc. and Frank are happy again.

The Townsend troupe performed in Haines' hall Tuesday night, part of the proceeds going to the band. Of course the boys furnished good music.

J. U. Miller, of the Steuben Republican, took a trip to Fort Wayne Tuesday, and stopped an hour in Waterloo. That is, the train stopped that long.

One of the extra trains going south Sunday night, killed two horses on the grade, near E. R. Shoemaker's farm. We have not yet learned who the owners are.

Mrs. Yant, the well-known and popular milliner, was married in Auburn Monday. The fortunate man was Mr. Wm. M. Nash. We congratulate him on his choice.

General Blair tried to go to Angola Monday, on the morning freight, but as it proved to be an afternoon freight that day, he postponed his trip to a more convenient season.

Doc. Fisher has a position as night operator at Corunna, while Com. Urie is day operator, and "Mollie" Imus goes to Butler as night operator there. That's right; give the boys a chance.

Waldo Hills spent Sunday in town. He now owns and controls the business in which he has been so long engaged. Mr. H. is a gentlemanly business man, and in no way like the ordinary lightning rod agent.

Mrs. Dr. Darby returned from Oberlin, Sunday morning, on train No. 5. She has been at that place for some time, in order to be with her boys who were attending school there. The boys remain there at present.

Samuel Milliman and Mrs. Marsh were married Saturday night. O. P. Smith officiated. Mr. Smith is becoming quite popular as a matrimonial joiner, but it don't seem to interfere with his excellence as a shoemaker.

Haines' hall has been used as a skating rink for several days. The young folks have lots of fun in learning the new step, and in watching one another tumble. The managers of the affair are evidently doing a thriving business.

Sadie Johnson was married to Dr. Hosack, of Fredericktown, Ohio, Tuesday, and went on her wedding trip. She will return for a few days before settling down in her future home. Sadie will leave a host of friends here, endeared to her by a long residence and her many good qualities. Her business relations have been pleasant and successful, and her absence will be regretted by all.

Last Sunday night there was an odd case of railroad accident on the bridge north of the crossing. Mr. Shackford, the Jackson agent at Auburn Junction, was coming south on the railroad velocipede, that is used by the track-master. He came on the down grade, at a brisk rate, and when just on the bridge, met a hand car, on which were some men going north, to attend meeting at Summit. It was dark, and neither could see the other, and they met on the bridge, full tilt. In less than a twinkling, Shackford found himself among the stringers of the bridge, with the splinters of his wrecked car on top of him. He was sifted out, and found to be but little hurt, although the risk was a fearful one. The bridge is a high one, and had he fallen through the ties, he would have run a great chance of being killed by the fall alone. The men on the hand car were uninjured, although considerably frightened. The escape of both parties is, under the circumstances, rather remarkable.

There are two families in town who occupy adjoining lots with a plain, light board fence between the two residences. This fence is of itself no great affair, but it plays an important part in the affairs of others. A board is knocked off the fence, so the people can pass back and forth, and right here is where the joke comes in, as well as the neighborly visits. In the morning, neighbor A. gets mad at neighbor B., or the reverse. After a little sparring, out comes the family hatchet, and whack, whack, the board is nailed up, and all further communication stopped until afternoon. By that time, the softening influences of meditation have toned down the morning's passions, and the family hatchet again comes to the front; the board is knocked off, and friendly relations once more resumed. The next day the same programme is gone through with, except, that one day it is neighbor B's. hatchet, and the next day neighbor A's. hammer that closes the thoroughfare between the two houses. All that is lacking to complete the happiness of the two families, is something that will operate to close the fence without the trouble of banging so much with the hammer. The neighbors suggest a patent thermometer gate, that will close itself when the passions of the contestants have become so hot as to expand the mercury. This will not only make quarreling convenient, but make it much easier on the hatchet.

Our Neighbors.

We learn from the Garrett Herald that it rained sometime ago. Fact.

Col. I. B. McDonald has assumed editorial control of the Churubusco Herald.

Bro. Powell, of the Garrett Herald, threatens to issue two papers this week. Look out.

The Porter county Vidette has been moved into a new and more commodious office on the first floor.

Rev. A. J. Douglas, who has been so long county superintendent of Whitley county, has resigned his position, and will remove to Florance, Ky., where he will become the pastor of a church. Mr. Douglas has held the position of superintendent longer than any other man in the state. The trustees met this week, on Monday to elect a man to fill the vacancy.

HEAVY FREIGHTS.—Agent Geo. W. Loughman, of the Lake Shore railroad, says that he recently kept count for ninety days of the number of cars received by the Studebaker Bros. manufacturing company, and that the number received during that time was even 900, averaging ten a day. The amount of freight to each car would average 30,000 pounds, making for the ninety days a total amount received by this road of 27,000,000 pounds.—[South Bend Register.

The election of mayor in Kokomo, on Wednesday of last week, resulted in the selection of Scott Armstrong, a democratic politician of that city, who seems to have been chosen because of his friendship for the late mayor, and because of his outspoken denunciation of the killing of Cole, which he openly condemned as murder. There were three candidates. If Armstrong will heed our suggestion, he will promptly invest some of his surplus capital in a life insurance policy.—[Wabash Plain Dealer.

The New York and Council Bluffs railway company filed articles of incorporation with the state secretary on Monday. Capital stock, $15,000,000, with Frank B. Hymer, of Terre Haute, and Albert L. Rice, of New York, heading the directory. The main line is designed to cross the state through Allen, Whitley, Wabash, Miami, Fulton, Pulaski, Jasper and Newton, with a branch terminating at Peru, and running through the counties of Adams, Wells, Huntington, Wabash and Miami.—[Fort Wayne News.

We learn from the Crawfordville Journal that about twenty soldiers of Henry county sued the commissioners for unpaid bounty offered as an inducement to volunteers, amounting in each case to $300 The payment was refused on the grounds that it was offered to men who should enlist in the 69th Indiana regiment. The men served in the 84th regiment, but they showed that they were assigned to that regiment by the military authorities without their consent. The case was taken to the supreme court where it has just been decided in favor of the soldiers. —[Ligonier Banner.

The rainy weather has been quite a drawback to the work on the C. W. & M. railway extension, yet the grading is completed to Granger, excepting only through this city. The council at its last meeting added a proviso to the right of way through the city that the railway company be held for all damages arising. The right of way, across the hydraulic has not yet been secured, nor through the Studebaker lands. There are also difficulties at Niles in getting into town. All these matters will undoubtedly be settled shortly, and it is still expected that the road will be completed this fall.—Goshen Times.

TREMBLES.—A new and terrible disease has broken out among cattle in our neighboring counties, and more especially in Adams county. Several farmers near Decatur, have lost heavily by this new disease, and for want of a better name, it is called "Trembles," and as far as we have ascertained they have no remedy for it. As it is liable at any time to make its dreaded appearance in this county, we give the following, in regard to it and its syptoms: They are first seized with a violent trembling in every portion of the body, the hair is turned in the opposite direction from that in which it naturally lies, and stands up like bristles, pointing towards the animal's head. In a short time after the animal becomes afflicted it lies down, and nothing but force can make it get up. They lie around, trembling for quite a while and then with great apparent suffering, die. A farmer, near Decatur, named Berry, lost all of his cattle by this disease, and another named, Cochrane, has lost eleven head, and James Williams and several others have lost from five to twenty-five head each. We give this article to our farmers for perusal, so that if their cattle become afflicted they will know what they are dealing with. —[Bluffton Banner.

—W. H. Becker, the Butler attorney, who wanted to defend Guiteau, left that place for Washington last Saturday. He is determined to make himself notorious at all events. The morning he left, there was found at daylight, an effigy, supposed to be Becker hanging to the liberty pole. It was cut down by Mr. Oscar Young, and on Monday morning the effigy was again there, and pinned to it, a note reflecting on Mr. Young for cutting the other one down. It is but fair to state that the better part of the people sustain Mr. Young in the act which relieved the town of the scare-crow, and no one can blame him for so doing. If Becker insists on making a fool of himself, he takes his own chances, but this hanging in effigy is always a questionable business, and apt to bring trouble among the more respectable portion of the people who had nothing to do with it.

Married.—At the residence of the bride's parents in Waterloo, Oct. 25, 1881, Mr. Cyrus Hosack, of Fredericktown, Ohio, to Miss Sadie A. Johnson, of Waterloo. Rev. W. F. Matthews, of Auburn, was the officiating clergyman. The wedding was a quiet one, only the immediate relatives being witnesses of the happy event. The newly married pair took the afternoon train east, for a wedding trip, and shortly after their return, will make their future home near the early home of the bride, at Fredericktown. The happy couple did not forget to share with the printers, in the wedding feast, and we hereby tender our thanks for a bounteous supply of nice cake.

—The commissioners sale of the Mader estate last Saturday, was well attended. The total amount of the sales were $3,985.00. Mrs. Mamstaffer bought 40 acres, Albert Robbins, 4 acres; G. A. Mader, 15.81 acres; J. J. VanAuken, 10.29 acres; C. A. Mead, 10.23 acres and Geo. W. Husselman, 2.20 acres. Mr. Dills was the commissioner and acted as auctioneer himself.

—We are pleased to chronicle the fact that our former job printer, A. J. Little jr., who is now employed in the Toledo Telegram office, is well pleased with his situation, and is doing well. We shall always have a warm spot for Jack. He is one of the best and most reliable young men we have ever known.

Death's Door.

AJAR FOR MISS HATTIE SUTTON, BUT KINDLY CLOSED BY SYMPATHISING FRIENDS.

Monday evening our usually staid and quiet town was thrown into quite a state of excitement by the attempted suicide of Miss Hattie Sutton, a young lady, who, it seems, belongs to Jackson, Michigan. She came here on Saturday after the Waterloo fair, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Slater, the people who ran the photograph gallery in the fair grounds. They obtained board at Mr. Helm's boarding-house, but on the following Monday the Slaters took their departure, while Miss Sutton and a young man named Charley Murray remained at Helm's. Things apparently remained in this condition until Monday evening of this week. On that day, while at supper, Miss Sutton remarked to the other boarders: "I wonder if I will be in heaven by this time to-morrow?" This remark, and others of a similar character, were not much noticed at the time, but, in view of the subsequent events, tend to throw some light on the matter. Just after dark she was sitting in the parlor with Murray and one of the Helm girls, and while talking with them, remarked to Murray that he had better go down town awhile. This he did, and after he left, Miss Sutton suggested to Miss Helm that she (Miss Helm) ought to go and eat her supper. Accordingly Miss Helm went into the dining-room, leaving Miss Sutton alone. On her return, it was found that Miss Sutton was acting very strangely, and means were taken to ascertain what was the matter. It soon became apparent that Miss S. had taken poison, and if not relieved, would soon die. This theory was confirmed by the discovery of a piece of paper, on which she had hurridly written a part of a statement which plainly showed she had determined to take her life. The greatest excitement prevailed for a short time. Medical assistance was summoned, and by the most strenuous efforts, she was brought back to a state of consciousness. The poison proved to be morphine, although it appears that the unfortunate girl supposed she was taking chloroform. The following is the note the girl had written, and which was found on the stand near her:

October the Kind Friends:—Most dear —— look down upon me as you choose. I have got more than my heart can hold. I tried to overlook all, but some I can't. Send me home to those most dear, at Jackson, Michigan. It is chloroform that has done the deed.

This note was picked up and preserved in the hope that it might throw some light on the unfortunate girl's motives for her suicidal attempt.

Everything has been done for her that could be done, and at present she is doing well, and considered out of danger.

Butler.

During our visit to our sister town last week, we were pleased to note so many evidences of prosperity. Not only are the railroads there creating a boom, but the people of the town all seem alive to its interests. New buildings, especially dwellings, have sprung up in several parts of the town, especially in that part west of the village, and north of the Lake Shore road. Business seems to be lively, and every one hopeful. Our business brought us into direct contact with W. L. Blair, the efficient school officer of the town. In company with him, we inspected their school-house and the school grounds, and we must say that the changes Mr. Blair has instituted, make that one of the most convenient and tasty buildings in the county. The high school room especially, is the most appropriately and elegantly finished school-room we have seen for some time. In all the changes made, the comfort and convenience of both teacher and pupils have been studied, and no pains spared to make everything pleasant and convenient. In all this, he is ably seconded by Mr. O. Z. Hubbell, the principal of the school, and an able corps of teachers. Mr. Hubbell is making a decided success as a teacher and superintendent. He has introduced many new and valuable features, that will greatly enhance the value of the work he is doing. We met here, our old-time friend, John Wycoff, who is assisting the principal during the present term. Of course he is doing good work, as usual. We were also pleased to meet Miss Kester, who is succeeding finely in her department. We did not meet the other teachers—Miss Jennie Batzer, Miss Josie Thomas and Mr. Ash—but learn that their labors are highly appreciated. Among the other teachers, whose familiar faces greeted us there, were Misses Mattie and Florence Jackman, Miss Kate Barber, Miss Hattie Wise, Miss Zella McCurdy, Miss Ellie Bryant, Miss Ida Swartz, Mr. C. J. Maxwell and J. H. Zeis.

County Institute.

The county teacher's institute, will be held in Auburn, the week commencing November 7, 1881. All the teachers of the county are invited to be present and assist to make this one of the most successful and useful institutes we have ever had. State Superintendent Bloss will be present on Thursday, and other able instructors will be with us.

A Howl from the Scalpers.

Sunday News, Toledo,
Oct. 16, 1881.

The following item appeared in the daily papers of this city last Thursday:

"There are now in the offices of the different scalpers in the cities between Chicago, St. Louis and Boston, a large number of counterfeit tickets of the different railways east and west, and in order to protect their business, the different railway companies have found it necessary to issue instructions to conductors not to receive for passage any tickets that have passed through the hands of scalpers. Therefore we present these facts to the public, cautioning all against purchasing tickets of any kind from offices not publicly known and recognized as regular ticket offices of the companies over which transportation is desired."

We have given this matter a little investigation, and as a result of the same are prepared to state that a large number of counterfeit tickets have been put upon the public, that these tickets came through the hands of scalpers, and that the proof is overwhelming that certain scalpers are in league with the counterfeiters. We do not say, nor even hint, that all scalpers are in this nefarious business, but we consider ticket scalping a profession that does not place a man above suspicion. That the trusting public are imposed upon by scalpers cannot be denied. The victims usually are strangers, often emigrants. We know whereof we write, for we have been victimized ourselves by the professional scalper. We have no criticism to offer on whatever defense these gentlemen see fit to make, if they feel that the eyes of the public are directed to them; but when they claim that there are no bogus tickets afloat, and that some one is endeavoring to injure them, and that conductors have not been instructed to refuse certain tickets, they make a great mistake, and when they try to make a defense for the whole scalping fraternity, to make use of a homely expression, they 'bite off more than they can chew.'

Kahoka, Mo., Feb. 9, 1880.—I purchased five bottles of your Hop Bitters of Bishop & Co. last fall, for my daughter, and am well pleased with the Bitters. They did her more good than all the medicine she has taken for six years.

THE BABY'S PICTURE.

"We must carry our beautiful baby to town,
Some day when the weather is fair," we said;
"We must dress him up in his prettiest gown
And wave his hair on the top of his head;
For all his cousins and all his aunts,
And both his grandmothers proud and dear,
Declare it is shameful and every way blameful
To have had no picture of him this year."

We carried our child to the town one day,
The skies were soft, and the air was cool,
We robed him richly in fine array—
Ribbons and laces, and Swiss and tulle.
He looked like a Prince in the artist's chair,
Sitting erect, and brave and grand,
With a big red apple he scarce could grapple,
Held close in the palm of one dimpled hand.

"He is taking it now!" We held our breath!
We quietly peeped from behind the screen!
"What a pose!" we whispered, then still as death
Waited—and baby was all serene
Till the critical moment, when, behold,
The sun was catching that lovely look,
Such a terrible roar it shook the floor!
And that was the picture the swift sun took!

OUR DEAD PRESIDENTS.

Brief Record of Their Deaths, and the Scenes at Their Funerals.

[Ben: Perley Poore, in Boston Journal.]

George Washington died at Mount Vernon, of inflammatory quinsy, Dec. 14, 1799. His coffin was of lead, inclosed in a mahogany shell, with ornaments inscribed, "Surge ad judicium" and "Gloria Deo," and a silver plate, on which was engraved: "General George Washington, departed this life on the 14th of December, 1799. Æt. 68." There was an escort composed of cavalry and infantry, with a band of music; next was led the General's horse, with his saddle, bridle and pistols; then came the body, on a bier, with Cols. Simms, Ramsay, Payne, Gilpin, Marsteller and Little as pall-bearers; the Freemasons followed, bearing the greater and the lesser lights, and citizens closed the procession. When the procession moved, minute-guns were fired from a vessel at anchor in the Potomac. On approaching the family vault the cavalry halted, the infantry marched to the door, halted, opened ranks and faced inward; the clergy and the Masonic brothers preceded the remains to the vault and the funeral services were performed. The infantry then fired three volley, and eleven pieces of artillery near by paid the last tribute to the ex-President and General of the army. Washington had directed in his will "that a new family vault should be built at Mount Vernon at the foot of what is called the vineyard inclosure." This request was not complied with until 1831, when a new tomb was erected, of brick, arched, and with a stone panel over the door, inscribed: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." A brick wall, twelve feet high, surrounds the vault, with an iron gate opening in front of the vault door, flanked with pilasters and surmounted by a cornice. Over the gateway is inscribed: "Within this inclosure rest the remains of Gen. George Washington." In 1837 a Philadelphia marble-worker was permitted to furnish a sarcophagus, cut from Pennsylvania marble, with a cover of Italian marble, on which the arms of the United States were cut in relief. The leaden coffin containing the remains of the illustrious hero was placed in this sarcophagus, and the remnants of the mahogany shell were distributed among those present. The body of Martha, the wife of Washington, is incased in another sarcophagus, and they occupy the right and left sides of the entrance to the tomb and are visible through the iron gateway. Congress proposed at one time to have Washington's remains removed to the crypt prepared for them beneath the rotunda of the Capitol, but the Legislature of Virginia protested.

John Adams died at Quincy July 4, 1826, of old age, having lived almost ninety-one years. An immense concourse of people attended his funeral and escorted his remains to their resting place beneath the Unitarian Church. Soon afterward, when the society was about to erect a stone portico to its church, John Quincy Adams received permission to construct a vault beneath it and to erect a monument within the building at the side of the pulpit. The remains of John Adams and his wife were placed in the vault in sarcophagi of stone, and the monument, which bears a long and fulsome inscription, was surmounted with a bust of the deceased President by Horatio Greenough.

Thomas Jefferson died at Monticello, his Virginia homestead, of a complication of diseases attendant upon old age, on the 4th of July, 1826, the same day on which John Adams expired. It was his wish that his interment should be private, and accordingly no public notice was given of the time of his funeral. His body was borne on a bier down the mountain side by his slaves, and followed by his relatives, to the family burial ground, where his wife reposed. On arriving at the grave it was found that a concourse of his neighbors had assembled, although the rain poured in torrents, and the burial service of the Episcopal church was read. A monument was erected in accordance with a drawing found among his papers, with an inscription in which he styled himself "Author of the Declaration of American Independence, the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom and Father of the University of Virginia." His monument was gradually carried away by relic hunters until but little of it remained, and Congress last year made an appropriation to replace it. The marble slab which marked the grave of Mrs. Jefferson has disappeared, and the small burial place has a dilapidated, neglected appearance.

James Madison died at "Montpelier," his rural home, at the base of the Allegheny mountains, 127 miles southwest from Washington, at the advanced age of 87 years, on the 23d of June, 1836. He had a large funeral, and he was interred in a private burial ground on the estate, with naught but tradition to mark the spot. After repeated unsuccessful efforts to raise, by subscription, a sum for the erection of a monument, some gentlemen of Orange county collected $700 in 1837. It was with some difficulty that the exact location of the grave was identified, but in digging for a suitable foundation the coffin was found. It was of black walnut, in perfect preservation, and the interior was nearly filled with a species of moss, amid which were the skull and a few of the larger and harder bones.

James Monroe, Revolutionary soldier, diplomat, Senator, Secretary of State and President, died a poor man, at the house of his son-in-law, Postmaster Gouvenenr, in the city of New York, July 4, 1831, aged 73. There was an imposing funeral, old Gen. Jacob Morton commanding the military escort, and the remains were deposited in a small cemetery in Second street, just below Third avenue, in the vault of Thomas Tillotsen. In 1858 the State of Virginia made an appropriation of $2,000 to defray the expenses of removing the remains of the illustrious Virginian to Hollywood Cemetery, near Richmond, and for the erection of a monument over them. Some of the New York merchants, chartered a steamer, on which the remains were taken to Richmond, escorted by the Seventh regiment, then commanded by Col. Lefferts. The military visitors were received with great hospitality, although the enjoyment of the occasion was marred by the accidental drowning of Private Hamilton, a grandson, if I remember right, of the great financier. The only monument erected over the grave when I was last at Hollywood, two years since, was an iron affair, which resembled a mammoth fly-protector over an exaggerated roll of butter.

John Quincy Adams was stricken with paralysis at his post in the House of Representatives on the 21st of February, 1848, and was tenderly carried into the room of Mr. Speaker Winthrop, where there is now a mural tablet, erected at the instance of Hon. Samuel Hooper, which bears the following inscription, written by Charles Sumner. There is a bust of the illustrious deceased, and beneath it is inscribed: "John Quincy Adams, who, after fifty years of public service, the last sixteen in yonder hall, was summoned hence, to die in this room, 23d February, 1848." Funeral services were performed over the remains of Mr. Adams at the Capitol, and they were then escorted to Quincy by a committee of one Representative from every State and Territory, which was hospitably entertained in Faneuil Hall after the funeral. The remains of Mr. Adams and his wife were placed in the same vault where he had deposited the remains of his parents, and a similar mural monument to that which he had erected in the Unitarian Church in honor of his father was erected for him by his only surviving son, C. F. Adams.

Andrew Jackson died at the Hermitage, his estate near Nashville, Tenn., of consumption and dropsy, on the 8th of June, 1845, aged 78. His death-bed was surrounded by his relatives and slaves, and two days afterward he was laid in the grave by the side of his wife, of whom he had said, not long before he died, "Heaven will be no heaven to me if I do not meet my wife there." It was estimated that 3,000 persons were present, and joined in singing the favorite psalm of the deceased, commencing, "Why should we start and fear to die?" His sepulcher, built by himself, is a small temple of gray stone, with eight columns supporting a heavy dome. Within are the graves of Gen. Jackson and his wife—his inscribed with the dates of his birth and death, and hers bearing a long, eulogistic epitaph of his composition. Funeral honors were paid to Gen Jackson's memory in every city and large town in the country, consisting usually of a procession with a military escort and an oration.

Martin Van Buren died of diseases incident to old age at his estate, "Lindenwald," about ten miles from Kinderhook, N. Y., in the 81st year of his age. His remains were brought to Kinderhook, the funeral services were performed in the Reformed Dutch Church there, which he had attended, and they were then taken to the rural cemetery on the outskirts of the village for interment. The village firemen escorted the hearse, which was followed by the pall-bearers; then came his three sons—John, Smith and Abraham Van Buren—in the respectable carriage which had been used by the deceased when he was President, and then came the other relatives, citizens and a few strangers. There were brief services at the open grave, and after the benediction the multitude slowly dispersed.

William Henry Harrison was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1841, and died on the 4th of April following, of pneumonia, with congestion of the liver, having been literally worried to death by office-seekers and politicians; aged 68. The funeral services of the Episcopal church were performed over the remains in the East room of the White House, and they were then escorted to the Congressional burial ground by a large civic and military procession, two miles in length. A few weeks later they were removed to the family vault at North Bend, on the bank of the Ohio river, a few miles below Cincinnati. When I last saw it, from the deck of a steamer on which I was going to Louisville, the tomb had a dilapidated and neglected appearance.

John Tyler died on the 17th of January, 1862, in the 73d year of his age, at Richmond, Va., where he had gone to take his seat as a Representative from Virginia in the first Congress of the Confederate States. After the funeral services, which were attended by all the leading rebel officials, his remains were interred in Hollywood Cemetery, where his resting place was unmarked when I last saw it. Mrs. Tyler is living.

James Knox Polk died about three months after the expiration of his Presidential term, at his home near Nashville, Tenn. He was interred with Masonic honors, a Presbyterian clergyman conducting the religious services, and his remains repose beneath a handsome monument erected by his widow (who is still living) in the front yard of her residence, and bearing an epitaph, which closes by saying that "the beauty of virtue was illustrated in his life—the excellence of Christianity was exemplified in his death."

Zachary Taylor was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1849, and was in his usual robust health when he attended the 4th-of-July exercises the following year at the Washington monument, and, after having been exposed nearly two hours to a heat of unusual intensity, lunched heartily on milk and cucumbers. That night he was taken ill, and, on the evening of July 9, 1850, he breathed his last, aged 66. The funeral service of the Episcopal church was performed over his remains in the East room of the White House. Among the mourners were Col. Taylor, his brother, Dr. Wood, Col. Bliss and Col. Jefferson Davis, his sons-in-law; the Senate and House of Representatives, the foreign Ministers and the leading officials, civil, military and naval. The remains were then taken to the Congressional burial-ground on a catafalque drawn by eight white horses and escorted by a large force of regulars and volunteers, commanded by Gen. Winfield Scott. The war-horse of the deceased, "Old Whitey," was led behind the hearse, and the attendant procession was so long that the rear was at the White House when the escort had passed the Capitol, a mile and a half distant. Subsequently the remains were removed to a small family burying-ground in the vicinity of Louisville, Ky., and interred by the side of his father, Col. Richard Taylor, a Revolutionary officer. It is no easy matter to find the spot, but, after winding about through by-ways, one comes to a small inclosure in which is a brick-fronted vault in the hillside, with an iron door, over which, on a small marble slab, is inscribed: "Z. Taylor, born Nov. 24, 1784; died July 9, 1850." When I was there, some years since, this slab was prevented from falling by a fence-rail, which some friendly hand had propped against it. All around was matted shrubbery and weeds, and the cemetery had a neglected appearance.

Millard Fillmore experienced a stroke of paralysis on the 13th of February, 1874, at his home at Buffalo, and he died there on the 8th of March following, in the 75th year of his age. On the 12th of March his remains, in a rosewood casket, with heavy silver trimmings, were removed to St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral, where they lay in state in the vestibule, with a military guard of honor. At 2:30 in the afternoon, his family having entered the cathedral, the casket was borne in by six sergeants of the United States artillery, headed by Rev. Dr. Shelton, the venerable rector and life-long friend of the deceased. The services, with the aid of a full choir, were very impressive. A procession was then formed, escorted by a brigade of national guards and two companies of United States artillery. The hearse was decorated with national flags, and was followed by a long line of carriages containing pall-bearers, mourners, public officials and citizens, to Forest Lawn Cemetery, where, after the final services of the Episcopal church, the remains were deposited in the family lot. A handsome monument has since been erected.

Franklin Pierce, left lonely and desolate by the death of his children, his wife and his friend Hawthorne, and by the secession of many of his political friends, died rather unexpectedly at the house of Mr. Williams, where he boarded, at Concord, N. H., on the 8th of October, 1869, aged 65. He was buried on the following Monday, Oct. 11, when his remains were removed in the morning, under escort, to the State House, where they lay in state during the day in a coffin covered with black cloth with silver trimmings. At 1 o'clock the remains were removed to St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of which the deceased was a member, followed by national, State and city officials, members of the bar and citizens. The rites of the Episcopal church were performed by Rev. Drs. Eames, Coit, Edson and Lambert. The funeral procession left the church at 2 o'clock, and deposited the remains in their last resting place in the Minot Cemetery, where he rests by the side of his wife and two sons beneath a monument appropriately inscribed.

James Buchanan died at "Wheatland," his rural home, near Lancaster, Pa., of pleuro-pneumonia, June 1, 1868, aged 77. His funeral was, as he had requested, without pomp or display. The house and surrounding grounds were filled with personal friends, political admirers and townspeople, who stood during the long service conducted by Rev. Dr. Nevin, President of the Franklin and Marshall College, a distinguished Presbyterian divine. The remains were exposed to view in the wide hall of the house, in a white satin shroud and a plain coffin. They were escorted by a long procession, in carriages and on foot, to Woodland Hill Cemetery, south of Lancaster, overlooking a curve of the Conestoga. A monument has since been erected over the grave, composed of a massive block of Italian marble, weighing over seven tons. The inscription, written by himself before his death, simply gives his name and the dates of his birth and death.

Abraham Lincoln was shot by John Wilkes Booth, in Ford's Theater at Washington, on the evening of April 14, 1865, and taken to the house of Mr. Peterson, on the opposite side of the street, where he died at twenty minutes past 7 o'clock the next moning. After an autopsy had been made the remains were taken to the White House, where they were embalmed. The funeral services were performed on Wednesday, the 19th of April, in the East room of the White House, where a catafalque had been erected, beneath which was the coffin, covered with black cloth with silver ornaments and fringe. The Judges of the Supreme Court, many Senators and Representatives, the diplomatic corps, and many civil, military and naval officers, and the representatives of leading journals were assigned standing places on temporary raised platforms. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Hall of the Episcopal Church, who read the liturgy from the book of common prayer, Bishop Simpson, who offered prayer; Rev. Dr. Gurley, who preached the funeral sermon; and closed by a benediction by Rev. Dr. Gray, Chaplain of the Senate. A funeral procession was then formed, escorted by two regiments of the Veteran Reserve Corps, two regiments of cavalry, a battery of artillery, and a battalion of marines, followed by a large body of officers on foot, and by upward of 1,000 mounted officers. All of these bodies of men were war veterans, and they presented a fine appearance. Next came the attending clergymen, the physicians and the pall-bearers, and then the funeral car, drawn by six gray horses, and followed by the favorite saddle-horse of the deceased, led by a groom. Then came carriages, four abreast, containing prominent officers, and followed by State associations, organizations of different kinds from the Northern cities, and citizens. It is estimated that there were 18,000 persons in the procession, which was an hour and a half passing any given point. On reaching the Capitol the remains were placed in the center of the rotunda, which was draped in mourning, where they remained under a guard of honor until the next morning. Mr. Lincoln's remains, with those of his son, were escorted to a car, and taken to Springfield, Ill., by the way of Baltimore, Harrisburg, Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Indianapolis and Chicago, stopping long enough at each place to permit imposing demonstrations of respect. The final interment took place at Oak Ridge Cemetery on Thursday, the 4th day of May, and an imposing monument has since been erected there.

Andrew Johnson, who was at the time a United States Senator, having been elected after he left the Presidential chair, was stricken with paralysis on the 29th of July, 1875, at the house of his daughter, Mrs. Brown, in Carter county, Tenn., and he died there on the morning of the 31st, in the 67th year of his age. His dying request, "Let my body be shrouded in the flag of the nation and my head pillowed on the constitution of my country," was complied with, and his funeral was without any display of "pomp and circumstance." A plain hearse carried the remains, and three carriages held the members of his family. There were no other vehicles, but thousands of the people of East Tennessee followed the remains of their esteemed leader. They were interred with simple religious exercises on an eminence west of the town of Greenville—a spot selected by himself—commanding an extended view of the surrounding country. The surrounding mountains, which had stood sentinels of his home, now look down upon the unpretending monument erected over his grave.

The tragic death of James A. Garfield —who was shot by the assassin Guiteau at a railroad depot in Washington on the 2d day of July, 1881, and died on the 19th of September—is too fresh in the mind of the average reader to require a recapitulation of the circumstances at this time.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S WAYS.

His Curt Reply to a Delegation that had Not Supported him.

From the Stockholder.

An incident unquestionably authentic which has never before been related in print may be told of Mr. Webster. On their way home from the convention, which was held, we believe at Philadelphia, the Mississippi delegation called upon Mr. Webster at his modest house on Louisiana avenue, in Washington. It was near the close of a summer's day, when, ushered into the little front parlor, and introduced to Mr. Webster, the Chairman, Judge Sharkey—the same it may be who years afterward was conspicuous in the reconstruction politics of his state—addressed the great orator in terms of flattering eulogy, saying, among other things, how pleased he and his fellow deligates would have been to see Mr. Webster's great ability recognized in the nomination of their party for the presidency. As a matter of fact, the delegation had steadily voted against him in the convention. It was upon this fact that Mr. Webster's curt reply turned. "You have expressed, Mr. Chairman," said he, "the sentiment that your desire—and I must suppose that your action was in conformity to that desire—in the recent convention of the Whig party for the nomination of a candidate for the presidency of the United States—your desire and effort was that, that honor should fall upon me. In response to which I have only to say that the record, gentlemen, is the other way. Good night, gentlemen!" And bowing himself through the folding doors into the rear parlor where Mrs. Webster sat in the deepening twilight, he vanished to Mississippi eyes, leaving his visitors sternly rebuked for lip service, to find their homeward way as best they might.

It was in the preceding presidential canvas, in 1848, when Gen. Taylor was the Whig candidate, and elected, that the writer heard Mr. Webster make, on his farm at Marshfield, the speech in which he declared that the selection of Gen. Taylor—who in private conversation at Washington had been characterized, but unjustly, as "only a swearing frontier colonel"—was "a nomination not fit to be made." The speech, the only one, we think, he made in the canvas, was listened to by a large assemblage who had come to Marshfield for the purpose, many "straight" Whigs from Boston and elsewhere being of the number, with a considerable sprinkling of so-called "Conscious Whigs," out of whose secession from the party grew the historic coalition which soon after put Charles Summer and Henry Wilson in the senate of the United States. Many of these Boston gentlemen, we remember, wore white or light-colored kid gloves on the occasion, and their applause was diverse, as one and another of the orater's utterances affected the divergent prejudices of his auditory. The expression above quoted remained in the printed speech as Webster made it, but another, still more offensive to the Whigs proper, was eliminated from the verbatim report as it stood in type in the office of the Boston Atlas. The Whig committee sent a delegation to Mr. Webster asking, that the obnoxious phrase might be cancelled before the speech went to press. "No," said Mr. Webster; "let it stand as I spoke it!" Not to be baffled in their solicitude for its expurgation, one of the committee renewed the request in a note to Mr. Webster, enclosing a check for $500. Mr. Webster's reply to this was that the expression could as well be left out; that the speech with that omitted would sufficiently express his views on the points to which it related. So the speech went to press without it. There may be those among our Boston contemporaries, solicitous for Mr. Webster's fame, who may be moved to dispute the substantial accuracy of what is here related. The fact, in its main details and chief significance, we believe to be susceptible of proof, the lapse of thirty-two years nevertheless.

A Solid Bank.

Speaking of stock matter, says a New York letter-writer, it may be noticed that Chemical Bank shares have reached $1,780, this being the highest quotations of any banking house in the world. When one considers that the original price of these shares was $100, the present figures show a very handsome advance. Sixty years have elapsed since John Mason originated the scheme of manufacturing chemicals and was deeply disappointed when it proved a failure. The experiment sunk $100,000, which in those days was equal to $1,000,000 at the present time. An apparent misfortune, however, often proves a real benefit, as was the case in this unsuccessful enterprise. The latter had a banking privilege which Mason determined to turn to account. He abandoned the chemical scheme, but continued the banking privilege. The capital was only $800,000, but under good management it has accumulated a surplus of $4,000,000, which is actively at work. The result is dividends of 25 per cent. per quarter and the present astonishing quotations. John Mason was the dry-goods colossus of his day, and left a large fortune. His nephew, John Q. Jones, was President of the Chemical Bank for forty years. He died not long ago in a good old age, leaving an estate worth $2,000,000, most of which had been made by buying business paper, in which he was an expert. Jones saw Chemical shares reach $1,600, which some considered the extreme of their possible valuation. There are, however, no more to be had even at the last quotations, and it is now probable that they will reach $2,000.

EXPLOSIVE COMPOUNDS.

Nitro-Glycerine, Gun-Cotton and Dynamite.

Two of the most innocent substances in the world are cotton and glycerine. Each, however, is at the head of a very explosive family. Like ancestors of well-marked character, each has stamped a well-defined character on its descendants. Effects are produced by the cotton explosives which cannot be obtained by the glycerine family, and the glycerine explosives give results unattainable by the gun-cotton family. Gun-cotton, as its name implies, is more adapted to warlike purposes, while nitro-glycerine and its derivatives are better suited to mining operations.

Nitro-glycerine is obtained by placing a quantity of glycerine in a bath composed of one part of nitric and two of sulphuric acid. During the process a high temperature is developed, and the vessel in which the mixture is formed requires to be kept in ice-water. Nitro-glycerine thus obtained is colorless, and has a sweet aromatic taste and the consistency of olive oil. It congeals at 8 degrees centigrade, but explodes by a shock or jar, or by being raised to the temperature of 180 degrees centigrade, by an electric battery or fulminating preparations, such as the fulminate of mercury. Its explosive power is said by artillerists to be six times that of powder, its projectile force four times greater. In its simple state it was too dangerous for use, owing to its liability to explode by a jar.

As usual, accident put men of science on the right track. Some workmen noticed that it lost its explosibility when mixed with a certain kind of sand. Nobel was led, by observation of this fact, to form the compound named dynamite, which is simply nitro-glycerine absorbed by sand. He used for his base a silicious sand found at Oberlobe, in Hanover. During the siege of Paris the French engineers, not being able to obtain this (Kieselauhr), employed coke dust from the gas works with success, and named the compond Randannite. The first dynamite manufactured by Nobel, his "No. 1," contained 75 parts of nitro-glycerine and 25 of silicious sands. Various proportions are used, according to the use to which the compound is destined. The Austrian engineers employed the low figures of 40 or 50 per cent. nitro-glycerine absorbed in sawdust. They argued that it was better to increase the volume of the explosive substance than to incur risk from using it in a more concentrated form. It was formed into cartridges for the sappers of the army to carry on their persons, the proportion being 35 per cent. nitro-glycerine and 65 sawdust. In mines, where it is necessary that the effective charge should occupy as small a space as possible, the proportions are inverted. Then some destructive geniuses invented fulminative and other compounds. All these are styled dynamites with an inert base, for the substances with which the nitro-glycerine is mixed contribute nothing to the explosive power. The next step was the production of dynamites with an active base. In them the nitro-glycerine is absorbed by carbonate of magnesia, azotate of soda, nitrate of potassium and the like, which exercise a direct action on the explosion, by utilizing the portion of oxygen set free by the decomposition of the nitro-glycerine. The French dynamites contain one of these salts, mixed with sawdust or tripoli stone. Nobel's dynamite "No. 2" contains niter, resin and coal dust.

An Austrian engineer was next seized with the bright idea of mixing nitro-glycerine with gun-cotton. He called his new compound pyroxyline dynamite, and used 75 per cent. of nitro-glycerine and 25 per cent. of gun-cotton. This put Prof. Abel on his mettle, and he threw his talents into inventing glyoxyline dynamite, a mixture of gun-cotton with niter saturated in nitro-glycerine. Nobel, not to be outdone, invented his explosive gelatine, consisting of 95 per cent. of nitro-glycerine and 5 per cent. of cullodium cotton. This article is as twice as strong as his dynamite "No. 1." Nobel was now in the vein, and he next devised his gelatinous dynamite, containing 86.40 of the nitro-glycerine, 9.60 of powdered gun-cotton and 4 of camphor. This compound will resist the most violent shocks. It is a gelatinous mass, elastic, transparent, of a pale yellow color. It can be cut with a knife and subjected to pressure without any nitro-glycerine exuding. It preserves its virtues during long immersion in water, and when frozen forms a solid mass like candy sugar. It will not explode even when struck by a rifle ball at twenty yards' distance. It burns in fire quietly without exploding, just as ordinary dynamite does.

Dynamite, being now rendered non-explosive by shock or by fire, requires to be exploded by some fulminate or by electricity. The fulminates of mercury or of silver, or chlorade of potassium, are the means generally used. In very cold weather, when the dynamite is frozen, it has to be thawed, but it is only necessary to thaw one cartridge in order to set off the whole charge. The effects are almost incredible. Dynamite exploded on a sheet of iron does not break it, but knocks a hole through it; exploded on the ground, it produces a regular crater.

An Open Secret.

The fact is well understood that the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT is by far the best external known for man or beast. The reason why becomes an "open secret" when we explain that "Mustang" penetrates skin, flesh and muscle to the very bone, removing all disease and soreness. No other liniment does this, hence none other is so largely used or does such worlds of good.

Railroad Fare to the Stars.

The idea of distance is often best conveyed by some every day illustration. When Horace wrote, "Sic itur ad astra"—Thus it is travelled to the stars—he was not thinking of railroads. But they are familiar enough to us.

In a recent lecture by Dr. William Huggins, the eminent English astronomer, as to the results of spectrum analysis as applied to the heavenly bodies, this striking statement was used to give some faint notion of the enormous distance of the sun.

"The earth's orbit," said the lecturer, "which is more than one hundred and ninety million miles in diameter, at most of the stars dwindles to a mere point, and has no sensible size whatever."

"If you suppose a railroad from the earth to the nearest fixed star, which is supposed to be twenty billions of miles from us; and if you suppose the price of the fare to be one penny for every hundred miles—not, mind! a penny per mile—then, if you take a mass of gold to the ticket office equal to the national debt (three billion, eight hundred million dollars), it would not be sufficient to pay for a ticket to the nearest fixed star.

"And I think I should not be wrong in saying that there are stars so far off that at the price of one penny per every hundred miles, the whole treasure of the earth would not be sufficient to pay for a ticket."

The Improvement in Human Health.

In result of a somewhat large acquaintance with the facts held to indicate the state and progress of "human health," I fear my testimony must be given to show that the improvement effected by science consists in a prolongation of the passive endurance of life, rather than an extension of the period of true vitality, or any increase of the opportunity for good work and real intellectual enjoyment. We may "live" longer, but our lives are not either happier nor more useful for the excessive energy recently devoted to the conservation of health, or the inordinate and laborious means taken to avoid disease and death. It may, doubtless, be possible to raise humanity to the level of one of those scientific toys which approximate perpetual motion, but expend their whole force in moving themselves. Whether longevity purchased at the price of passing a lifetime in running away from death would be worth having, I must leave to be determined by the judgment of those who set a value on our so-called sanitary progress, which I, for one, fail to recognize.

I think men were happier and better, and lived nobler lives, before the pursuit of health and the yearning for longevity became a craze, almost amounting to madness. What to eat, drink and many circumstances, beside the nature of food, which exert an influence on the process of digestion. First and foremost among these is the quantity of food taken; for the efficient performance of healthy digestion the stomach should be fairly filled, but not distended. Dr. Beaumont's experiments showed that a certain bulk was necessary for the performance of healthy digestion. This fact has long been known by practical experience to uncivilized nations. Thus the Kamschatdales are in the habit of mixing earth or sawdust with the train oil on which alone they are frequently reduced to live, and the Veddahs, or wild hunters of Ceylon, on the same principle mingle the pounded fiber of soft and decayed wood with the honey on which they feed when meat is not procurable. The time which has elapsed since the last meal was taken should, for the effectual performance of digestion, be sufficient to insure the stomach being quite clear of food. The amount of exercise taken previous and subsequent to the meal is not without its influence; gentle exercise being favorable and over-exertion injurious to digestion. Then there is the state of mind, tranquillity of temper being apparently essential to quick and easy digestion. In addition may be mentioned the state of bodily health and the state of the weather.

Mexican Pictures.

The dense population that is pressed together in the valley of Mexico, and the country-like character peculiar to many parts of the capital, bring always crowds of boorish people into Mexico's thoroughfares. Indians of pure blood, looking like disfigured gypsies, are constantly seen roving about. Husband, wife and child are trotting the same slow pace, stooping to the very ground and frequently carrying heavy loads, or the straw mattresses on which they have passed the previous night, on their way to the city. Passing the front of some ancient church or a decaying convent, we see the grades crowded with ugly-looking Indian women nursing their dirty little urchins. In the shade of some building we see a happy family sharing the frugal meal, consisting of "tortillas" (a cake baked of Indian corn) and some fruits; now and then they may even be seen indulging in the luxury of "trijolas" (reed beans,) the National dish of the Mexican; not very far from the happy "at home" we notice a crowd of shabby-looking young men lying on the ground smoking and gambling at cards; the monotony of the play is now and then interrupted by wild curses or a blow at him who has been found guilty of cheating his drowsy companions.

Indians and Mestizzos, the broad-brimmed sombrero on their dust-covered heads, are leaning against the walls of some "fonda" (inn); they are shepherds or muleteers, who have brought cattle and goods from the interior and who are now gazing at all the splendors of the capital and beholding the wonders of them. They are daring looking fellows, clad in dirty linen clothing and a parti-colored shawl, which they draw closely around their neck and head when the wind begins to blow, so that there is little to be seen of their defiant faces. Pickpockets and thieves, wearing a mixture of National and foreign garb, are seen spying out an opportunity favorable to their profession.

Men and women of all ages and complexions, boys and girls, besiege the coffee houses, annoying the pedestrian with their shrill voices, pressing him to buy a lottery ticket and gain the five or ten thousand "piros" that are drawn on the coming morn; vendors of matches and other trifles follow you step by step till you get rid of them by spending a copper piece or two, but only to be annoyed by others who have watched your weakness and are anxious to have their turn also. More pleasant than these match and ticket sellers are those who offer for sale small objects of art, as waxen fruits of great beauty, artificial flowers and wooden and charcoal figures of perfect workmanship; tiny little figures representing scenes of everyday life, beautiful birds on cardboard and different kinds of feather work are to be obtained at very low prices.

A charming picture are the flower girls, who are busy composing their abundant stock of the very finest flowers into tasteful nosegays, in which we find a great variety of roses and the ladies' favorite, the dark blue violet—flowers that nature offers us all the year round. Tasteful garlands, flower baskets that would make the New York florist rave, charm the buyer's eyes; nosegays of all dimensions and the delicate flower for the dandy's button-hole are to be purchased at very low prices. For flowers the Mexican has a well-pleasing weakness, and the love of flowers is one of the qualities that the Spaniard has inherited from his Moorish conquerors and has brought with him to Mexico. Old matrons and young ladies, eyeing the passers-by from the balcony, all have their hair and dress adorned with fresh flowers.

The fruit vendor makes a fine display of his stock on the ground or in his primitive shop. Apples, pears, strawberries, peaches, apricots, Turkish and Indian figs, the growth of the temperate climate, are to be seen lying together with the golden orange, the yellow lemon, bananas, ananas, mangoes, and the delicious chirimoya, productions of the torrid zone. Those who are fond of a cooling draught may apply to one of the numerous water stands, where inoffensive mixtures of water and ananas, lemon and other juices are served to the caller for two cents a glass. While sipping our nectar we notice two or three old Indian women, half naked, who press with a round stone the juice out of the fruit. Chocolate and cocoa are served as well at the stands. Traveling cooks with their two-wheeled kitchens are to be found in every street, and they serve dishes to those who give them a call; yet a foreigner would scarcely be pleased with the acid Spanish pippin or the baked sweet potatoes and other dishes, as they are generally spiced with a good deal of dirt.—Evening Post Correspondence.

When others are suffering, drop a word of kindness and sympathy. If they are suffering from a Cold, give them Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; a few doses of this valuable remedy will afford instant relief, and a twenty-five cent bottle will cure the worst Cough.

Finger Nails.

Our finger nails grow out about three times a year; they should be trimmed with scissors once a week, not so close as to leave no room for the dirt to gather, for then you do not protect the ends of the fingers, as was designed by nature; besides, if trimmed too close at the corners, there is danger of their growing into the flesh, causing inconvenience, and sometimes great pain. The collections under the ends of the nails should not be removed by anything harder than a brush or a soft piece of wool; nor should the nails be scraped with a pen-knife or other metallic substance, as it destroys the delicacy of their structure and will at length give them an unnatural thickness. We are not favorably impressed as to the cleanliness of a person who keeps his nails trimmed to the quick, as it is often done to prevent dirt gathering there; whereas, if a margin were allowed, it would be an index to the cleanliness of the hands, from which the collections under the finger nails are made. Leave a margin, then, and the moment you observe that these collections need removal, you may know that the hands need washing, when they and the nails are both cleaned together. Most persons are familiar with those troublesome bits of skin which loosen at the root of the finger nails; it is caused by the skin adhering to the nail, which, growing outward, drags the skin along with it, stretching it until one end gives way. To prevent this, the skin should be loosened from the nail once a week, not with a knife or scissors, but with something blunt; such as the end of an ivory paper cutter; this is best done after soaking the fingers in warm water, then pushing the skin back gently and slowly; the white specks on the nails are made by scraping the nails with a knife at a point where it emerges from the skin. Biting off the finger nails is an uncleanly practice, for thus the unsightly collections at the ends are kept eaten clean! Children may be broken of such a filthy habit by causing them to dip the ends of their fingers several times a day in wormwood bitters, without letting them know the object, if this is not sufficient, cause them wear caps on each finger until the practice is discontinued. —Hall's Journal of Health.

No Good Preaching.

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a lawsuit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See other column.—Albany Times.

Paralyzed the Court.

"I move the discharge of the prisoner," said Counselor Daly, as he stepped up alongside a dilapidated specimen of humanity in Judge Peloubet's court in New Jersey.

"On what grounds?" queried the court.

"Mental incapacity," said Mr. Day.

The court took a scrutiny of the tramp through his gold-rimmed glasses and remarked, "I can't see that there's any mental incapacity about him. What do you mean?"

"I mean, may it please the court, that he's mentally incapable of estimating the amount of Jersey City whisky he can fill in without spilling."

After the clerk had poured some ice water down the Court's throat it recovered to remark:

"The prisoner is discharged, and, Counselor Daly, the next time you attempt to paralyze this court of justice she'll send you up for six months, if she knows herself, and she thinks she does."

The Ottawa (Kan.) Republican thus quotes: Mr. Harvey B. F. Keller, Recorder of Deeds, says: I have long been convinced of the merits of St. Jacobs Oil, and use it in my family for rheumatism successfully.

Etchings.

There are some mighty sensitive natures in this world. There was that Quebec boy, for instance—Ferdinand Pitcher, aged ten years—who hanged himself because his mother asked him to set the table for supper. He was a tender plant, and when his mother said, "Come, Ferdy, put on the cups and saucers," the cruel words almost crushed his youthful heart. But he continued reading "The Boy Countefeiter," in the Boys' Own Paralyzer, and had just reached the chapter where the "Boy" kills two police officers, and escapes with a smile on his face and a pistol in each hand, when his mother again called out: "Come, now, Ferdy, set the table, that's a good boy." Then the boy's sensitive nature rebelled, and he went out and hanged himself.—Norristown Herald.

An ex-Consul of Great Britain, says the Brooklyn Eagle, related that Mr. Charles Townsend, Sedalia, Mo., was cured of rheumatism of the worst kind by St. Jacobs Oil.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Sentinel.

A Thoughtful Wife.

Wife, just returned from a shopping tour—"Come and see what I've got for you, Eugene."

Eugene—"Ah, just like you, darling; always thinking of me!"

He advances as his wife removes the wrapping and exposes some fine drawings from a neighboring marble-yard. Husband starts back and exclaims, excitedly:

"Gracious, Laura! what did you bring these things here for?"

Thoughtful wife—"Well, Eugene, I heard you complain of feeling unwell this morning, and I thought you'd like to look at some tomb-stone patterns."

It would be supposed from its popularity that only one substance is now known to the world for the relief of rheumatism, and that is St. Jacobs Oil.—St. Louis (Mo.) Dispatch.

Better Late Than Never.

[Texas Siftings.]

Two young men who move in the very best Austin society, went on a spree not long since. After they were pretty well under way one of them said in an inebriated tone of voice:

"Let's bid each other good night, Bill."

"Why you ain't going home already? It's right in the shank of the evening."

"Of course. I'm not goin' home now, but after a while we won't know each ozzer from a shide of sole-leather, sho let's shay 'good night' right now before it'sh too late."

That pain in the back is a sure sign that you need to take a package of Kidney-Wort.

A Difference in Doubters.

The man who doubts, honestly, is a very different man from the one who professes to doubt, as a pretext for immoral actions. The genuine doubter would much rather believe than doubt, the pretended one would much rather doubt than believe. The genuine doubter feels all the sorrow of an uncertainty which he can not conquer. The pretended doubter seeks the uncertainty, as a relief from the horrible certainty, which he dislikes to contemplate. Tho' the true doubter may be in the wrong, he would always prefer to be in the right. It is the truth that he seeks. The pretender is not thoughtful, and takes no time to examine the foundation upon which beliefs or disbeliefs rest. These remarks are equally applicable to believers. The thoughtful, sincere believer is always moderate. Earnest, but tolerant; devoted, but liberal. He who sincerely believes, with an educated understanding, must always respect the sincere conviction of others.

Be Wise and Happy.

If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. The greatest remedy for this, the great, wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—rely on it. See another column.—Press.

Not Swearing.

A real pretty, precise and polite young girl went to the dentist's and having a difficult case the dentist had to put the rubber-dam in her mouth, as is usual. The girl stood it like a little man, and whimpered, but when she had the teeth all fixed, and came out, she was overheard to remark to her best friend as she held her head in her hands, that she never swore except when she was on the witness stand, but really she thought that thing would rubber-dam head off. The dentist had his head out of the window up stairs, and the shock threw his store teeth against the roof of his mouth with such force that the shingles were knocked off in several places.—Steubenville Herald.

Mr. E. Purcell, No. 11 Ann street, New York, used St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism with entire relief—writes a New York journal.—Richmond (Va.) Christian Advocate.

WEATHER--OR NOT.

We admire the philosophy of the unfortunate man, who, when everything had been swept away, said, "Well, there'll be weather and taxes left, at any rate." Alas! weather is the "yellow dog" of all subjects; everyone thinks it his special right to try to better the weather, and hurls his anathemas against "Old Probabilities," and all who endeavor to assist him in regulating the weather. The following communication is from Prof. Tice, of St. Louis, Mo., the renowned meteorologist and weather prophet of the West. It does not discuss the weather but something surely of more importance to those who suffer with that painful malady he speaks of: "The day after concluding my lectures at Burlington, Iowa, on the 21st of December last, I was seized with a sudden attack of neuralgia in the chest, giving me excruciating pain and almost preventing breathing. My pulse, usually 80, fell to 25; intense nausea of the stomach succeeded, and a cold, clammy sweat covered my entire body. The attending physician could do nothing to relieve me. After suffering for three hours, I thought—as I had been using St. Jacobs Oil with good effect for rheumatic pains—I would try it. I saturated a piece of flannel, large enough to cover my chest, with the Oil, and applied it. The relief was almost instantaneous. In one hour I was entirely free from pain, and would have taken the train to fill an appointment that night in a neighboring town had my friends not dissuaded me. As it was, I took the night train for my home, in St. Louis, and have not been troubled since."

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.

GENTLEMEN:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.
J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

The Iron Tonic is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark, and Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

O. LANGELL'S ASTHMA & CATARRH REMEDY.

Having struggled 20 years between life and death with ASTHMA or PHTHISIC, treated by eminent physicians and receiving no benefit, I was compelled during the last five years of my illness to sit on my chair day and night gasping for breath; my sufferings were beyond description. In despair I experimented on myself by compounding roots and herbs and inhaling the medicine thus obtained. I fortunately discovered this WONDERFUL CURE for ASTHMA or CATARRH, warranted to relieve the most stubborn case of Asthma in FIVE MINUTES, so the patient can lie down to rest and sleep comfortably. Any person not fully satisfied after using one-third of a box can return the remainder to the proprietor and the money will be refunded, or send me your address for a trial package FREE OF CHARGE. Should your druggist not keep the remedy, you can send it by mail on receipt of the price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists. Address D. LANGELL, [illegible] Wooster, Ohio, or ALBERT INGARD, Manager, 38 Astor House Offices, New York City.

Parson Biggs.

A MAN WHO PASSED A TERRIBLE NIGHT.

[Little Rock Gazette.]

The other day, Parson Biggs, an old-time preacher, from "away in the country," paid his first visit to Little Rock. He went to the residence of old 'Squire Muckle, who at one time had lived in the parson's neighborhood. The 'squire's family were exceedingly glad to see the parson, for years ago he had taken off his saddle at the 'squire's gate; had eaten corn-bread and cabbage with the family, and had sung, and had sung, and prayed until the boys, who had plowed all day, fell asleep. After singing the old familiar songs, and praying the old familiar prayer, the 'squire conducted the parson to the bed room designed for the rest of the good old servant.

"What do you call this?" asked the good old parson, regarding with an air of interest a mosquito-bar suspended above the bed.

"Why, that is a mosquito-bar."

"What account is it?"

"To keep off mosquitos."

"Brother Muckle, I thought that you were too sensible a man to give way to these town fixings. You told me that when I come to see you we would have a revival of old days. Now you want to hang that thing over me. Take it down,please. I'm afraid that the vanity that I've allers heard lurked about these towns is taking ahold of you."

The bar was taken down, and the old man blew out his candle, which he always carried in his saddle-bags, with a "puff," and retired.

The 'squire and Mrs. Muckle slept in an adjoining room. They had been in bed but a few moments, when Mrs. Muckle remarked:

"What was that noise?"

"Pow-pang!" came from the adjoining room.

"I don't know what it is," answered the 'squire, stuffing the corner of the pillow in his mouth.

"Slap!" came from the next room.

"Did you hear that?" exclaimed Mrs. Muckle.

"It is nothing," said the 'squire.

"Slap, slap!"

"Go in there and see what's the matter with the parson, Mr. Muckle."

"Chuck, chuck, chuck," was all that Muckle could say.

"You act like a man that hasn't got any sense. You'd lay here and see a man die in the next room."

"How can I lay here and (chuck) see a man in the (chuck) next room? The door's shut and the light's out."

"Slap, bang!"

"You must go in there, Mr. Muckle."

"Why don't you go?"

"Think I'm going into a man's room? All right; if the old man dies it isn't my fault." And Mrs. Muckle turned over, and Muckle chuckled himself to sleep.

Next morning when the parson appeared at the breakfast table, he presented a swollen appearance. His face was covered with bumps, and his hands looked as though they had the nettle rash.

"I lay there and fit them things all night," he said solemnly. "Reckon you'd better put up that thin looking sheet," and, bowing over his plate, he said:

"Gracious Lord, make us thankful for these, Thy many blessings."

Lieutenant Derby's Wound.

"The literature of the president's case would make a library," said Dr. Bliss, as he tossed the ashes from his half-smoked cigar. "I have just received a letter from the daughter of the late Lieutenant Derby, of the United States Engineer Corps, or, as you may have known him, the celebrated John Phœnix. Lieutenant Derby was wounded at the battle of Monterey, during the Mexican war, and his wound was apparently as vital as that of the president. The surgeons gave him up after probing for the ball. He was carried on a stretcher for two hundred miles, put on board a vessel, and brought to this country and recovered. In after years the ball worked itself to the surface of his body, and, on discovering it, he pinched it so as to bring it closer to the skin, and one day asked his wife to make an incision and let it out. 'Why don't you go to a surgeon and let him perform the operation?' 'I haven't the nerve to do it,' replied his wife. 'Look here,' said the inimitable John, 'surgeons have had all the fun with that ball that I propose to allow. If you don't cut it out, I will.' It was never removed, however, and he died with the bullet in him. This might have been the case with the president."—[New York Herald.

"I Don't Want a Plaster," said a sick man to a druggist, "can't you give me something to cure me?" His symptoms were lame back and disordered urin, and were sure indications of kidney disease. The druggist told him to use Kidney-Wort, and in a short time it effected a complete cure. Have you these symptoms? Then get a box or bottle to-day—before you become incurable. It is THE cure; safe and sure.—[Knoxville Republican.

Never despair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt are the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large proportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SODID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY.

In speaking of person's faults,
Pray don't forget your own;
Remember, those with homes of glass
Should seldom throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
Than talk of those who sin,
'Tis better to commence at home,
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried.
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—but who has not?
The old as well as young;
Perhaps we may, for aught we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works as well,
To try my own defects to cure,
Ere others' faults I tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we begin,
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may bring
To those we little know;
Remember—curses sometimes, like
Our chickens—roost at home;
Don't speak of others' faults until
We have none of our own.

Family Reunion.

[Plymouth Advertiser.]

One of the most pleasant events in the social life of Plymouth, occurred on last Friday evening, at the residence of Mrs. S. M. Nimmons; being the reunion of the widely scattered members of the Brink family on the 83rd birthday anniversary of the mother, Mrs. Catherine Brink. Four generations were represented in this very interesting meeting. There was the sweet-faced mother, the picture of beautiful old age, surrounded by her children, grand-children and great-grand children. It was the meeting place of old age and infancy, with all the various stages of experience in between. Those present who stood outside of the immediate circle of relatives could not but be deeply interested in this gathering, and rejoice in the happiness of the hour. It was the meeting of a family which in various ways has been identified with the interests of this community, and especially of the Presbyterian church, for more than half a century. Mother Brink has lived in this place for fifty-eight years. Her husband, Mr Abram Brink, who was called to his final rest twenty-two years ago, was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church for nearly thirty-five years. The children, as they came up to years of manhood and womanhood, had before them the example of a father and mother devoted to the church, and to them.

There were ten children in all; one of these died in infancy; nine of them, two boys and seven girls, were permitted to grow to the estate of men and women, and were married in this place. Mother Brink has been permitted to see the fulfillment of the divine word, "The promise is to you and your children." With each she celebrated the Lord's Supper in her own church. But the family has been sadly broken; only five remained to greet her with kind wishes on her 83rd birthday. There were present Mrs. S. W. Ralston and husband, of Auburn, Ind.; Mrs. J. DeLamater, of Milford, Del.; Mrs. Ithamr DuBois, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Brink, wife of Mr. Geo. Brink, deceased of Fairfield, O.; Mrs. S. M. Nimmons and her entire family, and Mr. P. S. Brink and family, of this place.

There were forty-two grand-children, only thirty are now living; thirteen were present, the eldest Mrs. Emily A. Dills, and eldest grand-son Mr. A. J. Ralston. There were forty-four great-grand-children, forty are still living and twelve were present. The oldest and youngest grand-daughter as well as the oldest and youngest great-grand-daughter were in the family group.

In addition to the immediate decendants of Mrs. Brink there were present a large number of other relatives and friends of the family. The evening seemed short. Its memory will be very precious to those who were there. The family cannot anticipate many more such meetings here; may none of them be absent in the great final family gathering up yonder. PASTOR.

Nature's Sluice-Way.

The kidneys are nature's sluice-way to wash out the debris of our constantly changing bodies. If they do not work properly, the trouble is felt everywhere. Then be wise, and as soon as you see signs of disorder get a package of Kidney-Wort and take it faithfully. It will clean the sluice-way of sand, gravel or slime and purify the whole system. Druggists sell it—both liquid and dry—and it is equally efficient in either form.—[Independent.

A Perpetual Ice-Gorge.

WHERE ONE WOULD BE UNPLEASANTLY COOL ON THE HOTTEST SUMMER DAY.

[Newton, N. J., September 17—Correspondence of the Philadelphia Times.]

Within an hour's drive from this town may be witnessed one of the strangest sights in this country—a perpetual ice-gorge. This gorge exists at the foot of Blue Mountains, back of Swattswood lake and Middleville, and is but a few miles west of Newton. The gorge is several hundred yards in extent, from ten to thirty feet deep, with numerous caves and clefts in the rock where the ice lies. The main gorge is located but a short distance from the mountain, and the shade at that spot is very dense, the sun apparently never penetrating it. The entire bottom of the gorge is covered with thick, clear ice, and the crevices and caves are filled with it. That it is a natural ice-house there can be no doubt. Hundreds of tons might be taken out without appreciably decreasing the quantity. Much of this great mass has doubtless lain there for years, the ice gradually melting on top and being added to each year. The thermometer, which during the recent drought and "hot spell" registered 103 degrees in Newton, marked just thirty-eight degrees at the same time at the bottom of the gorge—too cold for a person to remain there any length of time. A few feet from one end of the gorge a spring of the delicious sparkling water bubbles up through the ice. It tastes slightly of iron, and is very satisfying to the thirst. This water stands at thirty-four degrees—about as cold as one could comfortably drink it.

Samuel Thompson, who owns the farm on which this natural curiosity has been found, said, when asked about the gorge by a reporter: "Why, yes. I 'spose it is rather remarkable, though we never set no store by it, 'cept when we wanted ice. The neighbors all goes there when they wants ice, and 'tain't necessary for t' build any ice-houses 'round here. Early in th' spring th' gorge is filled clear to the top with clear ice, but long in the summer it gets melted down; but then they's allers tons and tons o' ice thar, and there haz been ever since I kin remember. Ye see, th' water runs down offen th' mountain into that holler during th' fall, and as they ain't much outlet it jest stays thar an' freezes. I 'spose some o' th' ice in that thar cave has been thar forever. The water in the trough, is mighty good-tastin,' and my wife sets great store by it, 'cause she says 't is powerful good for rheumatiz. We hev knowed 'bout the gorge for years, but ez I reckoned they was plenty jest like it, 'round the country. I never said much about th' ol' mine. Yes, they hez been a good many 'round here t' see th' spring this summer, but mostly city chaps that was boardin' over t' Newton an' come out jest t' see th' sight." Mr. Thompson has been offered large sums of money by enterprising capitalists for the gorge, but declines to sell, as he is wealthy and thinks the property is worth just as much to him as it would be to some one else.

Why are You Billious?

Because you have allowed your bowels to become costive, and liver torpid. Use Kidney-Wort to produce a free state of the bowels, and it will stimulate the liver to proper action, cleanse the skin of its yellowness, cure bilious headache, and cause new life in the blood. Druggists have it, both dry and liquid.—[Zion's Herald.

India-Rubber Gathering in Colombia.

When the hunter has found a rubber tree he first clears away a space from the roots, and then moves on in search of others, returning to commence operations as soon as he has marked all the trees in the vicinity. He first of all digs a hole in the ground hard by, and then cuts in the tree a V-shaped incision with a machete, as high as he can reach. The milk is caught as it exudes and flows into the hole. As soon as the flow from the cuts has ceased the tree is chopped down, and the trunk raised from the ground by means of an improvised trestle. After placing large leaves to catch the sap, gashes are cut throughout the entire length, and the milk carefully collected. When it first exudes the sap is of the whiteness and consistence of cream, but it turns black on exposure to the air. When the hole is filled with rubber it is coagulated by adding hard soap or the root of the mechvacan, which have a most rapid action, and prevent the escape of the water that is always present in the fresh sap. When coagulated sufficiently the rubber is carried on the backs of the hunters by bark thongs to the river and floated down on rafts. The annual destruction of rubber trees in Colombia is very great, and the industry must soon disappear altogether, unless the government puts in force a law that already exists, which compels the hunters to tap the trees without cutting them down. If this law was strictly carried out there would be a good opening for commercial enterprise, for rubber trees will grow from eight to ten inches in diameter in three or four years from seed. The trees require but little attention, and begin to yield returns sooner than any other. Those that yield the greatest amount of rubber flourish on the banks of the Simu and Asiato rivers. The value of the crude india-rubber imported into the states annually is about $10,000,000.—[London Times.

Preparation of Peanuts.

Peanuts to be prepared for the market are placed in a large cylinder, from which they enter the brushes, where every nut receives fifteen feet of a brushing before it becomes free. Then they are dropped on an endless belt, passing along at the rate of four miles an hour. On each side of the belt stand girls, and, as the nuts fall on the belt, the girls, with a quick motion of the hand, pick out all the poor looking nuts, allowing only the best to pass the crucible. Those that do pass drop into bags on the floor below. When the bag is filled it is sewed up and branded as "cocks," with the figure of a rooster prominent on its sides. The peanuts caught by the girls are thrown to one side, picked over, and the best singled out, bagged and brandled as "ships." These are as fine a nut for eating as the first, but in shape and color do not compare with the "cocks." The third grade is branded as "eagles." These are picked out of the cullings of "cocks" and "ships." The cullings that are left from the "eagles" are bagged, sent to the top story, and what little meat is in them is shaken out by a patent sheller. The nuts being shelled by this new process, the meat drops in bags below, free from dust or dirt of any kind, and is then shipped in 200-pound sacks to the north, where it is bought by confectioners for the purpose of making taffy or peanut candy. It may be here stated that a peculiar kind of oil is extracted from the meat of the nut, and in this especially a large trade is done among the wholesale druggists. There is nothing wasted, for even shells are made useful. They are packed in sacks and sold to stable keepers for horse-bedding, and a very healthful bed they make.

A good Baptist clergyman, of Bergen, N. Y., a strong temperance man, suffered with kidney trouble, neuralgia, and dizziness almost to blindness, over two years after he was told that Hop Bitters would cure him, because he was afraid of and prejudiced against "Bitters." Since his cure he says none need fear but trust in Hop Bitters. 44-2w.

THE INDIANA WEEKLY SENTINEL!

Has been enlarged and improved until it is now the LARGEST and the VERY BEST paper published in the west.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL is in all regards a superior eight page 56-column paper.

The merits of the Sentinel as a general newspaper are so well known, that commendation of it is deemed superfluous. We will add however, that the management has arranged and fully determined that no paper shall furnish so great a practical value to its patrons for the money.

In its news, its editorials, its literary and miscellany—in a word, in its general reading—it shall not be surpassed by any paper circulated in the state. It will be particularly adapted to the family circle. No reading, thinking man in the state can afford to do without the Weekly Sentinel at the small cost at which it is furnished.

THE SENTINEL will continue to be the same earnest advocate of true American democracy in the future that it has been in the past; indeed, it proposes to battle more vigorously than ever against the party of centralization and corruption. Vast monopolies own and control the republican party, and in the future, as in the past, it cannot do otherwise than foster class legislation, thereby trampling upon the interests of the producing masses.

The motto of the Sentinel is: "Hold fast to the democratic faith and battle on," and as certainly as God reigns victory will ultimately be with the people.

The republican party cannot survive its crimes. Its monumental iniquities cast their shadows athwart the land. Just men of all political opinions are horrified at its colossal crimes. Its ambition is for plunder and imperial power. Its downward progress from the days when Grant's thieves organized the whisky ring to raise a corruption fund, to Guiteau's tragedy, has been marked by infamy at every step. From the days when John Sherman ... tered federal officers for perjuries to seat Hayes crimes have followed each other in rapid succession. The flood-tide of star route thieves, treasury thieves, navy department thieves, war department thieves and signal service thieves, and Indiana has had Dorsey, the notorious star route thief and secretary of the republican national committee, in the state, organizing crimes to carry the state against the will of the people. The Sentinel will invite the people of Indiana to contemplate these republican methods to obtain and maintain power. It will keep its readers informed with regard to republican fights for spoils, the mutual denunciations of its factions, their criminations and recriminations, their mutual hates which culminated in the assassination of the president, thereby capping the climax of horrors and completing the work of infamy.

With this record of crime, the republican party asks for a new lease of power, and it will be the high ambition of the Sentinel to defeat its purposes and emancipate the country from its debauching grasp.

THE SENTINEL, in addition to its superiority, is, moreover, an Indiana paper, devoted to, and specially represents Indiana's interests, political and otherwise, as no foreign paper will or can do, and ought, therefore, to have preference over the papers of other states, and we ask democrats to bear this in mind, and select YOUR OWN STATE PAPER when you come to take subscriptions and make up clubs.

WASHINGTON.

CAPT. HOWGATE failed to appear at Washington to answer to his indictment, and his bond of $40,000 was forfeited. But the Judge subsequently found that he had made a mistake, and set aside the forfeiture.... Justice Cox, of the Criminal Court, at Washington, D. C., has decided to allow witness fees in the Guiteau trial. Mr. Tyner says about his much-talked-of report on star-route frauds that he did not suppress that report; that, on the contrary, he presented it to Postmaster General Key, who told him to lock it up, as its publication might injure the party; that President Hayes was fully aware of its existence, but did not wish it published for the same reasons which Judge Key put forward. Mr. Tyner alleges, moreover, that he presented the report to Postmaster General James soon after that gentleman's appointment as head of the Post-office Department, and that Col. James has based all his proceedings against the star-route ring on the report.

Grant has caused this action to be set aside.... Secretary Blaine entertained the French and German guests at a banquet in Washington at which the Senators and their wives were present.

IN the case of Guiteau, the assassin, the District Attorney at Washington said, in opposing postponement, that the punishment of the murderer was of more importance than the attempt to prove his insanity. Judge Cox postponed the trial to Nov. 14, because he had appointed counsel "by order of the court," and it was fair to give him time to prepare the case. Mr. Trude, a prominent criminal lawyer of Chicago, will defend Guiteau. He claims that his client-elect is really insane, and ascribes a cause for his insanity.....The President, it is said, will fulfill the design of the late President Garfield by taking steps to stamp out the crime of polygamy in Utah.

The President notified Cabinet members that he was too busy to see them, and informed a Senator that he would not prolong the session beyond Thursday evening.".... The Minnesota Legislature balloted for Senator, Windom receiving twenty-nine votes out of thirty-eight in the Senate and eighty-six out of 100 in the House....Ex-Gov. Under the name of the Farmers' Protective Association the Land League held a secret meeting in Dublin.... As fast as the French repair the railroads the Tunisians destroy them. Ali Bey's force is in such a mutinous condition that the officers, who are Frenchmen, can only compel them to march by threatening to shoot them.

The race was very exciting between Lucy Glitters and Foxhall, the latter winning only by a head. Tristran was beaten by a neck for the second place.... Kairwan, "the holy city" of Tunis, is evidently doomed. An army of 30,000 men, under five Generals, is marching thither, and one column, that of Gen. THE Czar of Russia and the Emperor of Austria intended to have an interview at Krzesnovice, an Austrian town, a short distance from Cracow, but the interview did not take place, owing to the fact the Czar was informed that the Nihilists were aware of the time and place of the interview. Both monarchs are greatly puzzled as to how the Nihilists became acquainted with their intentions.... The London Sporting Life says that the horses that Foxhall defeated for the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire stakes are far superior to those defeated by Rosebery in 1876, the only previous occasion that the same horse in the same year secured both stakes.

EXTRA SENATORIAL SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at noon of Friday, Oct. 21, with quite a full attendance. Mr. Sherman secured the passage of the resolution calling for the suppressed treasury report. Mr. McPherson presented a petition from members of the New York Legislature affecting the titles of the new Senators from that State. A. S. Alexander, of Indiana, was confirmed as Fifth Auditor of the Treasury.

The President pro tem. laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution adopted March 24, calling for a complete list of all books, papers, pamphlets, etc., published by the various departments from March 1789, to March, 1881. The communication, which states that the records of the Treasury Department fail to give the information called for, was laid on the table. The Senate confirmed W. W. Dudley, of Indiana, Commissioner of Pensions; Robert F. Crowell, of Minnesota, Deputy Sixth Auditor; John Cromb, of Minnesota, Register of the Land Office at Crookston, Minn.; George W. Wilkinson, of Nebraska, Indian Agent, Omaha and Winnebago Agency, Neb.; Frank M. Tracy, Postmaster at St. Joseph, Mo.; Capt. Montgomery Sicard, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department; Capt. John G. Walker, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; Commodores James H. Spotts and James W. Nicholson, Rear Admirals; Capts. Samuel R. Franklin, Edward Y. McCauley and John C. P. De Krafft, Commodores. The President nominated John L. Kaine, of Wisconsin, to be Appraiser at the port of Milwaukee, and Edward F. White, of California, to be Coiner at the United States Mint at San Francisco.

Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution in the Senate, on Monday, Oct. 24, appointing Chief Clerk Shober acting Secretary, which was passed. Ex-Gov. Morgan, of New York, was nominated for Secretary of the Treasury, and the Senate confirmed the nomination after a two hours' discussion. Gov. Morgan accepted the position, it is understood, with the understanding that he can resign if at any time the duties of the office are too great for his physical strength. Gov. Morgan is over 70 years old, having been born in Washington, Mass., Feb. 8, 1811, and is said to be in rather feeble health. Among the President's nominations were Rev. Henry Highland Garnett (colored), of New York, for Minister to the African republic of Liberia, and John M. Bailey, of New York, for Consul at Hamburg. The nomination of John L. Kaine, to be Appraiser of Milwaukee, Wis., is withdrawn, the office having been abolished. Senate confirmations—Receiver of Public Money, Eben W. Cottrell, of Detroit. Registers of Land Offices—Charles M. Webb, of Wisconsin, at Deadwood; Charles W. Pierce, of Nebraska, at Lincoln, Neb.; Alexander M. Eggett, of Wisconsin, at Eau Claire, Wis. Mr. James F. Meline's report of the frauds carried on in the custodian's division of the Treasury Department, and which Senator Sherman's resolution called for, was presented to the Senate. The report says that the office was created in 1876, and one O. L. Pitney was put in charge at a salary of $2,400. This was increased to $2,500 the following year. There was no authority for the creation of the custodian's department, or the appointment of the custodian, and that both acts were illegal and unnecessary. Not only that, but the way in which funds were disbursed was contrary to law; that only in relation to the purchase of ice, fuel and carpets was there even the semblance of legality; that in the purchase of supplies all the precautions taken by an ordinary business man were neglected; exorbitant prices were paid; no inventory was ever made of the stock in hand; supplies which were paid for were never delivered, and two prices, drawn from two different funds, were in some cases paid for those undelivered goods. Thus 118¾ yards of Wilton carpet and the cost of laying and making were paid for twice out of the contingent fund and once out of the public building fund, and the carpet was not delivered until the investigators had commenced their work. One Moses was paid for 657½ yards of carpet which he did not deliver until the investigation had commenced, and then it was of an inferior character. Cabinetmakers were paid out of the fuel, light and water fund; fifty-two dozen of nicnolders, which cost $502, were never delivered; $132 was paid out of the gas fund for what was put down in the bill as candles, but Custodian Pitney said that no candles were bought, but that $132 was paid for lemons, sugar, etc., to make lemonade for the Secretary, fifty-three and one-quarter gallons of bay rum, which cost $350, was put in the bills as deodorized alcohol. A little entertainment gotten up for some of the friends of Mr. Sherman, who attended the Chicago Convention in his interest, was paid for out of the same fund which supplied the price of his lemonade.

In the Senate the oath of office was administered to Acting Secretary Shober on the morning of Oct. 25. On motion of Mr. Sherman, a resolution was adopted authorizing the Librarian of Congress to receive and preserve the papers of Marquis de Rochambeau, to await their purchase for $20,000. Among the confirmations were those of Hans Mattson, of Minnesota, to be Consul General at Calcutta; J. F. Winter, of Illinois, to be Consul at Rotterdam; Willard B. Wells, of Michigan, to be Consul at Dundee; and Howard M. Kutchin as Collector of the Third Wisconsin district. Postmasters—Thomas S. Case, at Kansas City, Mo.; S. H. Bauman, at Mount Vernon, Iowa; S. C. Glover, at Grand Haven, Mich.

Mr. Ransom offered a resolution on Oct. 26, continuing the inquiry into the condition of the Potomac, which was adopted. Mr. Sherman called up the resolution for an investigation of the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Treasury Department, modified so as to give the committee leave to send for persons and papers, and it was adopted. Among the nominations sent in by the President were those of Charles W. Seaton, of New York, to be Superintendent of the Census; Frederick Knefler to be Pension Agent at Indianapolis; Henry M. Cooper to be Revenue Collector for Arkansas; and Mrs. Jere Baldwin to be Postmistress at Council Bluffs.

A resolution for the payment of extra compensation to employes was adopted on the 27th ult. A communication was received from Gov. Colquitt, tendering an invitation to the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta. The President sent in the nominations of Charles J. Folger for Secretary of the Treasury, Thomas L. James to be Postmaster General, and Frank Hatton to be First Assistant Postmaster General, all of which were confirmed. John L. Beveridge was named as Sub-Treasurer at Chicago, and John S. Harris, of Louisiana, for Surveyor General of Montana. Charles W. Seaton, of New York, was confirmed as Superintendent of Census. Seven hours were spent in debate over the nomination of Straitham to be Postmaster at Lynchburg, Va., without action.

After the Sunday Dinner.

[Golden Rule.]

After the Sunday dinner, what? Well, it all depends. A person whose brain is wearied with intellectual work during the week, or whose nervous system is exposed to the strain of business or professional life, ought to sleep within an hour or so after his Sunday dinner, if he can. It is surprising how much like a seven-day clock the brain will work if the habit of a Sunday nap be once formed. Nature will take advantage of it as regularly and gratefully as she does of the nightly sleep, and do her best to make up lost time. People, on the other hand whose week of toil is chiefly physical, may well give their minds activity while their body is resting. Two sermons and three or four hours of solid reading are a real rest to some on Sunday, while to others such a course amounts to a positive Sabbath-breaking. Sunday is a day of rest, not work, religious or otherwise. It is a day of repose, not for exhaustion. But what the dogmatists on one side and the illiberal liberals on the other are apt to overlook is the fact that all men do not rest alike any more than they labor alike, and what may help one may kill another.

Put the Wires Under Ground.

The practicability of putting the telegraph wires under ground is being amply demonstrated by the German Government. More than two hundred cities and towns of the Empire are now connected in this way, and the operation of the wires is, we are told, a complete success. The experiment is of very practical interest and value to our own country, where the question, particularly in the large cities, has been agitated for many years. Thus far the wires are under ground in, we believe, only one of our cities—Washington, and there they are carried along in the sewers by a company which could not obtain the privilege of disfiguring the streets. No difficulty that we have heard of is experienced in the working of these lines. The only obstacle in the way of securing the same results all over the Union is the disinclination of the companies to incur the extra expense.—New York Herald.

A Terrific Combat.

A perpendicular old rock which rises in the middle of Lake Champlain, near Plattsburg, is called Little Independence, in reference to the belief that during the struggle for independence the British squadron passed close to the old rock. Mistaking it for a vessel the commander hailed it, but received no reply. He hailed again, louder than before, but still the old rock was silent. "Hang the Yankee," muttered the commander; "give him a broadside." The broadside was fired accordingly, but the shot poured back from its side among his own men. "That's your game, is it?" said the commander. "Give them another," which they did, and again the old rock hurled back the British shot. It was only as the light grew stronger that the commander recognized the nature of his antagonist, and then he withdrew to St. Johns to refit.

THE YORKTOWN MONUMENT.

Below are given the dimensions of the proposed monument, at Yorktown, taken from the drawing and model in possession of Col. W. P. Craighill, engineer corps, United States army, who, by direction of the Secretary of War, will supervise its construction, divided for the purpose of a plain understanding by the reader into: First, the base; second, the podium, or drum supporting the thirteen figures; third, the shaft, or upright column; fourth, the capital, resting directly on the final course of the column; fifth, the pedestal, which supports the figures surmounting the monument; and sixth, the figure, are in height as follows:

Base, 25 feet 8 inches.
Podium, 14 feet 6 inches.
Shaft, 35 feet 1 inch.
Capital, 5 feet 4 inches.
Pedestal, 3 feet 9 inches.

Making the total height from the bottom of the base, resting on the surface of the ground, to the top of the figure, ninety-five feet six inches. The bottom of the base covers a surface area of 945.56 feet. The area for inscriptions on each side of the base is 15,680 square inches. The greatest diameter of the podium is nine feet three inches. The height of the thirteen figures surrounding the podium is eight feet; the diameter of the shaft at the bottom, five feet five inches, and at the top five feet.

The inscriptions on the base of the monument are to be as follows:

Sweet-Minded Women.

So great is the influence of a sweet-minded woman on those around her that it is almost boundless. It is to her that friends come in seasons of sorrow and sickness for help and comfort; one soothing touch of her kindly hand works wonders in the feverish child; a few words let fall from her lips in the ear of a sorrowing sister does much to raise the load of grief that is bowing its victim down to the dust in anguish. The husband comes home worn out with the pressure of business, and feeling irritable with the world in general; but when he enters the cosy sitting-room, and sees the blaze of the bright fire, and meets his wife's smiling face, he succumbs in a moment to the soothing influences which acts as the balm of Gilead to his wounded spirits, that are wearied with combating with the stern realities of life. The rough school-boy flies in a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in his mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with its own large trouble, finds a haven of rest on its mother's breast; and so one might go on with instance after instance of the influence that a sweetminded woman has in the social life with which it is connected. Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers.

Fooling the Family.

On the Canada Southern train was a man with his wife and several children, bound for some point in the West, and when St. Thomas was reached the man got out with others and rushed into the eating-house, and hurriedly called for coffee, bread, meat, etc., and began to cram himself so fast that a disgusted Detroiter at his elbow finally laid down a silver dollar on the counter.

"Dollar—yes—I see," mumbled the man, with his mouth full; "you'll bet a dollar to a cent that I'm a hog, but you'd lose if I kivered the bet. You see I told the old woman and children that we couldn't get anything to eat this side of Detroit, and I've got to fill up in five or six minutes and get back, or they'll tumble to the racket. Please pass the mustard—only fifty seconds to fill up, pick my teeth and get back!"—Detroit Free Press.

Monuments in Mammoth Cave.

To the rude monuments which have been erected in the Mammoth cave to the memory of distinguished men, and which now number nearly 300, some of them reaching from floor to roof, one in honor of Gen. Burnside was added on the day of his burial by a party of visitors from Providence, R. I. These rough piles of stone are an impressive feature of the cave.

THE Abbe Fontana kept a hair-worm in a drawer for three years, at the expiration of which time it was perfectly dry and hard, and exhibited no signs of life, but, on putting it into water, it soon recovered its former vigor.

LIEUT. SCHWATKA reports that there are no weddings among Esquimaux he visited. Men and women live together as man and wife, but frequent exchanges are made, sometimes for a few weeks, sometimes to remain permanent. Children are often affianced, and when the young women become matrons they are tattooed about the face.

"SMITH" is one of the oldest words in the world—the sister of "soph," which, in almost all languages, has the meaning of science, craft or skill. The Irish pronounced their word "sibht," and they had the habit of calling a man without a trade "sibhtless" or "shiftless." Their goddess of letters or knowledge was "Som" or "Saf," and their learned men were "samtu" or "saftu" —the German "zunft," a guild. Those "samts" or "sibhts" were the lights and leaders of practical civilization long ago.

THE State Mineralogist of California says: "It is an established fact that some of the greatest mountain chains and the soil beneath our feet are composed chiefly of the siliceous remains of animalcules, invisible to the naked eye," proving the truth of Byron's line that "the dust we tread upon were once alive." Scouring soaps are mainly composed of the siliceous earth which once formed the skeletons of myriads of diatoms. Under the microscope they present a wonderfully beautiful and varied appearance.

FIFTY-TWO is a remarkable number. There are fifty-two cards in a pack and fifty-two weeks in the year. The five books of Moses were written 1,552 years before the present mode of computing time. The building of Rome was commenced 752 years before the same event. Julius Cæsar made the first inroad into Great Britain fifty-two years B. C., and the King of Great Britain was carried in chains to Rome A. D. 52. Constantinople was taken by the Turks A. D. 1452, and the new style was introduced into England in 1752. The highest Egyptian pyramid is 452 feet in height.

IDLENESS does more to reduce the average length of human life than the full normal exercise of one's industrial energies. In other words, more men and women rust out than wear out. Ease and the abundance of the good things of this life have apparently little influence in staying the hands of decay and death if the mental and physical faculties are restrained by will or circumstances from useful employment. Care, also, as the proverb says, will kill a cat with its nine-fold hold on existence, popularly speaking. Lack of proper sanitary conditions appears to have less to do in narrowing the space between the cradle and the grave than worry and the intense, mischievous reactions caused by attempts to ease the burdens of life by mental or physical stimulation. These general statements have received abundant confirmation from statistics compiled by Dr. G. F. Kolb. He seems to think that infant mortality could be reduced if mothers would suckle their own children, and in support of this he says that out of 100 children suckled by their mothers, only 18.2 died the first year; of those nursed by wet-nurses, 29.33 died; of those artificially fed, 60 died; of those brought up in institutions, 80 died.

Settling the War.

In the winter of 1864 Pony Mountain, in the Shenandoah Valley, was full of game, and Federals and Confederates used to shoot squirrels and trap rabbits when off picket duty. Care was taken to avoid each other, but many collisions occurred and more than one poor fellow's bones are bleaching under the dark pines to-day. One day a member of the Sixth Michigan Cavalry encountered a "Johnny" face to face as they both turned a thicket. Both had guns on their shoulders, and both were too surprised to speak for some time. Then the Confederate yelled out:

"Say, you Yank, what are you down here for?"

"To put down the rebellion."

"Ye can't do it, nohow."

"Bet you $10 we can."

"Look here," said the "reb," as he came closer and put down his gun to indulge in gestures, "I'll play ye a game of euchre to see which side is going to whip."

This was agreed to, and a pack of cards was produced. The "Yank" got the first deal and made a point. The "reb" took the second and made a march. At the next deal the score was even, and pretty soon they stood four to four. The play was careful, but the Confederacy had the winning cards, and as the "Johnny" took the last trick with an ace he jumped up and yelled:

"I knew it—I knew it. Now Yank, are ye squar?"

"I am."

"Then go back and stop this 'ere war 'cording to agreement and mount yer critter and go home. Whoop! Rah fur me! I knew there must be some way to settle this dog-gone war if I could only git beyond the pickets!"

KING ALFONSO, of Spain, had a dreary childhood. Professors tried to drill every human science and some nine or ten languages into the child's head. There was always an excuse, as he dolefully observed, for making him learn new. "That revolution of 1868," he said, "gave me my first holiday." He laughed, but it was a fact. His mother had a little more time to look after her son, and was wise enough to see that he had been overcrammed. Thenceforth he was allowed to take things more easily.

THE Brooklyn bridge has thus far cost over $18,000,000. A thousand tons of steel are, it is calculated, still needed to complete the structure.

A NOVEL baptism occurred at St. Charles, Ill. A lady who was lame, and unable to walk, was taken into the water in a buggy, handed to the clergyman, and properly immersed.

THE Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that the ringing of factory bells at an early hour of the morning is a nuisance. A similar decision was given not long ago in Philadelphia regarding a cathedral bell.

SENATOR SAWYER, of Wisconsin, has presented his son with 250 square miles of land in the St. Croix valley, north of Hudson, Wis. The price paid by Mr. Sawyer was $1 per acre, or $160,000 for the whole vast tract.

EX-SENATOR DORSEY is mentioned as the owner of the best-appointed cattle ranch on the continent. It occupies 500,000 acres of well-watered grazing ground in New Mexico. A railroad station near the ranch is named "Dorsey."

THE gas company of New Bedford, Mass., encourages the use of gas stoves in that city by leasing the stoves and making connection with the pipes without cost. In four years they have in this manner let over 400 stoves from June to November.

A RECENT visitor to Longfellow says that the poet is not so white from age as his portraits represent him. His hair and beard have dark lines, and his mustache has a tawny amber shade of the vanished chestnut of youth. His blue eyes are bright and his cheeks ruddy.

A NEW YORK paper recounts the wonderful good fortune that attended Capt. W. McMican, of the steamer Bothnia, in his ocean experience. He has made just 300 trips across the ocean, has traveled 936,000 miles of the Atlantic, carried in those trips 60,000 passengers, and never lost a man, woman or child.

THE Connecticut way of killing mosquitoes is to nail an empty blacking-box on a broom-handle, the nail going through a bit of rubber to prevent leaking. A table-spoonful of kerosene is placed in the box, and the box is suddenly jammed toward the mosquito on the wall. The mosquito drops and drowns, and everybody is happy.

ABOUT $30,000 of the amount necessary for the erection of the Christian Church in Washington, which was projected at the time of the late President's inauguration, has been raised. There is now a prospect of $8,000 more coming from another source than by subscription, which will swell the sum total to $38,000, more than sufficient to erect the sacred edifice.

A LEAD-PENCIL over five inches long was taken from the groin of Isaac Bull, of Louisville, Ky., the other day. He had swallowed it two years before and had felt but little inconvenience from it until it produced a swelling in the groin, from which it was removed by a surgeon. The lead had all disappeared and nothing was left but the wood. Physicians pronounce it a very remarkable case.

A STATUE of Marco Polo has been finished in China had sent to Venice, the birthplace of the famous traveler. It represents him seated in a red easy chair, dressed in Chinese costume, with the exception of the cloak and hat, which are of European style. The beard and mustache are painted blue, and altogether the work is not calculated to produce a favorable impression of Chinese art.

THE business men of Chicago are not in the habit of sleeping until 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, and when they have occasion to look after their affairs out of town it would suit them much better to go early than late. With convenient time-tables on the railroads, men might visit towns 200 miles away, transact business, and be at home the same night, while under the present arrangement two days are required for such a journey.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD was fond of riding through the country. His desire to ride through some of the towns near Boston, enjoying the scenery without having the people know that he was President, was unhappily never gratified. He was in the habit of slighting from a carriage and standing among the trees and flowers. Once in California, while he was standing in the center of a half-acre of beds of roses, he looked up at the sky and then down at the flowers, and said: "It seems to be almost wrong to pick any."

A WIDOW in Philadelphia who keeps a shoe-store owns a parrot which repeatedly cries: "Say, come over here and buy some shoes." This amused the passers-by, but two rival shoe-dealers on the other side of the street thought the parrot was alluring away their trade by his oft-repeated entreaties, and they brought suit against the widow and caused her to be bound over in the sum of $500 on the charge of maintaining a nuisance. And still the parrot cries: "Say, come over here and buy some shoes."

THERE is a real Shakespearean flavor in the confession of Mouse-Catcher Fritz, of Greenwood, N. Y. In the brief span of five years he has trapped and killed 23,000 chipmunks, moles and other animals, not to be mentioned lightly in connection with so sacred a place. This professional trapper has done his work so thoroughly that he is now condemned to unsportsmanlike idleness. He has only caught six moles this year, and Greenwood, thanks to his efficiency, is now almost entirely free from the pests which have done so much mischief in the past.

A NEW YORK suicide left the following somewhat "utter" letter behind him: "What a beautiful evening! Just the time to die. So, by your leave, gods, I will make another assault on the affections of that coy damsel, Death, a thorough coquette, who forces her favors on those who do not want them, but ever flies from the ardent, earnest wooer. But I will court you in so bold a fashion you must yield." He was unknown, but as soon as the letter was read his description was telegraphed to the Boston Chief of Police, asking him to hunt up the man's friends and send after the body.

Not Fit to Travel.

As a traveler of some experience, gathered during the progress of ten annual tours in Europe, with the advantage of a knowlege of all continental languages and many years' sojourn in European capitals, I should like to say, at the very outset of my story, that some persons are not fitted to travel at all. I refer, in the first place, to the aged and ailing, who hope to derive improvement in health from an ocean voyage and who, in nine cases out of ten, are worn out by the discomforts of an ocean journey; in the second place, to men and women who, for a life-time, having led what I may call a provincial existence, are unsuited to the variety, the singular usages and (to them) Bohemianism of certain phases of foreign life; in the third place, to wealthy sybarites, who will miss, in the most splendid hotels of Europe, a thousand-and-one trifles to which they are used at home, and which not even money will command abroad. The averge American in Europe exacts all the surroundings he has had in the New World and all the glories of the Old, to give the environment charm and novelty.

No wonder the reality falls short of what his lively imagination has depicted, and I can readily pardon the ill-humor he shows just before embarking. I met a typical person of this description on the way from Paris to London. He hailed from the glorious West, was apparently a man about 50 years of age, intelligent, well-spoken, and thoroughly disgusted with Europe. He stood at the buffet at Amiens, seized upon some pastry, tossed a ten-franc piece at the waitress, and pocketed the change without counting it. I entered into conversation with him, and he promptly relieved his feelings in respect of his European tour. "Yes, sir," said he; "I landed two weeks ago, and have see all I wanted to see of these parts. I shall run up to Scotland for a week, and then sail for home. I've heard a good deal of 'routes for tourists' since I've been in the old country, but I've only just now hit the right route. It's London, Liverpool, New York, Detroit, and thank God!"—New York Times Correspondent.

A Drop of Water.

We read frequently of the drowning of good swimmers, who suddenly sink in the water without any apparent cause. The common explanation of such an accident is that the swimmer is seized with cramps; but an English naval officer offers a different solution of the phenomenon. He bases his theory on his own experience. His ship was lying for a long time off Aden harbor, and it was the practice for cricketing parties to swim from the vessel to the shore every evening, having their clothes sent in a small boat. Of course there was a race to see who would get to the beach first. The writer in the course of a sharp struggle for the lead opened his mouth to breathe, and some of the spray flying in the wind got into his throat and took the passage down the trachea. "I could neither," he says, "get any breath in, nor any out, and I soon began to feel that I was dying on top of the water. There must have been a dozen men close to me, but I could not speak, much less call to them. I kept swimming on for the shore. In about thirty seconds my senses began to leave me. I ceased to swim, and my legs went down, when luckily for me they touched the bottom; a violent jump helped me to cough up the drop of water. I staggered on shore and fell quite exhausted on the beach, much to the surprise of all the men with me." It is the opinion of this gentleman that many fatal accidents to swimmers are due simply to a drop of water in the wind-pipe. A conclusive proof that they are not due to cramp is a fact that a man rescued within two minutes of sinking in this mysterious manner is beyond all hope of resuscitation.

MRS. W. W. HOUCK, of Sullivan, attempted suicide, by taking morphine. By the timely arrival of physicians she was restored, but it seems that the trouble in the family is still unsettled. A few days after her husband, while in a drunken passion, attempted to take her life by shooting her, but failed in the attempt, and was at once lodged in jail.

RICHARD WHITE and his wife, who live on a farm some fourteen miles west of Seymour, went out to cut down a tree one day last week. When they had the tree nearly sawed in two, they noticed it was tottering, and ran in opposite directions. Before Mrs. White could escape the tree fell and struck her, inflicting such injuries that she died in a few hours.

THE Sheriff of Morgan county attempted to take a boy to the House of Refuge one day last week, when the boy's grandmother, mother and sister attacked him, the mother beating him with an umbrella, while the others struck him over the head, tearing his clothes, etc. The Sheriff finally, however, came out victorious with the boy in his charge.

THE case of Berry McCrary against Jonathan Wilson was tried at Rushville, last week, and the jury brought in a $75 verdict for the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the defendant for saying he had been stealing. He wanted $5,000 to patch over his lacerated character. The parties are well-to-do farmers, and will fight for years, as the case will go to the Supreme Court at once.

THERE was a great celebration at New Albany, Oct. 29, on the occasion of laying the corner-stone of the main draw pier of the great bridge that is to span the Ohio river between New Albany and Louisville. The bridge will cost $1,500,000. On the same day the inauguration of the track laying westward from New Albany on the Louisville, New Albany and St. Louis railway was also celebrated.

A RAILROAD laborer, in New Albany, the other day, dug up an old-time silver five-cent piece and a copper cent, and called out to his fellow-workmen, "I have found six thousand." There had been a ghostly legend of some old miser who buried his wealth in that neighborhood years ago, and the rumor spread that Pat had found a pot of money; and, as Patrick quit work on the railroad a day or two later, many really believed that he had found $6,000.

FOR several years the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific road has been harassed by the City Government at Huntington. Whenever there was the slightest violation of any ordinance of that little burg, the railroad employes would be hauled up before the Mayor, and made to contribute to the town's exchequer. To escape these prosecutions the company now proposes moving its depot to the crossing of the Chicago and Atlantic road, a quarter of a mile east of its present location.

A Nameless Heroine.

Some days since a farmer's wife in Grayson county, whose name we have not obtained, was frying meat for dinner at her house, situated near a mountain range in a rather wild and sequestered place, her husband in the meantime being engaged at work some distance from the house. The savory odor of the bacon was scented by a couple of young bears that were ranging on the premises, and enticed them to follow the direction from which it came. They kept the scent until it even drew them into the house where the meat was on the fry. The lady of the house secured the strange visitors, and her knowledge of bears led her to think that these young ones had strayed from their maternal parent, which would soon follow their trail and hunt them up. Her judgment was correct; for it was but a few moments before the old she bear came in sight—an enormous black bruin, of a kind which, as many of our readers know, will fight to the death for their young. The woman drew down from its rack the old, true, tried and trusty mountain rifle, and fastening the door she made a loop-hole of the window and waited the approach of her bearship within a sufficient distance for a shot. She waited not long and fired, the ball taking effect but not proving fatal. The report of the rifle drew her laboring husband from his work, who, coming near the house was chased several hundred yards by the bear, which then gave up the pursuit and returned in quest of her young. The plucky backwoodman's wife had in the meantime reloaded her rifle, and with the second shot the old she bear keeled over, underside topmost and yielded up the ghost. The cubs, we are told, sold for twenty-six dollars, and the skin of the bear, which was very large, brought the sum of eight dollars.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE

Prof. Harris' Radical Cure

FOR
NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 25, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 2.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 3, 1881.

New Mexico is now believed to be free from hostile Indians.

Gen Beauregard has been appointed adjutant general of Louisiana.

Guiteau's trial has been postponed one week. It is now set for November 14.

Gen. Jubal Early is eighty years old, and yet Mahone wanted to fight him.

The Sultan has given orders to restore the ruins of Solomon's temple, at Jerusalem.

A new boundary line is being surveyed between New York and Pennsylvania.

The county treasurer at Rochester, Penn., was knocked down by two men one day last week and the safe robbed of $13,000. The robbers escaped.

Some of our exchanges intimate that unless a fellow has No. 306 pasted in his hat, he need not apply to President Arthur for anything.

It begins to look as if the crimes of Dorsey, Brady & Co., and other stalwart star route thieves, would be overlooked and whitewashed.

The cashier of the Mechanics National bank, at Newark, New Jersey, is a defaulter to the amount of $2,000,000. The bank has permanently suspended.

John Sherman has managed to be his own investigator. John's method of whitewashing himself, will be to just squat down in the tub.—[Indianapolis Sentinel.

Ex-Senator Morgan, who was made secretary of the treasury last week, and confirmed by the senate, has written to Arthur, declining the honor, on account of old age.

Gen Francis A. Walker, superintendent of census, has resigned. Gen. Walker retires with a good record, and has the best wishes of hosts of friends all over the country.

The leading trunk lines of railroads are putting on fast trains of Pullman parlor, dining and sleeping coaches. They will run from New York to Chicago—912 miles—in twenty-six hours.

They want a governor for Alaska Territory. Does any one know of a candidate for the only territory ever acquired under a republican administration. Don't all speak at once.

Special Examination.—There will be a special examination for teachers at the usual place in Auburn, on Saturday, November 12, 1881. Those who contemplate teaching this winter, should attend. James A. Barnes,

The steamer "Jennie Gilchrist" struck a pier of the bridge that spans the Mississippi river at Rock Island, Ill., last Friday and was totally wrecked. Fifteen of the passengers on board were drowned before assistance could reach them. The river is still very high.

Something of a strife is likely to occur among republican congressmen over the speakership. Hiscock, of New York, whose chances were at one time good, will now hardly be able to succeed, as there will be already, a president and two members of the cabinet from that state, and the other states demand a more even division of the offices.

There is a water famine in New York City, at a time when we, in this state, are being deluged with it. It is stated that but two or three weeks will consume all there is left in the reservoirs. The authorities keep a strict watch over the amount used by consumers, and no waste is allowed. The supply is kept so low that not more than a fourth of the usual quantity can be obtained, and people are not allowed to use the water for washing purposes. Old and forgotten wells are being hunted up and cleaned out, and every other means taken to make the supply last until a rain comes to fill up the reservoirs.

The Atlanta speech of Senator Voorhees, as also his letter in relation thereto, has attracted general attention and given rise to a wide range of discussion in the leading journals of the country. With all due deference to our esteemed and honored senator, we think nothing is hazarded in the assertion, to say that he does not therein voice his constituency. The democrats of Indiana are not in favor of what is commonly understood by the term, a "protective tariff." Briefly, they look upon such a tariff as a system of spoliation, one of the many cunningly devised processes of fattening the few at the expense of the many.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

For instance, take the article of plate glass. The business men of our little town have probably paid $2,500 for plate glass, one-third of which went to "protect" one man, viz: W. C. DePauw, of New Albany, this state, he being the only plate glass manufacturer in this country; and in order that he may get rich, everybody who uses plate glass in the construction of a fine building must contribute his share.

Our Neighbors.

Allen county has 24 prisoners in the county jail.

One night last week as Frank Telley, a Pittsburg engineer at Fort Wayne, was going home, he was stopped by a foot pad, and ordered to hold up his hands preparatory to being robbed, but instead of doing that, Frank slapped the fellow in the face with his dinner bucket, with such alacrity and earnestness that he left at once.

A sad accident occured last Sunday afternoon near Somerset, this county, resulted in the death of a seventeen year old lad named Gehring. The boy, who was at an early age taken to rear by a family named Flook, living near Somerset, left the house Sunday afternoon, saying that he was going to gather hickory nuts. He went unaccompanied and was seen no more alive. A gentleman who was in the field near the tree from which the lad fell said that he heard some one shaking nuts from the tree and while he was yet in hearing, the noise suddenly ceased, and he heard a dull thud as of some one falling from an altitude. Surmising that something was wrong, the man walked over to the woods, and there under a hickory tree, some distance from the trunk, lay the body of the boy Gehring. The man went at once to Flook's and informed them of what had occurred, and the body was immediately brought to the house. An examination proved that his neck was broken, death, of course, being instantaneous. It is supposed that Gering had climbed out on the branches in the top of the tree and while shaking the limbs, slipped and fell to the ground.—[Wabash Courier.

On Tuesday William Hudson purchased the timber on thirty acres of land of Mr. D. E. Westbrook, near town, paying for the same the snug sum of $1,900. But a few years ago, Mr. Westbrook informs us, he sold the walnut on this land for something over $1,000. One can readily see that the thirty acres have yielded well when the land will be worth at least $100 per acre.—[Lagrange Democrat.

The Miami Indians, who were permitted to remain in Indiana by the treaty of November 28, 1840, are soon to be paid the principal sum due them from the government, amounting to $221,257.80. The descendants of Godfroy, the war chief, most of whom reside in this county, come in for no inconsiderable share. The disbursements will be made by Hon. Calvin Cowgill, of Wabash.—[Ft Wayne News.

The fast trains on the Pittsburg road after Sunday will be hummers. No 5 going west, which will pass through here at 5:40 in the morning, will take no passengers from this point to Chicago at regular tariff rates, but will demand an additional bonus of $5.00, besides a first-class full fare ticket, and no passes except those issued to officials of the road will be recognized by the conductor of the train. The object of the train is simply to afford facilities for through travel; hence the discriminations regarding way stations. Could an engine be "coaled and watered" to make the run from Crestline to Chicago, no stop would be made at this burg at all save for railroad crossings.—[Fort Wayne News.

Judge Tousley presided in the circuit court during all of last week, but his health did not permit him to continue on the bench during the term, and he appointed Judge L. E. Goodwin, of Kendallville, for the balance of the term, and that gentleman is now balancing the scales of justice at the court house.—[Albion New Era.

A party of thirteen hunters left this place last week, for the wilds of Michigan in search of deer and other game. A number of others will follow next week.—[Columbia City Post.

Billy Beane, the jolly editor of the Goshen Democrat, is out west on a pleasure trip. On the way his gripsack got exchanged for a lady's, and when Billy opened it that night in his bed-room had found a robe de nuit, a corset, long stockings and other things he didn't know the use of, there was such a racket that the landlord called in a police.—[South Bend Tribune.

During the thunder storm about a week ago, the dwelling of C. V. Inks, in Ligonier, was struck by lightning. The current went down the tin spouting. Mrs. Inks was knocked down, but has experienced no permanent injury.

A man named W. S. Berger, Nottingham township, in Wells county, committed suicide last week. He hung himself by a halter strap. No reason is known for his determination to end his life.

From the Ligonier Banner we learn that J. B. Kimball, the well known agent of Emerson & Co., Toledo, dropped his pocket book on the floor while in the Ligonier House at that place, and not noticing his loss, went away without it, and did not think of it until he was several miles away. As it contained $2,500 in money, he, of course, hurried back. The pocket book had been found by the hotel employes and he went on his way rejoicing.

The Edgerton Herald gives it to one of its citizens for getting drunk and whipping his wife. That is right give it to them. Any man who will strike a woman ought to be scalped.

The South Bend Register has the following strange item.

Thursday's Register contained the announcement of the death, at Dowagiac, of Louis T. Remmo, son of Mr. A. T. Remmo, of the Fourth ward, this city. Mr. Remmo had received a telegram that day intimating the death of his son and requesting him to come prepared to care for the body. Accordingly, Friday morning, he and another son, William, procured a team of Ireland & son and drove to Dowagiac. Arrived there they were happily surprised to find Louis still in the land of the living and worth several dead men. It appears that the young man had been lying in a comatose state for sometime and the friends had thought him dead, so notifying his relatives here, and, it is said placing him in a coffin.

Probably overcome with joy Mr. Remmo neglected to telegraph the relatives here of the return to life and they, all unconscious of the fact, secured the services of undertaker, B. F. Price, and ordered him to be at the Niles train that night, with his hearse, prepared to receive the remains. Two sisters, also, secured a carriage, and drove to the depot, awaiting in sorrow the arrival of the train.

As soon as the father and brother reached Dowagiac and learned the true state of affairs the brother started back with the team, leaving the father to come with Louis on the train. William arrived in this city about five minutes before the train and was driving past the depot, apparently unmindful of the presence of a hearse and mourners, when he was called to a halt by Warren Ireland, who happened to see him, and inquiry divulged the true facts. The hearse and mourners' carrriage were at once ordered to depart, and when the train arrived Louis walked from the car to the hack, supported on either side by attendants, and driven home.

His condition, however, is regarded as exceedingly precarious and the Dowagiac physicians declare his demise only a question of a short time and ordered his removal that he might die at home.

J. W. Adair, of Columbia City, was last week elected county superintendent of Whitley county, in place of A. J. Douglas resigned. There were two other competitors, W. C. Barnhart, principal of the Columbia City school, and J. E. McDonald, son of Col. I. B. McDonald. Mr. Adair is a first-class scholarly gentleman and will, we predict, make an excellent superintendent. He was formerly a teacher, though now wedded to the law. We extend our congratulations to our old-time friend and fellow teacher.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 31.—A lively and dangerous crank, giving his name as John Notaling, turned up at the White House to-day, and for a time made things topsy-turvy. He made his appearance soon after eleven o'clock. Pushing himself up-stairs to the threshold of the room occupied by Private Secretary Brown, he made known to that official that he had been duly elected president of the United States, and his mission was to examine the executive accounts and assume the responsibilities of the office. As for credentials, he had a letter as follows:

"John Woling: You are hereby informed that Dr. John Notaling is lawfully elected President of the United States, and occupies the White House every day.

Almighty God.

Communicated by the Holy Spirit."
—[Cincinnati Enquirer.

The would-be president was promptly arrested, and a well-loaded revolver taken away from him. He will be sent to the asylum without delay.

On the Confederate bond question, the American Register says: "The people who are indulging in so much idle chatter about the recent demand for Confederate bonds—a demand assumed to be based upon the discovery of a large amount of money in London, which is alleged to have been deposited there by the late government of the Confederate states of America, and which it is also assumed can be used in the payment of the bonds of the defunct government, may as well be quiet. The recent purchases of Confederate bonds will furnish another and striking illustration of the old saying, that 'a fool and his money is soon parted,' and may point a moral for the future. If there are funds in London or elsewhere, that once belonged to the Confederate government, those funds are now the property of the United States. When the Confederate government died, the United States became the sole legatee of all the rights, property and assets of the deceased; and we think our respected Uncle Sam, with native Yankee shrewdness, can safely be trusted to look after his legacy."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin."

We once more call the attention of our readers to this beautiful drama, to be presented at Ensley's Hall to-morrow evening, by Simmons & Mower's grand company. All the leading characters are in the hands of artists who have made a wide reputation for themselves in them, thus insuring a finished performance. Numberless attractions never before seen here are also introduced, the principal being the slave chase by genuine Cuban bloodhounds, and a large troupe of jubilee singers and shouters, in realistic and true pictures of slave life on the plantation, and in the slave market. The closing scene, or allegory as it is called, of "No Crown," is said to be worth the full price of admission. The manager has placed the admission within the reach of all—twenty-five and thirty-five cents — and the hall should be filled to its utmost capacity.

No one should miss this golden opportunity. Call on B. & O. ticket agents and get rates and time of excursion train from your station. Fare from Auburn only $16.00 and train leaves at 4:06 a. m.

JAMES A. BARNS, Co. Supt

—Johnny Gossage came up from Wayne Monday and attended the ball given the same evening. He informs us that Will Covey and Frank Griswold are doing well, which fact pleases us very much.

—Some of the party are not satisfied with the manegment of the bawl Monday evening. They did'nt receive an introduction to the fair maids from Angola, the object of which the party was given.

—Remember Uncle Tom's Cabin to-morrow evening, at the hall. The company is highly spoken of and, although the play is somewhat worn, a good company never fails to make it pleasing and amusing.

—The inhabitants of troy township are on the move. Our friend D. A. Fink informs us that no less than four families have changed residences within a radius of one mile in a week.

—The Liliputian show do not pay any attention to the entreaties of their audience when they call for encores. We think this very sensible and should be adopted by every show company.

—He promised to cleave to her, and when they went to the opera, Monday evening, and he came back between the acts with a piece of cork in his whiskers, she knew from the fragrance exhaled that he had a clove.

—The girls have been making good use of the fine weather, and promenading has been all the go. That's right. They'll get shut off as soon as the deep snow comes, while their fellows can place their heels upon the grocery stove and say, "Landlord gimme a hot one."

—The editor who wrote the following quaint advice should be liberally rewarded: "Fellow citizens, neighbors and countrymen, clasp hands over the bloody chasm, forget victory and defeat, and once more pursue your ambitious schemes to rob one another."

—Our young friend Doc. Ryan gave us a pleasant bow Tuesday. He had no time to give an account of himself hurriedly whispering, "I want to steal away awhile." That's not a good plan, Doc. We know a young fellow who got to stealing, and he stole away a good while, but they got him fast and now he's in the penetentiary.

—Last Monday evening's Saginaw train bore from our view several of Auburn's pretty young men. They purchased half-fare tickets for Waterloo, at which place they attended a "skating party." The Waterloo folks are considered very kind, by the boys, for their polite and pleasing manner in which they entertain their guests.

—When you put up your stoves for winter, see that the floors are carefully protected by zinc, the pipes securely wired, and, if run through partitions, safely thimbled. After this is done, see that your wife has plenty of wood split, and that she kindles the fire in the morning with kerosene.

—The Liliputian Opera Company who gave an entertainment here Monday evening, satisfied the large audience completely. If laughing has anything to do with making people grow fat, Auburn will have a fleshy populace "as soon as they can get there." We bespeak for this opera troupe a hearty welcome "where 'ere they may roam." They are not only first-class artists, but polite and honorable in all their business transactions, and also understand what printers are "here for."

—Our young friend Jimmy McClellan, has more genuine bravery than a Major-general. Jimmy's female admirer was ungratefully afflicted with the mumps, and, of course, his generous heart almost "busted" when his mind's eye imagined her afar off in the Fairy Land. Old recollections came back too often and he "sighed for a glance of her eye." Now, we don't want to be understood, that when he gave her goo-good bye at the gate that night that Jimmy took away with him any mumps—not at all.

—Fellow readers, do you think it fair, manly, upright and liberal for a young man to take a lady to a dance, waltz her around 'till one or two o'clock in the morning, furnish her to every fellow who can't get a partner, take her home without giving her any supper, and then have the audacity to ask her for a "smack" when he closes the gate? This is the style of our "hightoned" hops. When the rural chaps have a dance they come in town with a two-horse wagon and return with it filled full of oysters, crackers, peanuts, mixed candy, etc. Yet "the town fellows" make lots of sport of them, and ask one an other if they are going to attend "Jim Jones' hoedown, shindig or some other pet name they express so dignifiedly." "Oh, cons istency, what a jewel."

—Isaac Roth has been sick.

—W. L. Penfield has visitors.

—Dave Matheny will move back to his former home at Hudson.

—The little umbrella tent has been moved to other fields of "labor."

—Milo Gunsenhouser will occupy rooms at Mrs. Lowry's residence.

—A branch organ company has located in S. W. Ralston's store room.

—Chas. L. Cool, south of town, who has been quite sick is getting better.

—Kiblinger & Co. sell cook stoves—that is, almost give them away. Come and see. 43 tf.

—Another saloon will be located in Auburn soon. Better make a distillery of the town.

—Kiblinger & Co. sell hardware. tf.

—For stoves, call on Kiblinger & Co. 43 tf.

—R. Baxter, of Smithfield, was in Auburn Tuesday.

—John Ehlers has treated his store front to a new coat of paint.

—For lamps, burners and chimneys, go to Kiblinger & Co's. 43tf.

—Ryan Clutter and his son, Dell, called on us one day this week.

—Wm. Nelson and Mr. Humbarger, of Newville township, called Tuesday.

—J. Wm. Wagner and Joseph Singler, of Garrett, were in town Tuesday.

—Only 50 cts. for four gems at the Central gallery. 43-1t.

—Daniel Mottinger and Joseph Sewell, of Franklin, smiled on us Tuesday.

—Next Monday will be the last day on which taxes can be paid without penalty.

—Marshal Scott hauled some heavy loads of wood this week. Tom keeps good horses.

—Billy Dugan is in the horse exchange business. He has a nobby pair of grays.

—M. B. Willis has rearranged his book store and it is more convenient to his taste.

—We notice that old Mr. Canon is getting quite feble. He must be well along in years.

—C. Baldock has gone to keeping house in the Wells residence, on west Seventh street.

—Homer M. Henning, of Concord township, has rented his farm and moved to Waterloo.

—We are glad to see our good natured and reliable butcher, S. Tarney, on the streets again.

—Some atmospheric disturbance caused a number of our citizens to "celebrate" last week.

—Say! Kiblinger & Co. sell stoves. Located on the corner, in the new brick block. 43 tf.

—Treasurer Miller and his deputy, Frank Ryan, are pulling in lots of money this week.

—John Leasure has sufficiently recovered to "holler" "walk back!" as loud as he did last winter.

—Dr. Ford has killed about 120 quail on the wing this fall, since the law permits their killing.

—Billy Little will open a shoe shop at Newville. He is a good workman and we hope will do well.

—The Wabash road took a force of men from here to work on the sink-hole near Montpelier last Sunday.

—Conny Little carries his finger in a bag, the result of letting loose of his girl's hand at the skating rink

—David Shade, of Fairfield township, fell off the roof of the school-house, in district No. 8, last week, and was badly hurt.

—The house fly has made its exit, and it will be some time before the little creature can tickle the nose of the kitchen girl.

—Martin says its a good thing that the opera company had a giant with them. Otherwise some one would have been hurt.

—We had the pleasure of shaking hands with Rev. Henry Johnson, of Grand Haven, Mich., this week. He intends to visit here a short time.

—Mrs. Louisa McClellan, widow of the late Daniel McClellan, of Troy township, who committed suicide about five weeks ago, made an attempt to take her life last Sunday morning while the family was eating breakfast. She made the beds, and while in the bed-room, took from the stand drawer, a razor belonging to one of the boys, and, putting it into her pocket, went in the garden to the spot where her husband died and cut her throat, but failed to sever the jugular vein. She next cut across both arms at the elbows, severing the large artery in each arm. She is just alive at this writing, but cannot possibly recover. It is to be hoped that this will end the tragedy.

—Miss Nettie Fargon, a relative of Fred. Clark, has been visiting here for several days. She has been making an extended visit in Germany and other foreign countries. Our young cashier, Fred. Davis, accompanied her to Ft. Wayne Monday.

—We regret to announce that Jas. Anderson, who has been so long and favorably known all over the county as one of the best blacksmiths, horse shoer and carriage builder, has decided to leave our town and locate at Mendon, Michigan. By his removal, we have lost one of our best and most useful citizens, and the people of Mendon are to be congratulated on such a valuable acquisition to their population. What is our loss, will be their gain.

—John Knoder is now in full possession of the business formerly in the hands of our esteemed townsman James Anderson. Mr. Knoder comes into the business as a man of large experience and good ability and we predict for him a successful business He will be ready at all times to do a first-class job of horse-shoeing or blacksmithing of any kind. All kind of repairing done in a neat and workman like manner. He will also manufacture and keep in stock a full line of wagons, buggies, &c. Give him a call.

—The Wabash company are putting a new stone foundation under their elevator at this place. They are also putting in a new and larger engine—one of sufficient capacity to run the pump and elevator at the same time.

—A fine line of watches, including the well known Bass' stiffened gold cases. Jewelry of all kinds, and new stock coming daily, at Bassett & Maxson's, in Waterloo. Also all kinds of silver and plated ware for the holiday trade.

—The teachers of the county must not forget that the institute convenes here the 7th inst. A large attendance is look for and a lively, profitable time anticipated.

—The town is full of organ men, sewing machine agents, book canvassers and in fact every kind of people who obey the Lord's command, "earn thy bread," and so forth.

—Our young friend, William Murphy, is busy fixing up the insides of residences for fall house-keeping. Billy has a record as a painter and white-washer.

—The senior editor is moving from Waterloo to Auburn this week, and will occupy the residence formerly occupied by D. P. Hale.

Charlie Voss is getting to be the head man in the dray business. He runs two teams, and is full of work all the time.

Mrs. Cyrus Kelley was in town Tuesday, to visit her sister, Mrs. Barns, on the evening of her departure for her new home in Auburn.

Last week was a lively one for milliners. Another such a week, and we would not have a single one left. They would all be married.

'Squire Smith's court was quite lively last week. There were two suits for attempt to provoke assault in one day. But the assaults didn't pan out well.

Sam Beck is up to his ears in work, as usual. Now as the fruit business begins to decline, he is getting ready to make things hum in the poultry business.

Mrs. Darby goes this week, back to Oberlin, Ohio, to remain with the boys while they attend school. The doctor remains here to attend to his professional duties.

Squire Smith is still engaged in the laudable business of making two hearts beat as one. Sunday he united in marriage, Mr. John Meek jr. and Miss Demie Bohler.

Mrs. Hale, mother of Amos, Marshall and D. P. Hale, is in town stopping with Mrs. Hague for a short time. She goes soon to join her son, D. P. Hale, in Sioux City, Iowa.

Willie Baxter went west yesterday. He goes to Milton, Iowa, where he has a position in the printing office of the Milton Herald, published by his uncle, Cyrus Baxter. We wish him abundant success.

Chalie Bassett has one of the finest residences in town. He has improved and changed it so much, that one would hardly recognize it. With the improvements to the grounds, which he will make at an early day, he will have about the cosiest home in town.

John Kimsey, the good-natured postmaster, still keeps in view the convenience of the public. He has ordered from Chicago, a fine street lamp, with cedar post and all ready to run. The lamp will hold oil enough to last several weeks without refilling. The light will be a great accommodation to people, as it is often quite dark at that part of the sidewalk. It will also be a fine thing for travelers on their way to the Lent hotel, when that is occupied as we learn it soon will be.

Mrs. Nash, better known here as Mrs. Yant, will not remove from town for sometime, but will remain until her husband can arrange his business affairs at his home in Buchanan, Mich. After that, we understand, they intend to seek a permenent location in some of the western states.

We were shown quite a curiosity by E. T. Brysland the other evening. It was a branch of a plum tree containing fresh blossoms, and half grown fruit. The warm, moist weather continued so late in the season, sometimes causes this unnatural growth, but the phenomenon is always one that attracts a great deal of attention.

Dr. Kelley, of Syracuse, was through here the other day, and speaking of the Dr. reminds us that his peculiar weakness is a firm belief that he can just "skunk" any man who ever tried to play seven-up. Now, seven-up is said to be a classic game; that Cicero, Anthony, Cleopatra and Julius Cæsar, were all well versed in its mysteries. Hence the pride Doc. takes in the development of the game. But Doc. is not infallible. We learn that a well-known citizen of Waterloo, was recently a guest at the popular Kelley House in Syracuse. After supper, and when the "things were cleared away," Doc., as usual, broached the subject of his favorite game. "Which they had a small game," as Bret Harte says, and at the end thereof, Doc. realized how sinful it is to indulge in games of chance, especially when the other "scoops you high and dry." He leaned back from the table like a blighted flower, and remembered a sick patient in the country, who needed immediate attention. But Doc. remembers, and it is a consoling thought, that when a man is a good doctor and a good hotel keeper he can't expect to be good at seven up. We are happy to know that his usual good nature did not forsake him, and he stands ready to try on the next rash man who comes along.

—Conductor Dunn, of the B. & O. was killed at Deshler, Ohio, while coupling cars, last Monday. His foot caught in a frog and before he could extricate himself he was run over and killed. Deceased was a brother to Mrs. H. H. Bicknell. His remains were intered at this place yesterday.

A CITY BALLAD.

BY WILL CARLETON.

Yes, it's straight and true, good preacher, every word that you have said;
Do not think these tears unmanly—they're the first that I have shed;
But they kind of ground and pounded on my aching heart and brain,
And they would not be kept in, and they gave me extra pain.

I'm an ignorant day-worker—work for food and rags and sleep—
And I hardly know the object of the life we slave to keep;
But I know when days are cheery, or my heart is made of lead;
I know sorrow when I see it—and I know my child is dead.

No, she isn't much to look at, just a plainish bit of clay,
Of the sort of pinched children you are seeing every day;
And how she could break a life up you'll be slow to understand;
But she held mine, Mr. Preacher, in that little withered hand.

I am just a laboring man, sir, of the kind that digs and delves,
But I've learned that human natures cannot stay in by themselves;
They will wander out for something, be it good or be it bad,
And my heart with her had settled, and the girl was all I had.

There are lots of pretty children, with a form and face more fine—
Let their parents love and pet them—but this little one was mine!
There was no one else to cling to when we two were cut apart,
And it's rough—this amputation of the strong arms of the heart!

'Tis consoling, Mr. Preacher, and it may be as you've said—
God loves children while they're living, and adopts them when they're dead;
But my brain won't quit contriving, do the very best I can,
That 'twas not God's mercy took her, but the selfishness of man.

Why, she lay here faint and gasping, moaning for a bit of air,
Choked and strangled by the foul breath of the chimneys over there;
For it climbed through every window, and it crept beneath the door,
And I tried to bar against it, and she only choked the more.

She would lie here with the old look that poor children somehow get;
She had learned to use her patience, and she did not cry or fret;
But would lift her pale, pinched face up, full of early grief and care,
And would whisper, "I am dying for a little breath of air."

If she'd gone out with the zephyrs, 'twouldn't have seemed so hard to me,
Or among the cool fresh breezes that come rushing from the sea;
But it's nothing less than murder when my darling's every breath
Choked and strangled with the poison from that cursed swamp of death.

Oh, 'tis not enough that such men own the very ground we tread,
And the shelter that we crouch in, and the tools that earn our bread;
They must put their blotted mortgage on the air and on the sky,
And shut out our little heaven, till our children pine and die!

Yes, we wear the cheapest clothing, and our meals are scant and brief,
And perhaps those fellows fancy there's a cheaper grade of grief;
But the people all around here, losing children, friends and mates,
Can inform them that affliction hasn't any under-rates.

Oh, the air is pure and wholesome where some babies crow and rest,
And they trim them out with ribbons, and they feed 'em with the best;
But the love they get's an insult to the God of love on high,
If to earn those children's living some one else's child must die.

I'm no grumbler at the rulers of "this free and happy land,"
And I don't go round explaining things I do not understand;
But there must be something treacherous in the steering of the law,
When we get a dose of poison out of every breath we draw.

I have talked too much, good preacher, and I hope you won't be vexed,
But I'm going to make a sermon, with that white face for a text;
And I'll preach it, and I'll preach it, till I set our people wild
'Gainst the heartless, reckless grasping of the men who killed my child.

TOMBS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

WASHINGTON.

The grave of the first President, the Father of His Country, has been visited by so many thousands of Americans and foreigners that it will be of very little interest to the majority of readers to peruse a description of the place now. The Mount Vernon Association has taken good care of the first President's last resting-place. Washington's remains were deposited in their present receptacle in 1837. The vault was built in accordance with the provisions of the President's will. It is of brick, with an arched roof. Over the gateway, in a marble tablet, is the simple inscription, "Within this enclosure rest the remains of Gen. George Washington." Two coffins lie in the vestibule of the vault; the first is that of Washington, the other that of Martha Washington.

JOHN ADAMS.

Beneath the Unitarian Church at Quincy, Mass., may be found the remains of two American Presidents. The church was completed in 1828, and the body of John Adams was removed from the family vault in the cemetery just across the street into the room beneath the church. John Quincy Adams' body was placed in the same room in 1848. Their wives are buried with them. The bodies lie in leaden caskets placed in cases hewn from solid blocks of stone. The tombs are seldom visited, and the apartment is kept dingy and dirty. In the church room above may be found the following inscription: "Beneath these walls are deposited the mortal remains of John Adams, son of John and Susanna (Boylston) Adams, second President of the United States. Born 29-30 October, 1735. On the 4th of July, 1776, he pledged his life, fortune and sacred honor to the independence of his country. On the 3d of September, 1783, he affixed his signature to the definitive treaty with Great Britain which acknowledged that independence, and consummated the redemption of his pledge. On the 4th of July, 1826, he was summoned to the Independence of Immortality and to the Judgment of his God. This house will bear witness to his piety, this town (his birthplace) to his munificence, history to his patriotism, posterity to the depth and composure of his mind."

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

On the other side of the pulpit is the tablet containing the inscription to the other Adams. It reads thus: "Near this place reposes all that could die of John Quincy Adams, son of John and Abigail (Smith) Adams, sixth President of the United States. Born 11th July, 1767, amidst the storms of civil commotion, he nursed the vigor which inspires a Christian. For more than half a century, whenever his country called for his labors in either hemisphere or in any capacity he never spared them in her cause. On the 24th of December, 1814, he signed the second treaty with Great Britain, which restored peace within her borders. On the 23d of February, 1848, he closed sixteen years of eloquent defense of the lessons of his youth by dying at his post in her great National Council. A son worthy of his father, a citizen shedding glory on his country, a scholar ambitious to advance mankind, this Christian sought to walk humbly in the sight of his God." The church itself is built of Quincy granite and surrounded by elms and horse-chestnuts.

JEFFERSON.

In a thick growth of woods, a few hundred yards to the right of a road leading from Charlotteville, Va., to Monticello, may be seen the grave of Jefferson, in a little inclosure with thirty others. An obelisk nine feet high marks the spot. The base has all been chipped away, and the monument looks like a rough, meaningless stone. "Born April 2, O. S., 1743, died July 4, 1826," is put upon the base. Another inscription has been almost entirely obliterated. On the fly-leaf of an old account book, Jefferson wrote this: "Choose some unfrequented vale in the park, where is no sound to break the stillness but a brook that babbling winds among the woods—no mark of human shape that has been there, unless the skeleton of some poor wretch who sought that place out to despair and die in. Let it be among ancient and venerable oaks; intersperse some gloomy evergreens. Appropriate one-half to the use of my family, the other to strangers, servants, etc. Let the exit look upon a small and distant part of the Blue Mountains." His wishes have been well carried out. The old family house was in ruins three years ago and tenanted by an old man who made a living by demanding a fee from visitors.

MADISON.

At Montpelier, four miles from Orange, Va., Madison is buried. The grave is in the center of a large level field, in a lot about 100 feet square, surrounded by a brick wall. On the gate is a sign, "Madison, 1820." Four graves are here. Over one of them rises a mound twenty feet high. A granite obelisk bears the inscription: "Madison, born March 16, 1751." By its side is a smaller shaft of white marble, inscribed: "In memory of Dolly Payne, wife of James Madison, born May 20, 1768; died July 8, 1849." Two nephews are buried with her. The region round about is one of great natural beauty, and commands a view of the Southwest mountains. At the southeastern edge of the adjoining woods is the home which Madison inherited when a child. It is well kept at the present date.

MONROE.

James Monroe is buried in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Va. It is on a beautiful site. Five feet under ground, in a vault of bricks and granite, the remains rest. On the sarcophagus, on a brass plate, is this memento: "James Monroe, born in Westmoreland county, 28th April, 1758, died in the city of New York 4th of July, 1831. By order of the General Assembly his remains were removed to this cemetery 5th July, 1858, as an evidence of the affection of Virginia for her good and honored son." Over this monument is a gothic temple twelve feet long and nine feet wide, resting upon four pillars on a foundation of dressed Virginia granite. A cast-iron screen almost prevents a view of the monument within. The temple is painted drab color and sanded. The iron is considerably rusted. Around it are beds of flowers and tall oaks.

JACKSON.

Andrew Jackson is buried at the Hermitage, his famous home, on the Lebanon pike, eleven miles from Nashville. A massive monument of Tennessee granite marks his grave and that of his wife. It is placed in a corner of the garden. The grave is kept in good order. Three steps lead up to its foot. It is composed of eight fluted doric columns, supporting a plain entablature and dome, upon which stands an urn. Inside the space is ornamented with white stucco work. A pyramid resting on a square is the monument proper, and nearly beneath it rest the bones of the President. A stone contains this inscription: "Gen. Andrew Jackson. Born March 16, 1767; died June 8, 1845." Jackson's wife is buried on the right of the pyramid.

VAN BUREN.

Martin Van Buren sleeps in the little village cemetery of Kinderhook, Columbia county, N. Y. The President's grave is in the family lot. A granite shaft fifteen feet high contains the following:

> MARTIN VAN BUREN,
> VIIIth President of the U. S.
> Born Dec. 5, 1782.
> Died July 24, 1862.

There is no carving of any kind upon it. The inscription is in large black letters. The name of his wife appears upon another face of the shaft, while on the third is to be seen the name of a son. The house is at the southern end of the village, near the creek, a frame building, which has been entirely remodeled of late years. His other residence, two miles south of the town, is the property of the farmers who live there.

HARRISON.

The resting-place of William Henry Harrison is situated at North Bend, Ind. The gave is a simple mound unfenced, on a little knoll, and is shaded by beeches and other trees. There is no monument and no inscription anywhere to tell the story of the life of the departed hero. Since the decoration of Scott Harrison's grave the mound has been improved somewhat. The vault has been cemented on the top in imitation of stone slabs. The iron door on the left is now securely fastened, and some effort is made to keep the place in good order. The spot is a lovely one, and could be made by proper improvement to do honor to the remains of the hero of Tippecanoe.

TYLER.

The grave of John Tyler is practically unmarked. A little mound, covered with bushes, just ten yards from the grave of Monroe, in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, is pointed out as the spot where a President's remains lie. At its head is a small magnolia tree, on the south is another magnolia tree, and on the north a young juniper tree. The mound is neither inclosed nor curbed. Near by are the graves of Monroe, of William Allen, one of Jeff Davis' bondsmen; of Dr. Lawrence Boane Warren, the philanthropist; of James M. Mason, the Confederate Envoy to England, and of "Little Joe," son of Jefferson Davis, killed in Richmond during the war. Near by are buried 16,000 Confederate soldiers around a tall pyramid of granite.

POLK.

At the corner of Vine and Union streets, Nashville, at the old family homestead, may be found the grave of James K. Polk. The monument is a block, twelve feet square by twelve in height. It is appropriately ornamented and contains, among other inscriptions, this: "James K. Polk, eleventh President of the United States. Born November 2, 1795; died June 15, 1849." He was buried here nearly thirty years ago. An iron gate, surmounted by an eagle, opens from Vine street into a broad avenue bordered by mulberry trees and silver-leafed poplars. This road leads to the Polk homestead, a large brick house, three stories high. The tomb is surrounded by a grassplot, which is incircled by a walk of white shells. Shrubs and flowers beautify the spot and make it look quiet and bright.

TAYLOR.

The remains of Zachary Taylor have been moved three times. They repose now in a public spot at Frankfort, Ky. The body was first placed in a cemetery at Washington, then in a lot on the Taylor homestead, five miles back of Louisville, and then taken to Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville. In 1878 the remains were placed in the beautiful cemetery at Frankfort, where they are in the company of many illustrious dead, including Vice President Richard Mentor Johnson.

FILLMORE.

Millard Fillmore lies buried at Forest Lawn Cemetery, three miles from Buffalo. The grave is well taken care of, and is a beautiful spot. A tall monument contains the inscription, "Millard Fillmore. Born January 7, 1800. Died March 8, 1874." The grave is at the eastern extremity of the lot in the center of a grassy space. At its head rises the monument. In the southeastern corner is a Norway spruce, which shadows the grave. Fillmore's daughter sleeps near the remains of her father. An iron urn for flowers lies under an evergreen. Near Fillmore's grave are those of Bunker Hill heroes, of Stephen Champlin and Bidwell, who fell at Cedar Creek.

PIERCE.

The remains of Franklin Pierce rest at Concord, N. H., in the Old Cemetery on Main street. Pierce's monument is of Italian marble, and bears the following: "Franklin Pierce—Born Nov. 23, 1804. Died Oct. 8, 1869." The Pierce lot is at the northwestern corner of the Minot inclosure, and contains about an acre of ground. It is surrounded by a neat iron fence six feet high, traversed by concrete paths, and neatly sodded. The monument displays a spire with cap, die and plinth, resting on a base of granite three and one-quarter feet square. It is surmounted by a draped cross, and its total height is fourteen feet eight inches. In the Old Cemetery the founders of Concord rest.

BUCHANAN.

James Buchanan is buried at Woodward Hill Cemetery, Lancaster, Pa., on the banks of the Conestoga. The grave lot is inclosed by a neat iron fence. A fine sarcophagus of Italian marble contains the following:

> Here rest the remains of James Buchanan, fifteenth President of the United States. Born in Franklin county, Pa., April 23, 1791. Died at Wheatland, June 1, 1868.

The lot is 30x12 feet, with white and black granites supporting the fence. All around the fence is a hedge of blooming roses, and rose bushes are in the inclosure. The spot is kept carefully, and is always attractive.

LINCOLN.

Abraham Lincoln is buried at Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield, Ill. A fine pile of marble, granite and bronze marks the spot. It bears the single word, "Lincoln." This memorial is probably one of the most magnificent in the United States. The building of the monument was begun by Mr. Lincoln's friends in Springfield. It was dedicated Oct. 15, 1874. It stands in a tract of seven and a half acres. From north to south its length is 119 feet 6 inches. Its breadth is 72 feet 6 inches. The structure is of blocks of New Hampshire granite. The main platform is nearly sixteen feet from the ground, approached by four grand staircases with balustrades. The main platform is seventy-two feet square. From the center rises the shaft twelve feet square at the base and ninety-eight feet from the ground. Shields of polished granite bearing the names of the States encircle the square. It is a fitting tribute to the martyred President.

JOHNSON.

The grave of Andrew Johnson is a Greenville, Tenn., on a spot selected by himself. A fine granite arch upon a broad base marks the site. It contains the inscription: "Andrew Johnson, seventeenth president U. S. A. Born December 21, 1808. Died July 31, 1875. His faith in the people never wavered." The monument is of marble upon a base of granite nine and a half by seven feet. The tomb was erected by the three President's surviving sons. Pilasters on either side of the plith support funeral urns. The scroll of the constitution is carved on the die, and also an open Bible, upon which rests a hand. The shaft is festooned by the American flag at the top and surmounted by an eagle with outstretched wings.—New York Express.

American Extravagance.

The traveling American is the legitimate prey of foreign hotel keepers, and he has his own prodigality to blame for the fact. The majority of the Americans are not in the habit of looking over the items of their hotel bills when they pay them, but, glancing at the sum total, they hand out the gold with an alacrity that makes the hotel-keeper wish for hours afterward that he had made the amount a third larger than it was. When he resumes his journey, and for the want of something to occupy his attention, looks over the paid bill, he finds that he has been swindled in almost every item. But he does not grieve over it, for he is accustomed to being "plucked." He must learn wisdom by experience, and by-and-by become "sharp enough to fight foreign swindlers with their own weapons.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

COLD OR HOARSENESS.—A correspondent assures us that the following is an infallible cure for cold and hoarseness: Boil two ounces of flaxseed in one quart of water, strain, and then add two ounces of rock candy, half a pint of sirup or honey, and the juice of three lemons; mix and boil them together. Let it then cool, and bottle for use. Take one cupful before going to bed—the hotter you drink it the better.

WHOOPING COUGH.—On an extended trial the author, Dr. Gaspar Griswold, of this city, finds carbolic acid in whooping cough, in doses of one-fourth minim to a child of six months, one-half minim for one of a year, and one minim for one of two years and upward, to be the best remedy. "The whoop goes; the vomiting ceases; the paroxysms are modified in intensity and frequency." This result he believes to "arise from a similar action to that of creosote on the motor fibers of the vagus to the stomach and from a lowering of the vitality of the specific germ of whooping cough disease."—Scientific American.

APPLES AS FOOD.—A raw, mellow apple is digested in an hour and a half, while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthy dessert that can be placed on a table is baked apple. If eaten frequently at breakfast with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect upon the general system, often removing constipation, correcting acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions more effectually than the most approved medicines. If families could be induced to substitute them for pies, cakes and sweetmeats, with which their children are frequently stuffed, there would be a diminution in the total sum of doctors' bills in a single year sufficient to lay in a stock of this delicious fruit for the whole season's use.

LET THERE BE LIGHT.—A dark house is always unhealthy; always an ill-aired house. Want of light stops growth, and promotes scrofula, rickets, etc., among the children. People lose their health in a dark house, and if they get ill they cannot get well in it. Dr. Edwards, of Paris, says the action of light tends to develop the different parts of the body in just that proportion which characterizes the species, and that in warm climates the exposure of the whole surface of the body to the action of the light will be very favorable to the regular conformation of the body. Humboldt confirms this in the account of his voyage to the equinoctial regions. He says "both men and women—whose bodies are constantly inured to the effect of light—are very muscular and possess fleshy and rounded forms."

THE CURE FOR CHOLERA INFANTUM.—It has been demonstrated that cholera infantum is so checked by the tonic effect of sudden removal to fresh sea air that the sick child almost invariably recovers. The Seashore Home of this city begs the physicians connected with the dispensary to send for its hospitality the children most in danger—and they do so. So favorable is the effect of the prompt change to their quarters at Winthrop, that, last year, of 194 sick children received, only one died of cholera infantum. One other child died from organic disease of the brain. One hundred and eighty-seven were discharged well, and four relieved. The results in New York of the seashore treatment are as favorable. The terrible mortality there this summer is due to the long-protracted debility, resulting from the long period of warm weather. But there, as here, the removal of the children to the sea-air has checked the mortality.—Boston paper.

Charles Reade.

Charles Reade is contemplating another novel. Fiction weaving is a formidable task with this conscientious writer. Greatly as the world of English-speaking readers deplores the continued silence of this sole remaining fictionist of the great trio—Dickens and Thackeray having vanished—it nevertheless recognizes and approves that self-respect which keeps Reade from lowering his own standard by poor and hurried work. It requires a great deal of strength of mind for a writer of Charles Reade's reputation to refuse the pressing offers made him by publishers. The pecuniary bait is splendidly tempting, and few people of any walk in life are satisfied when they have money enough (as Reade has), but always want more than enough; but Reade is firm in his resolve not to write merely for coin. He will will not weave a story quite about nothing, with no purpose, no set aim or intention, save that of whiling away a leisure hour for a rain-bound reader in a country house or a yawning idler in a club library. All his fiction is directed against some abuse, upon the trail of which he hopes to set the hounds of reform. One novel was against the mad-house system, another against trades unions, a third in approval of woman's rights, etc. It takes him about a year to write a novel. His collection of literary material, upon which he builds a story, is an enormous mass to digest in the first place, and his reading up statistics and authorities afterward, upon the theme he selects, is a colossal task. It is possible, too, Reade is somewhat spoiled as a novel writer by the same influence which closed the younger Dumas' career as such just as he enchanted the world with his pathetic and delicately written romance, "The Lady with the Camellias." Play-writing—rough, rapid, hastily knocked together work—brings financial results, when successful, far beyond those of the most widely sought for novel. I once asked Alexander Dumas why he gave us no more novels. His answer was an eminently practical one, "Le theatre est bien plus productif."—London Correspondent of Philadelphia Times.

The Oyster.

The oyster is a very fortunate creature, if it be fortunate to be much mentioned in history. People who have swallowed an enormous number of oysters figure in anecdote, and are considered to have done something meritorious. The Roman who first formed oyster beds, which he did at Baiæ, is known to have been named Sergious Orata, who had the happiness to live to the time of Augustus, and who is known to have made a great deal of money by the exercise of his ingenuity. To-day it is mentioned in the encyclopedias that Apicus, a contemporary of Trajan, was the first who taught the world how to pickle oysters. His fame rests upon that fact. There was another Apicus distinguished for his love of lobsters; there was another who set up a school of cooks; but the oyster-pickling Apicus has a distinct fame, and survives freshly in classical dictionaries. When George I. came to England from Hanover the royal cooks could not please the royal palate in the matter of oysters until it was discovered that his Majesty liked them stale, as he had always been in the habit of eating them. When Mr. Thackeray first came to Boston certain of his admirers asked him to supper. There were, among other delicacies, gigantic oysters. The novelist could not comprehend that he was to swallow one of these in an undivided state, but, being shown the way and having accomplished the feat, he observed that he felt "as if he had swallowed a baby."

A Cornfield Protected by Rattlesnakes.

An octogenarian, of Dresden, had been troubled, during corn-planting time, by the crows stealing the corn planted. The usual resort to scarecrows was a failure even, and nothing seemed to keep them away. One day old Rube Davis, the late famous rattlesnake man of Lake George, was making a visit to the Dresdenite. The latter was telling old Rube of his trouble with the crows, when the rattlesnake man asked what the Dresdenite would give him if he would furnish protection to his corn.

A sum was named, which old Rube accepted and took his departure, promising to be on hand the next corn-planting time. Nothing was thought of it until the next season, when old Rube put in an appearance.

He took from his pocket six live rattlesnakes, which he handled with as much freedom as if they had been kittens.

The old fellow then asked when corn was to be planted, and, being informed that the job would be finished that very day, he repaired to the cornfield. There he made six little houses or dens, covering them with flat stones. These dens were situated in different parts of the cornfield. The cawing of the crows could be heard, the birds seeming to be on the watch for the men's departure. Old Rube then placed a snake in each little den, and uttering words to the reptiles, which he always said they could understand, the men left the field.

They had scarcely passed through the opening in the stump fence before the air was filled with crows, all bound on a foraging expedition. The men watched the result at a distance. Down went the crows into the cornfield, when the work of slaughter began. The snakes left the dens and, cautiously approaching the unsuspecting birds, they were soon enabled to wind their horrible folds about the crows, necks, when the work of killing them was almost instantaneous. Sometimes a crow would raise a few feet from the ground, with the snake tightly bound about its neck, when it would soon tumble to earth, dead.

The work of destruction went on, however, and before the sun set that night the snakes killed seventy-three crows. We defy anybody to tell a more remarkable snake story than this. Snake stories are very thick nowadays, but we are sorry to say that most of them are very thin.—Whitehall Times.

Deaf Hunter's Politics.

During the war they had down in Florida a shrewd old fellow known as "Deaf Hunter." Everybody knew him. He was deaf as a post, and through his dealings and his shrewdness he managed completely to hide his sympathy for either party during the war. It was suspected, however, that he was with the Confederates at heart.

Every means had been tried by the Union officers to procure from him some admission of preference, but of no avail. When reduced to a corner, he never lacked an expedient to get himself out. But one day a Union captain put up a bet that he could tap him and get his secret. He accordingly went up to Hunter's and skirmished around, but not one hint could he get. He would be deaf to questions that were unpleasant, and the inquirer was baffled. At last there came two large bull-dogs into his store, fierce fellows, and exactly alike.

"Fine dogs, those," yelled the inquisitor in his ears.

"Yes," was the reply.

"What are their names?" in the same loud tone.

"Wall," said the old man, "I call one Beauregaurd and t'other McClellan."

"You do," shouted the inquirer; "which one do you like the best?"

"Hey?" queried Hunter, putting down his ear.

"Which do you like the best?"

"Oh, wall," said he, with a twinkle in his eye, "both on 'em is as ugly as the devil."

The Captain paid the bet.

The next day he was drinking in Hunter's store, and, taking advantage of the old man's deafness, proposed a toast.

"Here's to old Hunter, the two-sided old villain; may he be kicked to death by mules, and his body be sunk in the sea a hundred fathoms deep. May no prayer be said over him, and may his blind soul wander rayless through all eternity."

The toast was drunk with great glee, in which the old man joined.

"The same to yourselves, gentlemen," said he, "the same to yourselves."

Of course he had not heard a word that was said!—San Francisco Argonaut.

Spantaneous Forests.

A writer in a West Virginia paper combats the opinion, held by many arboriculturists, that an open country is never converted into a forest through the operation of natural causes, and, as establishing the fact that such change does sometimes occur, brings forward the case of the Shenandoah valley. When first settled, about 160 years ago, it was an open, prairie-like region covered with tall grass, on which fed herds of deer, buffalo, elk, etc., and having no timber, except on ridgy portions of it; but, in consequence of its settlement, the annual fires were prevented, and trees sprang up almost as thickly and regularly as if seed had been planted. These forests, having been preserved by the farmers, cover now a large part of the surface with hard-wood trees of superior excellence. These facts would also seem to substantiate the theory that the treeless character of the prairies of the West is due to the annual burning of the grass by the Indians.

Madame Roland.—O liberty! liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name.

Cardinal Beaufort.—What! is there no bribing death.

Rev. John Newton.—More light, more love, more liberty. Hereafter, I hope when I shut my eyes on the things of time, I shall open them in a better world. What a thing it is to live under the shadow of the Almighty! I am going the way of all flesh. I am satisfied with the Lord's will.

Sir Thomas Moore.—I pray you see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself. (Ascending the scaffold.)

Stonewall Jackson.—Let us cross over the river and rest in the shade of the trees.

Emperor Adrian.—Oh, how miserable a thing it is to seek death and not to find it.

Stephen A. Douglass.—Tell them to obey the laws and the Constitution.

Lord Tenterden.—Gentlemen of the jury, you will now consider your verdict.

Rachael, the French Actress.—And must I part with these so soon! (Contemplating her jewels.)

Overrun with Goats.

The Island of Cyprus is overrun with goats. It is estimated that there are 230,000 of these animals on the island, and planting is almost useless on account of their ravages. "They carry no wool," says the St. James Gazette, "furnish only a bad meat, and hardly give more milk than the sheep, to which, however, they are preferred on account of their feeding on ligneous vegetation, which the sheep reject. They are fed, therefore, almost entirely at the expense of the woods and not only, it is stated, does the goat destroy the young freshly-grown plants, but it browses on the young branches of older trees. On the southern mountains, also, where the soil is loose, the goat is accused of increasing this looseness by scrambling about, and thus injuring young plants, which are dragged down and torn away by the falling of broken stones."

A Goose Story.

Few governmental institutions in Germany, organized with a view to meet public requirements, are conducted in so large-hearted a spirit as the imperial postoffice. This department comprehensively fulfils the functions of a national carrier, and will take charge of and deliver at its address any and every description of article. In the Fatherland an elephant or a canary bird may be sent by post as readily as a letter or a newspaper. Dr. Stephan, we believe, draws the line at savage carnivora or venemous snakes; but his officials daily transmit beasts, birds, and fishes, alive or dead, of a harmless character, from one part of Germany to another. A goose was posted in Berlin. Being insufficiently addressed it could not be delivered, nor, strange to say, could its original owner be traced; so, after a certain period of time had expired, it was put up for sale to defray expenses of inquiry. The official acting as auctioneer held it up by the neck to show off its points, having untied its wings before doing so, and, [illegible] in his grasp, discovered, to his surprise, a small paper parcel that had been hidden away under its left pinion. On opening this package it was found to contain 3,500 marks—about £175—in bank notes. The authorities have not yet succeeded in discovering the eccentric personage who, having intrusted a defunct goose with the conveyance of so important a sum to his or her friend in the provinces, did not even take the necessary measures to insure the foolish bird's safe arrival at its destination. Not to address a goose properly before posting it, is surely the height of negligence.—London Daily Telegraph.

Habitual Mouth Breathing.

Many people sleep with the mouth open, and thus make this organ perform a duty which should be transacted by the nose. There are many objections to this, and Dr. Wagner clearly points them out. The air in passing through the channels of the nose, for instance, is raised to the temperature of the body before it reaches the larynx. Thus breathing, no matter how low the temperature may be, the sense of cold is never felt below the border of the soft palate. But when one breathes through the mouth on a cold day the sensation proceeds as far as the larynx, and an irritating cough may be caused. Then, again, in nose breathing the air is moistened by the natural secretions which cover the turbinated bones in a condition of health, and the short bristly hairs at the openings of the nostrils act as a filter to arrest impurities and reduce the liklihood of laryngial, bronchial, or pulmonary, disease. Infants, athletes, savages and animals breathe through the nose—the ordinary civilized man employs the mouth to an unnecessary, and often to a very injurious, extent.

The causes of mouth breathing are myriad. Complete or partial closure of the passages, polypus, congenital bony closure, enlarged tonsils, protruding teeth, adhesion of the soft palate of the posterior wall of the pharynx—all these are sufficient causes of mouth breathing. The indications are not so subtle as not to be readily recognized. Retracted lips, open mouth, receding gums, protruding teeth, shrunken alae, decreased size of the nostrils' orifices, wrinkles at the eyes' outer angles, and lines extending from the alae to the mouth angles, are the predominant signs. The effects of mouth breathing upon the pharynx are often most deplorable. The mucous membrane becomes much irritated. A chronic engorgement of the blood vessels may take place, until permanent dilitation of the vessels is produced, and so on until the disease known as clergyman's sore throat is produced. The writer devotes a part of his space to showing the bad results of sleeping with the mouth open, and suggests an appropriate remedy. If all snorers were to adopt it one of the most disagreeable noises of the night would be silenced, for people who breathe through their noses while sleeping never snore. The fifty short and clearly printed pages of which this monograph consists appear to exhaust the subject.—Dr. Clinton Wagner.

Wicked for Clergymen.

Rev. ——, Washington, D. C., writes: "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

Young Gould.

Young Mr. Gould is undoubtedly the youngest man who has, or has had for many years, a recognized position in the street. He had barely attained his majority when his father made him a partner in a firm of which the other members were his own confidential broker, W. E. Connor, and his private secretary, G. P. Morosini. Mr. Jay Gould contributed to the capital of the firm $500,000. The capital invested by the other partners is not stated, but from their positions and the fortunes it is presumed they have accumulated by their connection with Mr. Gould it is estimated that they contributed about $250,000 each, making the capital of the firm $1,000,000. This is an unusual capital for a simple brokerage house, in which membership in the Stock Exchange and the attendant credit supply to a great extent the capital that would be required in ordinary commercial business. It is understood that the new firm does not intend to transact a general business—that is, to take accounts as commission firms do—but that its business will be confined to orders from Mr. Gould.

In spite of the exclusive business which the firm will do, the junior partner, Mr. George J. Gould, is a person in whom the street naturally takes a very considerable interest. The street knows little of him, but believes that it is likely to know much. In personal appearance he is prepossessing, hardly more than a boy in looks, yet more than a boy in business. He is about the average height, slender, yet muscular. His complexion is swarthy, his hair and promising moustache are black, and his eyes, like his father's, are dark and penetrating. Like his father, he is quiet and reticent; but in the company of his friends he is full of life and boyish spirits. He has been educated privately and thoroughly, and, as to business experience, has traveled extensively with his father, both through this country and abroad, and has spent the last two years in his father's office.—New York

DEAN STANLEY was very proud of the Welsh blood in his veins. "If there is any brilliancy and vivacity in my family," he once said, "I attribute it to the fact that my grandfather, a Cheshire 'Squire, had the good sense to marry a bright, mercurial Welsh woman, from whom we have inherited a share of the Celtic fire."

THOUSANDS of families have had occasion to try the never-failing qualities of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and they all unite in the praise of this wonderful prescription.

The Lecture Platform.

The taste for lectures pure and simple has departed to a very great extent. Only the very best are in demand, and those at much-reduced prices. Theodore Tilden made only about $10,000 last year, while the year after the trial he made $40,000. Beecher, Higginson, and other $100 men are quite willing to lecture for $50 now. They recognize the fact that the prices have come down, and that $50 is pretty fair pay for half an hour's talk that they can repeat often. The scientific lecturers and the lecturers on scholarly topics are growing less in demand. One scientific lecturer, and a man of reputation too, found in a Western town only one auditor, whom he invited out with him to take some oysters. It is not an unusual thing for lecturers to find only two or three persons in the audience. People are afraid to pay out their money on unknown lecturers.

Some idea of the class of men who sometimes get on lecture committees may be formed from the fact that one of them sent for an engagement with Dr. Edwin H. Chapin several months after his death. Another wanted to employ Rutherford B. Hayes, under the mistake that he was the same person that was advertised as Robert Bruce Hayes.

As a rule, the number of female aspirants for employment in winter entertainments is increasing enormously. The female readers are legion. Many of them have little capital of either money, good looks, experience or talent. They think they can jump into a good living instantly. They have no idea of the cost of preparing a lecture tour, or that committees will not waste their money on unknown persons. It is surprising how many illiterate persons think they can read. They generally are fortified with profuse puffs, written by their teachers—so-called professors of elocution—whose names would not draw enough of an audience to pay for the gas.

The tendency now is to lighter entertainments than formerly. People want to be amused rather than instructed. They prefer the humorists, and there are even grades of taste in this respec; but in some way or other the people want to be made to laugh. The days of the lecture platform as a public educator seen to be passing away.

In the same way that they are often aspirants to the stage who pay good round sums to the managers to bring them out, there are aspirants to the platform and reading desk who invest capital and fail.

There are now so many good performers that a new one has an up-hill task. Committees are on the alert for variety. Conservative town, sthat formerly would only have staid lecturers, now demand a little touch of drama, some comic business, a little magic or an operetta.

A stranger who goes into a town unknown generally loses his advertising and other expenses. People don't like to buy 'a pig in a poke' in lecturing any more than in anything else.—Exchange.

THE New York Clipper lately cited the case of Capt. Jacob Schmidt, of Tompkinsville, Staten island, N. Y., who had been a great sufferer from rheumatism for many years. He used St. Jacobs Oil with splendid success.

"Blode Up."

A young fellow having an odor of the stable about him, entered a Detroit photographer's establishment and explained that he would like to have about one photograph taken, but on learning the price concluded to invest in a tintype. After taking his seat in the chair, he shut one eye, drew his mouth around to one side, stuck up his nose, and patiently waited for the operator, whose astonishment caused him to exclaim:

"Good gracious! but you don't want to look that way to get a picture. Nobody will know you from Sitting Bull."

"You go ahead," was the reply.

"Do you want me to take such a phiz as that?"

"I do."

The artist took it. It beat Sol Smith Russell all to pieces, and was highly satisfactory to the sitter, who paid for it and said:

"You see, I had a sort of object in this. Came here from Allegany County six months ago—engaged to a gal out there—found a gal here I like better—got to sever old ties—see?"

"But what has the picture got to do with old ties?" asked the artist.

"Lots—heaps! I've writ to her that I was blode up here and disfigured for life. She's awful proud. When she gets this and sees how the explosion wrecked me, she'll hunt another lover quicker'n wink—see? How do you like the plot? Just gaze on this picture and tell me that Mary Ann won't send back my letters by first train!"

He posted the picture. The letter was brief but explained it all. It said: "My ever dear girl—I enclose my picture that you may see how awful bad I was hurt, tho' I know you will love me just the same."

"Ever see that game worked afore?" he asked of the artist as he licked the stamp on the letter.

"No—never did."

"Course you never did. It's mine. It struck me the other day while I was greasin' a wagon, and I think it's boss. Blode up—see? Picture right here to prove it, and she'll write back that she has at last concluded to yield to her parents wishes and marry a young man out there who owns eleven steers, a hundred sheep and an eighty-acre lot."

FROM the Atlanta (Ga.) Sunday Phonograph: The editor of the Pikes County News has been cured of rheumatism by St. Jacobs Oil.

Texas Pecan Crop.

Heretofore the pecan crop, as a source of revenue, has attracted but little attention. No care whatever has been taken with the trees; in fact, in many localities trees fifty to 100 years old have been cut down solely to obtain the nuts. Before the civil war the export from the port of Indianola alone was reported at $100,000; now it is estimated that the amount actually gathered exceeds $2,000,000 in value. With proper care of the trees and systematic gathering of the crop it is believed that $10,000,000 could be realized annually. Millions of bushels are lost every year by falling on the ground and rotting or devoured by hogs, squirrels, turkeys and other animals and birds. Except in inclosed pastures no claim is made by the owners of the land to the fruitage of the trees. Mexicans and negroes are the pecan gatherers, and in some districts white children.—Texas Land and Railway Journal.

Cured of Drinking.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, which had so prostrated him that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst, took away the appetite for liquor, made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups. I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. official, Chicago, Ill.—Times.

They Were Built to Sell.

The married daughter of a contractor comes to visit her father and on going out with him for a walk to the scene of his latest labors bursts out ecstatically:

"Oh, pa, what lovely houses those are that you have been building—those cottages along the bank of the river. I have an awful great mind to take one and bring the children here and spend the summer near you."

The contractor (deeply affected)—"No, no my child! Never! Not that I would not fain have you near me every day and hour, but, darling, those villas were not built to live in—they were built to sell!"

SUFFERERS from Constantinople should make one trial of Kidney-Wort and be cured.

THE Journal of Science says that, in order to account for the mysterious disappearances of persons, now so common, a French writer suggests the existence of a disease not yet recognized, which, without any previous warning, suddenly resolves the patient into vapor. He even professes to have witnessed the disappearance of a friend with whom he was walking. A very simple consideration overturns this hypothesis. We can scarcely assume that the disease causes the sudden vaporization of clothing, boots, keys, knives, money, trinkets, and all that the patient had about him at the time of his disappearance. Yet no one has ever found in the street a complete suit of clothes from which the body of the wearer escaped.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness.

The Illuminator.

The existence of good feeling on the part of the French Nation for the people of this country is shown by the presentation of a colossal bronze figure of Freedom holding aloft the torch of Liberty. Beauty, with usefulness, is combined in this immense work of art, as the bright, blazing torch will serve the purpose of a beacon light in the harbor of New York. There is another figure which will challenge larger praise and admiration than even the great work above referred to. It is illustrated herewith, and represents the aged and worthy ST. JACOB, holding aloft in his hand that beacon which will guide aright all sailing upon the sea of life, whose waters abound with the shoals and dangerous places of sickness and disease. The light it casts is designed to show that ST. JACOBS OIL is the true and trusted means of keeping the body on its proper course, and of easing and "righting it should it be unfortunately cast upon the shoals of rheumatism or other painful ailments. Thousands of grateful ones throughout the world have proved the value and felt the good of this Great German Remedy, and are glad to recommend it to all needing the services of just such a remedy. In this connection Mr. John S. Briggs, a well known citizen of Omaha, Neb., told a newspaper man that he was terribly afflicted with an acute attack of rheumatism in his back. The disease, which had been preying upon him for years had drawn him out of shape. He resorted to every remedy known to physicians, but found no relief until he tried ST. JACOBS OIL, one bottle of which effected a complete and radical cure. Another case may justify reference:

A VETERAN SEAMAN'S TROUBLE.

Editor Inter-Ocean, Chicago, Ill.: I send you this, feeling that the information conveyed will be of material benefit to many of your readers. One of our oldest citizens, Captain C. W. Boynton, the Government Light-house keeper at this point, is probably one of the oldest seamen in America, having sailed twenty-six years on salt water. After this forty-six years' service his eyesight failed him and he kept the Light at Chicago until the Government built the Gross Point Light here, when he was transferred. While seated in my store this morning the Captain volunteered the following written statement: "This is to certify that I have been afflicted with rheumatism for twenty (20) years, both in my side and limbs. I am happy to say that, after using less than two bottles of the ST. JACOBS OIL, I am entirely free from pain, though still limping somewhat when walking, from long force of habit. C. W. BOYNTON." Referring to the foregoing facts, I might allude to numerous similar cases that have come to my notice, but "a word to the wise is sufficient."

KIDNEY WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES! WHY?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Stork, of Junction City, Kansas, says, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular Physicians had been trying for four years.

Mrs. John Arnall, of Washington, Ohio, says her boy was given up to die by four prominent physicians and that he was afterwards cured by Kidney-Wort.

M. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was not expected to live, being bloated beyond belief, but Kidney-Wort cured him.

Anna L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says that seven years suffering from kidney troubles and other complications was ended by the use of Kidney-Wort.

A DISEASE which is more Universal than Fever and Ague. No remedy has yet been discovered which has proven so universally successful in curing Fever and Ague as KRESS' FEVER TONIC. In many sections of country the atmosphere is filled with malaria, arising from great pools of water left standing from the overflow during last spring, which, becoming stagnant, throw out malaria to so great an extent that in order to prevent CHILLS and FEVER from gaining a hold on the system, it is necessary that a remedy should be used which will counteract the evil, and in cases where the disease has taken hold of the system, effect a cure. For this purpose there is nothing equal to KRESS' FEVER TONIC. It is the Best & Safest Remedy known, and wherever used has given perfect satisfaction. In its composition neither Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnia, nor Mercury is used. It will cure the most stubborn cases of AGUE in a very short time and leave the system strong and vigorous to resist MALARIA. One bottle usually is all that will be required, unless in aggravated cases, or where the patient is continually exposed to malarial poison, in such cases, [illegible] may be required. [illegible] does it will [illegible] invariably counteract [illegible] tendency to chills. KRESS' FEVER TONIC is no new remedy, but has long been tested, and thoroughly tested by experience to do all that is claimed for it. In an other column will be found the experience of parties who have used it, to which we ask your attention. Price One Dollar a Bottle, and is for sale by Druggists, every where. TRY IT! If you have the slightest tendency to SHAKE! TRY IT! IT WILL CURE YOU!

A Wonderful Lake in Iowa.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

The greatest wonder in the state of Iowa, and perhaps in any other state, is what is called the Walled lake, in Wright county, twelve miles north of Dubuque city.

The lake is two or three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen feet wide at the bottom, and five feet wide on the top. Another fact is the size of the stone used in the construction, all of them varying in weight from three tons to one hundred pounds. There is an abundance of stones in Wright county, but surrounding the lake to the extent of five or ten miles, there are none. No one can form an idea of the means employed to bring them to the spot, or who constructed it.

Around the entire lake is a belt of wood-land half a mile in length, composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted there at the time of the building of the wall.

In the spring of the year 1865 there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in the vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 2,800 acres; depth of water as great as 25 feet.

The water is clear and cold, soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from nor where it goes, yet it is always clear and fresh.

What Became of "Ma."

[Saturday Review.]

The "labor question" and the question of taxation are the great practical problems of Fijian life. It is not easy to ascertain how far "blackbirding" or cooley-stealing prevailed before the annexation. Mr Cooper's own accounts of the matter seem rather inconsistent. At present the governor does his best to secure the return of important laborers to their homes when their term has expired. Mr. Cooper thinks that these half-civilized returned emigrants raise the moral tone of their neighbors. It is certain that the Solomon Islanders seem to have become rather more than less savage during recent years. An amusing story is told of an imported Polynesian nurse who returned to her own people after she had served her time. A "recruiting agent" met her, and asked her if she would return to Fiji.

"Well," said the girl, "I like it, but I don't know if my pa will let me go."

"O, I see; the old folks live here, eh?"

"My pa lives here, but ma's dead."

"O, how did the old lady die?"

"Gentlemen come visiting, and pa get jealous; so he fight and kill ma, then he put her in a lovo (or oven,) and pa and his friends eat poor ma all up."

Holloway's Pills.

Never despair—something that never fails—Fever and Ague—To the sick it is of little consequence how they are cured, whether from a rational view of the disease or by the rules defined for the guidance of the profession, so long as the cure is certain and expeditious. To a suffering man the question on the relative merits of quinine or calomel is uninteresting. The faculty may wrangle and discuss their various theories, but Dr. Holloway's treatment dispels doubt ere the disciples of Esculapius have finished the first stage. Holloway's Pills are the only remedies which effect a speedy and radical cure without danger of a relapse. Read the advertisement elsewhere.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HAYDOCK surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. Boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

How Watches are Made.

It will be apparent to any one, who will examine a SOLID GOLD WATCH, that aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large porportion of the precious metal used is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply the necessary solidity and strength. The surplus gold is actually needless so far as UTILITY and beauty are concerned. In JAMES BOSS' PATENT GOLD WATCH CASES, this WASTE of precious metal is overcome, and the SAME SOLIDITY AND STRENGTH produced at from one-third to one half of the usual cost of solid cases. This process is of the most simple nature, as follows: a plate of nickle composition metal, especially adapted to the purpose, has two plates of SOLID GOLD soldered one on each side. The three are then passed between polished steel rollers, and the result is a strip of heavy plated composition, from which the cases, backs, centres, bezels etc., are cut and shaped by suitable dies and formers. The gold in these cases is sufficiently thick to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and enameling; the engraved cases have been carried until worn perfectly smooth by time and use without removing the gold.

THIS IS THE ONLY CASE MADE WITH TWO PLATES OF SODID GOLD AND WARRANTED BY SPECIAL CERTIFICATE.

Ancient Physic.

THE SCIENCE OF MEDICINE AS DEVELOPED TWO CENTURIES AGO.

[Virginia, (Nev.) Enterprise.]

W. A. Perkins, druggist of this city, has a curious old book, published in London in 1657. It is entitled, "The Expert Doctor's Dispensatory; or The Whole Art of Physick Restored to Practice," with the following sub-title: "The Apothecary's Shop and Chyrurgion's Closet Opened; wherein all honest and safe practices are maintained and dangerous mistaken discovered, and what out of subtility to their own profits they have endeavored to reserve to themselves, now at last impartially divulged and made common. Together with a strict survey of the dispensatories of the most remowned colleges of the world, which, being corrected, are here epitomized and drawn into an easier and useful method for practice."

Following are some few of the more agreeable among the many agreeable remedies with which our forefathers were dosed; "The fat of a cat; a plaster of mashed frogs; brain of a hare, roasted; fat of serpents; the fat of men, foxes, vipers and dogs; oil of vipers; grease of a mummy; ashes of a man's skull, ashes of glass, of earth-worms, of an ass's liver, hedgehog, scorpion's blood, cheese-mites, wood-lice, beetles, warts off a horse's hoof, pike-jaws, crawfish, the stoppings of a snail's shell in winter, crab's eyes, kingfishers, stones from an ox-gall; blood of a goat in wine; turtle-dove roasted, with its belly filled with cinnamon; man's skull powdered and stewed in the milk of a sow; spider's web, especially if it be such as is full of fine flour of mill or bakehouses; clots of blood 'dried;' hair of horses and men burnt; burnt sponge; soot scraped from the mouth of an oven, or off a brasse pot; oyle of frogs. The 'oyle' of frogs is recommended to those who are troubled with sleeplessness. It is said to operate 'by sending mild vapors up to the head, to temper the hot, dry and sharp fumes that are in the brain.' We all know (who have ever handled frogs) that they are cool to the touch.

For taking away scars are recommended "Fats and marrowes of men, asses, harts, and the fat of fish Thymallus."

For wounds, "crawfish, mummy and crab's eyes" are recommended; also "earth-worms and hare's hair burned."

For "extracters' for drawing out splinters and other things fastened in wounds," we are told there is nothing like "land snailes beaten with their shells the head of a lizard powdered, or a fox tongue prepared as its lungs are moystened with red wine." Loadstone "draws forth iron and amber draws straw."

For a "moderate" emetic "the shavings of one's own nails drank in wine" are recommended.

Many things heartily recommended for various diseases are unmentionable to ears polite.

Why Wear Plasters?

They may releave, but they can't cure that lame back, for the kidneys are the trouble, and you want a remedy to act directly on their secretions, to purify and restore their healthy condition. Kidney-Wort has that specific action, and at the same time it regulates the bowels perfectly. Don't wait to get sick, but get a package to-day, and cure yourself. United States Boundary Line.

The northern boundary of this country is marked by stone cairns, iron pillars, wood pillars, earth mounds and timber posts. A stone cairn is 7½ feet by 8 feet, and earth mound 7 feet by 14 feet, an iron pillar 8 feet high, 8 inches square at the bottom and 4 inches at the top, timber posts 5 feet high and 8 inches square. There are 382 of these marks between the Lake of the Woods and the base of the Rocky Mountains. That portion of the boundary which lies east and west of the Red River valley is marked by cast-iron pillars at even mile intervals. The British place one every two miles, and the United States one between each British post. Our pillars or markers were made at Detroit, Michigan. They are hollow iron castings, three-eights of an inch in thickness, in the form of a turncated pyramid, 8 feet high, 8 inches at the bottom and 4 inches at the top, as before stated. They have at the top, a solid pyramid cap, and at the bottom, an octagonal flange one inch in thickness. Upon the opposite faces are cast in letters two inches high the inscriptions, "Convention of London," and "October 20, 1818." The inscriptions begin about four feet, six inches above the base, and read upward. The interior of the hollow posts are filled with well-seasoned cedar posts, sawed to fit, and securely spiked through spike holes cast in the pillars for that purpose. The average weight of each pillar when completed, is 85 pounds. The pillars are all set four feet in the ground, with their inscripiton to the north and south, and the earth well settled and stamped about them. For the wooden posts well seasoned logs are selected, and the portion above the ground painted red, to prevent swelling and shrinking. These posts do very well, but the Indians cut them down for fuel, and nothing but iron will last very long. Where the line crosses lakes, monuments of stone have been built, the bases being in some places 18 feet under water and the tops projecting 8 feet above the lake's surface at high water mark. In forests the line is marked by felling the timber a rod wide and clearing away the underbrush. The work of cutting through the timbered swamps was very great, but it has been well done, and the boundary distinctly marked by the commissioners the whole distance from Michigan to Alaska.

General Grant's Lion Hunt.

It has just leaked out that while Gen. Grant was traveling in Asia he expressed a desire to get a shot at a lion. Not wishing to expose him to danger, the natives secured a stuffed lion, set it up in a jungle, and then took the illustrious traveler out for a hunt. When the beast was sighted the general was all excitement, and crawling up to a favorable position, began to blaze away at the animal, with no perceptible effect. After firing about twenty shots, he began to get mad, and taking off his coat, he settled down for a regular seige. Fearing his wrath when he discovered the sell, the attendants attempted to induce him to give up the attempt to kill the beast, telling him that it bore a charmed life, and that he could not possibly injure it. He told them to go to thunder; that he was after blood, and was going to have it. After a vain fusilade of half an hour he rose to his feet, gnashing his teeth with rage, threw his suspenders off his shoulders, rolled up his sleeves, and grabbed his rifle by the barrel so he could use it as a club. The attendants again begged him to desist, but he politely, though forcibly informed them, that he would hav that cuss or leave his honored remains strewn promiscuously all though that jungle; and with a wild cry of "I fight it out on this lion if it takes all summer!" he rushed upon the beast and with one well-directed blow laid it over on its side. Then he chased the native attendants for six miles, but being better acquainted with the country, they got away from him in safety.—[Detroit Free Press.

THE INDIANA

WEEKLY SENTINEL!

Has been enlarged and improved until it is now the LARGEST and the VERY BEST paper published in the west.

THE WEEKLY SENTINEL is in all regards a superior eight page 56-column paper.

The merits of the Sentinel, as a general newspaper are so well known, that commendation of it is deemed superfluous. We will add, however, that the management has arranged and fully determined that no paper shall furnish so great a practical value to its patrons for the money.

In its news, its editorials, its literary and miscellany—in a word, in its general reading—it shall not be surpassed by any paper circulated in the state. It will be particularly adapted to the family circle. No reading, thinking man in the state can afford to do without the Weekly Sentinel at the small cost at which it is furnished.

THE SENTINEL will continue to be the same earnest advocate of true American democracy in the future that it has been in the past; indeed, it proposes to battle more vigorously than ever against the party of centralization and corruption. Vast monopolies own and control the republican party, and in the future, as in the past, it cannot do otherwise than foster class legislation, thereby trampling upon the interests of the producing masses.

The motto of the Sentinel is: "Hold fast to the democratic faith and battle on," and as certainly as God reigns victory will ultimately be with the people.

The republican party cannot survive its crimes. Its monumental iniquities cast their shadows athwart the land. Just men of all political opinions are horrified at its colossal crimes. Its ambition is for plunder and imperial power. Its downward progress, from the days when Grant's thieves organized the whisky ring to raise a corruption fund, to Guiteau's tragedy, has been marked by infamy at every step. From the days when John Sherman [illegible] federal officers for perjuries to seat Hayes, crimes have followed each other in rapid succession. The flood-tide of star route thieves, treasury thieves, navy department thieves, war department thieves and signal service thieves, and Indiana has had Dorsey, the notorious star route thief and secretary of the republican national committee, in the state, organizing crimes to carry the state against the will of the people. The Sentinel will invite the people of Indiana to contemplate these republican methods to obtain and maintain power. It will keep its readers informed with regard to republican fights for spoils, the mutual denunciations of its factions, their criminations and recriminations, their mutual hates which culminated in the assassination of the president, thereby capping the climax of horrors and completing the work of infamy.

With this record of crime, the republican party asks for a new lease of power, and it will be the high ambition of the Sentinel to defeat its purposes and emancipate the country from its debauching grasp.

THE SENTINEL, in addition to its superiority, is, moreover, an Indiana paper, devoted to, and specially represents Indiana's interests, political and otherwise, as no foreign paper will or can do, and ought, therefore, to have preference over the papers of other states, and we ask democrats to bear this in mind, and select YOUR OWN STATE PAPER when you come to take subscriptions and make up clubs.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

GEN. BOULANGER, one of the French visitors, awoke in a Philadelphia hotel to find a burglar standing beside a table containing his watch and money. The General seized his sword and held his prisoner until the arrival of the police. The fellow proved to be William Marston, a noted criminal, and he was promptly indicted, convicted and sentenced to serve three years in the penitentiary....Ezra P. Cook and his wife, a very old couple, were found dead in their home near Bellows Falls, Vt. It is supposed that Mrs. Cook, who was of unsound mind, administered poison to her husband and then committed suicide by striking herself with some deadly weapon.

THE last of the seven huge piers for the bridge between Albany and Greenbush has been finished. The structure is to cost $650,000, will be about one-third of a mile in length, and has a draw of 400 feet. It will be used by the West Shore railway, now in process of construction.

THE extensive brewery of Mayer & Bachman, at Clifton, Staten Island, was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $600,000, and hundreds of employes are idle.

THE Mechanics' National Bank, of Newark, N. J., which was regarded as the strongest in that city, has suspended. At a conference of the directors the cashier, O. L. Baldwin, stated that it would be useless to proceed with business. An offer by those present to subscribe $500,000 was met by the statement that $2,000,000 would not suffice. It appearing that Baldwin had made way with everything but a heavy safe, a director caused his arrest by the United States Marshal. While confined in his residence the cashier was waited upon by Commissioner Keasby, and admitted to bail in $25,000. He then stated that in 1873 he began to make loans to C. Nugent & Co., morocco manufacturers, without security or the knowledge of the directors, and soon found himself in the power of the firm, who promised to restore all advances and protect him. The loans steadily increased to $2,000,000, the void being placed in the accounts of the Mechanics' Bank, of New York. Baldwin claims to have lost nothing by speculation. Under the justice administered in New Jersey, the accommodating cashier will doubtless end his days in prison. The bank has a building worth $50,000. Joseph A. Halsey was President of the institution, which has been established for fifty years, and has of late paid 7-per-cent. semi-annual dividends. On charge of aiding in the wreck of the bank, Christopher Nugent has been arrested, and gave $25,000 bail.

FURTHER investigation into the affairs of the Mechanics' National Bank of Newark shows that the amount of the stealings is $2,600,000. There is a pretty general indisposition to believe that Nugent & Co. received anything like this amount, and the belief gains that Baldwin lost the money in stock speculation. The usual number of persons who knew all about the condition of affairs a month ago have turned up. Baldwin says he has been a fool, but not a knave.

THE WEST.

THE steamer Jennie Gilchrist, a stern-wheel packet, left for LeClaire, fifteen miles above Davenport, Iowa, with twenty-eight persons on board. She in had tow two barges heavily loaded with freight, and was struggling hard against the current. When about sixty rods above the draw of the Government bridge, at Davenport, for some reason unknown, her engine refused to work. The boat immediately swung around and drifted helplessly against the bridge, was careened, filled with water, and the lights extinguished. The terrible screams of the passengers attracted the attention of the guard at the draw-bridge, who sounded the distress-signal. Skiffs were immediately sent out, and succeeded in picking up several passengers and the crew. Six or seven persons are known to have found a watery grave.

THREE desperadoes in jail at Tierra Amarilla, Col., planned to kill the guard and escape. When the fact became known the citizens lynched the trio, named Lockhardt, Coulter and Slim....J. Hinckley, agent of the Utah and Northern railway at Franklin, Idaho, was shot dead by a band of masked robbers.

THE wreck of the steamer Jennie Gilchrist floated down the Mississippi to Buffalo, and lodged against a tree. The corpse of William Wendt, of Cordova, was found in the cabin. The body of Mrs. Mary J. Camp was recovered twelve miles below Davenport. C. F. Johnson, of Moline, Ill., and John McCall, of Le Claire, Iowa, are known to have perished, making thirteen victims.

THE advent at Omaha of Paul Boyton on his swim down the Missouri river had the effect of turning the head of one unfortunate fellow, who jumped into the river while the crowd were following Boyton to his hotel, and, after swimming for a time, was drowned.

CHIEF JUSTICE HUNTER, of Utah, has decided that no naturalization papers have ever been issued to Congressional Delegate George Q. Cannon in that Territory, and that he is not a citizen of the United States.... A committee of the National Association of Underwriters, after studying the deficiencies of the St. Louis fire department, has given notice that rates of insurance will be advanced.... At the Vulcan steel works, St. Louis, the fall of an elevator crushed James McGrail to a jelly, fractured Pat Dailey's skull, and broke three ribs for James Marrion. An hour previously Hugh Hogan was roasted with molten metal.

ONE of the largest gold-bearing mineral discoveries was recently made in Summit district, Colorado, by Judge Thos. M. Bowen, of Del Norte, Col. It is pronounced the most remarkable and valuable gold mine being worked in the United States. Assays are now running over $20,000 in gold per ton. Bowen was recently offered $3,000,000 cash by Eastern capitalists for a half interest in the property, which he refused....It is estimated that the recent overflow of the Mississippi has caused damages between Keokuk, Iowa, and Louisiana, Mo., amounting to $2,000,000.

SMALL-POX is epidemic in Stearns county, Minn., and the physicians of the State Board of Health are bending all their energies to confine it to the districts now infected, and to eventually root it out altogether. They encounter considerable difficulty on account of the ignorance of the inhabitants, who look on the disease as a visitation of Providence.... The Minnesota House of Representatives passed the Senate bill for the adjustment of the bonded debt, with an amendment that the rate of interest on the new bonds shall not exceed 5 per cent.....The Phœnix planing-mill at St. Louis, owned and operated by George Breckinridge, was destroyed by fire. The loss is placed at $50,000. The insurance is $20,000.

THE SOUTH.

ALLEN JOHNSON (colored) was hanged at Charlotte, N. C., for the murder of an old blind negro named Crump in January of last year. The murder was committed in order to get possession of a little money which Crump was known to possess....Robert Rich, a mail messenger at Burnside, Ky., is charged with rifling registered letters valued at over $100,000.

COL. ALEXANDER C. YELL, one of the leading spirits of Arkansas, died at his home in Benton county..... Edgefield Court House, S. C., has been almost wholly wiped out by an incendiary conflagration, which raged all day. Only three stores are left to mark the site of the town. The flames broke out just before daybreak in the livery stable of the Tillman Hotel. The loss is estimated at over $100,000, which is distributed among thirty-five persons. Senator M. C. Butler lost his law library. Edgefield is about sixty miles from Columbia, in the midst of cotton plantations, and had a population of about 1,000.

A PARTY of officers and a posse of sixteen well-armed men made a raid on a house near Adairsville, Ky., to capture the James brothers, but found they had fled....Jeff Davids, a negro, 70 years of age, living near Abbeville, S. C., was five years ago convicted of murdering his former master. Five times has the prisoner been placed on the scaffold for execution, and as many times respited through distrust of the circumstantial testimony. A second trial closed with his being set at liberty.

SEVERAL colored men of Sharkey county, Miss., on their way to attend a fusion meeting, were fired on from ambush, Perry Thompson being killed and two others dangerously wounded.

GENERAL.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which has been fighting Vanderbilt on passenger rates between Chicago and the seaboard, now resorts to a different sort of warfare, one in which increased speed will be the weapon of offense. The Pennsylvania announces a new arrangement, to be known as the "limited express train," to consist wholly of Pullman palace cars, which will make the run from Chicago to New York in twenty-six hours' actual running time. A slightly increased rate of fare will be charged.

APACHES have appeared on Mexican soil, where they killed a family near Magdalena. Gen. Otero sent out a force of troops to co-operate with the Americans.

JOSEPH CAMPBELL, at Bluffton, Ind., and Miss Louisa Kelsey, at Celina, Ohio, were married by telegraph, there being a minister and a wedding party at each end of the wire. .....Valentine Yeske, a Cincinnati butcher, made a murderous assault on his wife with a knife, gashing her throat in a fearful manner. He then drew the knife across his own throat, inflicting what is believed to be a fatal wound. His wife will probably recover. Yeske had been drinking for several days.

DR. RICE, of Merton, Wis., has been subpœnaed as a witness in the trial of Guiteau, to testify that he examined him three years ago, and found him suffering from softening of the brain.

LARGE purchases of Confederate bonds are being made in Philadelphia for English customers. The Treasury Department has information that interest on the fund in the Bank of England to the credit of the Confederate States is annually collected by Jeff Davis and Judah P. Benjamin. London capitalists have retained Mr. Benjamin to recover the money in payment of Confederate bonds, which accounts for the speculation in the article. It is announced that Solicitor Raynor will endeavor to have the deposit turned over to the United States....Another search vessel, the United States ship Alliance, has returned without finding any traces of the Arctic cruiser Jeannette. Commander Wadleigh reports that the ice off the coast of Greenland has been heavier and extended much further south this year than usual.

A PANAMA letter states that the canal builders are still suffering from yellow fever. There is some excitement among the Colombians anent the threatened employment of French convict labor, which would necessitate the introduction of French troops....In Augusta, Ga., Confederate bonds have been sold at from $10 to $11 per $1,000. The Pall Mall Gazette states that not a single penny is in the Bank of England to the credit of the late Confederacy....At Castle Garden, N. Y., 39,264 emigrants landed during the past month, an increase of 8,562 over the arrivals of the preceding month.

GEN. DRUM, in his annual report to the General of the Army, says the losses of the army during the year were: Deaths, 248; discharges, 6,564; desertions, 2,361; total, 9,173. Number of recruits assigned, 3,805; number of soldiers re-enlisted, 1,964; total, 5,769. This shows an increase of 1,260 discharges, 18 deaths and 318 desertions. The General recommends a change in the method of promotion to the rank of field officer below the rank of Colonel, and this end, he thinks, can only be attained by promotion in the army instead of by commission in a particular regiment.... Guiteau, the assassin, is excited because his borther-in-law is pleading insanity in his behalf. He insists that the Almighty inspired him to kill President Garfield.

COL. GEORGE COWIE, Chief of the Fifth Auditor's office in the Treasury Department, was requested to resign for passing an illegal claim for $2,000....John Walling, a lunatic from Colesville, Pa., who was once arrested in Washington and sent home, reappeared at the White House, fully armed, with the intention of killing President Arthur and seating Dr. John Noebling in the executive chair. It required several men to take a revolver from the madman, when he became as meek as a lamb, and was sent to the Government Asylum. He had been living quietly at the capital, and it is strange that he had not attacked the President on one of his daily drives.

A DECISION made by Attorney General MacVeagh, of importance to those interested in mines, is that the President has no legal right to include in reservations of land for Government purposes mines which have been located in accordance with legal forms.

CAVEATS on file in the Treasury Department show that there are outstanding $2,541,000 in stolen registered bonds, for which new ones have been issued. It has been discovered that thieves lend their plunder to dishonest officials of banking and other large corporations, to be filed away as legitimate securities, receiving as compensation a sum equal to the legal interest. The Metropolitan Bank, of New York, recently found among its assets $50,000 in stolen registered bonds, placed in the vaults by a middleman of the thieves, and the offender is serving a term in prison....In his annual report, Gen. Hazen, chief signal officer, states there has been a decided improvement in the weather predictions made by his department. With regard to the forecasts made for the benefit of cotton growers, he says he was obliged to reduce the number of signal stations on account of insufficiency of the appropriation..... Attorney General MacVeagh protests that he can not be justly charged with abandoning the star-route cases, as he long ago gave notice that he would only take them to the Grand Jury, and employ eminent counsel to prosecute them. The ringsters now assert that MacVeagh has skipped out of the row, and that James is preparing to follow.

POLITICAL.

JUDGE FOLGER will not enter on his duties as Secretary of the Treasury until the cases now pending before the New York Court of Appeals are disposed of.

SECRETARY WINDOM is said to have proposed to President Garfield at Long Branch, the week before the latter was shot, a plan of civil-service reform for the Treasury Department. This plan, which met with the approval of the late President, proposed to allot to each State a number of appointments; the appointment of a committee of three in each State before whom candidates for the places should be examined at least once a year, the examination to be so conducted as to test the experience and capacity of the applicants; appointments to be made from among those who stood highest on the list, according as vacancies to which the State of the applicants was entitled occurred. It was also contemplated that, other things being equal, soldiers, their widows and children should have a preference.

THE President has appointed Clifford Stratham Postmaster at Lynchburg, Va., in place of Wilson, suspended, in accordance with the programme arranged by the last Senatorial caucus.

THE canvas for the Speakership of the House will commence soon, as prominent members are already engaging quarters. The caucus strength of the Republicans is estimated at 150 votes, with 76 necessary to secure a nomination. Ex-Congressman Rainey, colored, of South Carolina, and McPherson, of Pennsylvania, are candidates for the Clerkship.

THE President has received a number of protests against the retention of Public Printer Defrees, urging the appointment of a younger and more active man....It is said President Arthur has offered the position of Secretary of the Interior to James A. Williamson, of Iowa, formerly Commissioner General of the Land Office....The New York Herald publishes an interview with Secretary Blaine relative to the new Cabinet. He says it will be "Grant from top to bottom after Jan. 1." Blaine will retire in December.

FOREIGN.

THE result of the German elections is a rebuke to Bismarck and the Conservative-Clerical coalition. The Government lost many seats to the various factions of the Liberal party. The Progressists gain more largely than any other faction, though the Socialists developed unexpected strength in many constituencies. Bismarck's son, William, was defeated for re-election at Mulhausen by the Liberal candidate, who polled 5,000 more votes. It is thought that the Opposition may prove strong enough to make necessary another dissolution.... The Ladies' Leagues are to be suppressed in Ireland. A parcel containing nine pounds of dynamite was found in an Irish railway car. The Government has offered a reward of £300 for the arrest of the murderer of Maloney. At Carrick-on-Shannon an armed band entered the houses of the tenantry and threatened the rent-payers with death.

RETURNS from the country districts of Germany confirm previous impressions as to the result of the late election. The Conservative-Clerical combination has been defeated, Bismarck has been rebuked, and Liberal ideas and principles have achieved a triumph as remarkable as it was unexpected. All the members of the Center and advanced Liberal party of the last Reichstag who presented themselves for re-election have been successful. Several noted Radicals will have an opportunity to discuss Bismarck's policy and principles in the next Parliament.... Two wrecks, involving considerable loss of life, are reported off the Australian coast. The steamer Calcutta, from Melbourne for Sydney, went down, and all on board, twenty-two persons, perished; and the ship Omba, from Batavia for Melbourne, was lost with all hands.....M. Gambetta has accepted a Cabinet position from President Grevy..... The Land Leaguers gathered at Paris hesitate to transfer their official headquarters to French soil. Parnell sends out a protest against the substitution of tenant defense associations for the branch leagues. Some crops gathered by emergency men were maliciously burned at Ballyduff, in presence of a large crowd. While serving summons in County Mayo, the police were attacked by a party of 700, who were fired upon. Many thousand tenants in Westmeath and Roscommon will take advantage of the Land Commission. Cells have been prepared in Armagh jail for Parnell and forty others. Capt. Dugmore, an Englishman, has been arrested under the Coercion act.

FATHER CONWAY, a Sligo priest, was suspended by his Bishop because of his too ardent Land-Leagueism, but his parishioners will have none of it, and declare that no other priest than Father Conway can officiate in their church. Additional troops are being sent to Ireland, and a flying column is held in readiness to proceed to Westmeath or Roscommon. A Dublin butcher named Duff, who killed a policeman in a riot on the 15th of September, has been sentenced to death. Two persons were fatally shot and twenty persons were wounded in a riot at Belmullet, Mayo. A renewal of the disturbances is feared, and reinforcements have been sent forward. The Land Court made their first decision under the new act on the 1st inst. It was in favor of a reduction of rent for the next fifteen years. Sexton has been released from prison on account of ill-health....Heavy snow-storms are reported throughout England, two feet having fallen in some of the midland counties.

FOUR persons have died from the effects of wounds received in the conflict between the people and the police at Belmullet, Mayo, and six more deaths are expected. A further outbreak is looked for. Several thousand applications have been made to the Land Court for rent adjustment. Bishop Butler, of Limerick, it is stated, has intimated to Father Sheehy that he had better not return to the Diocese of Limerick during the present excitement....... At St. Petersburg the police arrested a man and woman engaged in preparing dangerous explosives. The Nihilists are still scattering their socialist publications, in spite of the authorities, even into the barracks of the Imperial Guard. The unhappy Czar has recently received many threatening letters....The negotiations between England and France for a new commercial treaty between the two countries have failed, and the British Commissioners have quit France.

WHO says we are not an enterprising and industrious people? Twenty-seven thousand baby carriages were manufactured in one Massachusetts town last year, and the manufacturers could not fill their orders.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

IN a speech delivered in Dublin, Miss Helen Taylor, the daughter of the great English political economist, John Stuart Mill, said: "Never did Austria commit in her provinces in Italy any atrocities to be compared with those now perpetrated in Ireland under the Gladstone administration. I have traveled much, but the only country where the things happening in Ireland would be possible is that country which is ruled by the Turk."....O'Hagan, the retiring Lord Chancellor of Ireland, intends to largely increase the magistracy, appointing many Catholics. Attorney General Hugh Law will succeed to the Chancellorship. The police of Limerick have been provided with revolvers. A tenant farmer near Corrigan, named Doherty, was murdered in jail after having paid his rent....The people of Alsace and Lorraine are evidently dissatisfied at German rule, and are quite anxious to get back under French rule. At the recent elections the pro-French candidates were elected from every constituency in the two provinces, and by sweeping majorities in all but one instance....The London Times thinks the Confederate bond sensation is entirely due to the action of a clique who are prepared to run up the price of any rubbish wherever there is a chance of alluring the public into joining in the venture.

THE annual report of the Pension Bureau shows that the 30th of June, 1881, there were 268,830 pensioners, a net increase during the year of 18,098. The aggregate annual value of all pensions was $26,769,967. The annual disbursements of the office, however, largely exceed this sum. For instance, the total amount paid for pensions during the year (exclusive of certain arrears in claims allowed prior to Jan. 25, 1879, was $49,723,147, the difference being accounted for by arrears of pensions, or "accrued pensions," covering periods dating back to the discharge in each case of the soldier still living, and in claims of widows or minor children.....In reviewing the business of the treasury for the year, Treasurer Gilfillan says there is no provision of law requiring a specie reserve for the redemption of United States notes, but the stock of coin has been maintained at about 40 per cent. of the greenbacks outstanding..... By order of the President, the pension agency at St. Louis is to be removed to Topeka Jan. 1, and Nathaniel Adams has been appointed Agent. The Pension Bureau reports its aggregate annual burden at $28,769,967....The State Department knows nothing of any Confederate moneys in England, and will not make the new financial craze subject for any diplomatic correspondence.

EXTRA SENATORIAL SESSION.

The Senate, immediately after going into executive session on the 28th ult., resumed the contest over the nomination of Clifford Stratham as Postmaster at Lynchburg, Va. Hill, of Georgia, spoke in opposition to confirmation two hours. The debate was then continued by Morgan, Morrill, Hoar, Sherman and others at great length. The speeches were interspersed with a number of roll-calls on motions to adjourn, and other dilatory proceedings, and were also diversified by a spirited colloquy between Logan and Voorhees as to which of the two had heretofore shown himself the better friend of the Union soldier. The session closed at 2:50 in the morning, without any decided action being taken on the nomination. Most of the time after midnight was taken up calling the roll on various dilatory motions.

On the opening of the Senate, on Saturday, Oct. 29, Mr. Hill, of Georgia, offered a resolution that appointments to Federal offices ought not to be made for the purpose of influencing elections in the States, but objection was made to its consideration. In executive session, several Senators who had been arrested for absenting themselves were arraigned and reprimanded. Messrs. Sherman and Bayard were appointed to wait on the President and learn if he had any further business to place before the Senate. On their return from the Executive Mansion Mr. Bayard offered a resolution of thanks to President pro tem. Davis, which passed unanimously, and an adjournment sine die took place; Mr. Davis acknowledged the compliment in a few words. The Senate confirmed John L. Beveridge as United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago; Sydney H. Ritch, as Surveyor of Customs at Port Jefferson, N. Y.; Frederick Knefler, Pension Agent at Indianapolis; M. C. Eltster, United States Attorney for the Western District of Louisiana; Chales Payson, of Massachusetts, Chargé d'Affaires in Denmark. Coal.

The ancient Britons are believed to have had coal before the Roman invasion; it was not, however, used as fuel in England before, probably, the beginning of the twelfth century. In 1234, Henry III. gave the townsmen of Newcastle leave to dig coals and stones from the common soil; but wood continued to compose the general fuel, at least so long as the forest and thickets afforded an ample supply for that purpose. In the reign of Edward I. the use of coal was forbidden by royal proclamation in consequence of the supposed injurious effect of the smoke. But in spite of this prohibition it continued to be consumed; so that we find in 1376 a regular duty of 3d. per ton levied on all coal brought from Newcastle; soon after which coal was used as fuel in the royal palaces. Since the time of Charles I. it has become almost the only fuel used in London, and most other towns and districts throughout the kingdom. The method of making "coke," by extracting the bituminous quality from coal, was discovered by John Hacket in 1627, who obtained a patent, with the object of rendering coal as useful as wood for fuel in houses, without damaging the furniture or incommoding the inhabitants with smoke.

Carrying His Skeleton Outside.

The tortoise has not accomplished the feat of taking off its flesh and sitting in its bones, but it has done the next thing to it. It is the first example of a skeleton brought to the surface; the back is incapable of movement, and the scales with which a less ambitious reptile is content have developed into the horny shield which covers it, while the bones of the breast have developed into a box capable of containing the creature, head and legs and all. In fact, if we belonged to a past generation when inane plays upon words were taken for wit, we should have most probably said that the chest of the tortoise is a box to hold its trunk. The horny integument of the Schildkrote, "shield-toad," as our Teutonic brethren so graphically call him, is scarcely less rich in associations than his family name, suggesting, among a crowd of other memories, the high tortoise-shell combs, short waists, whist and pump-room manners of the beauties of the Regency. The arrangement for wearing the skeleton outside, and packing the whole body away in the case formed by it, is convenient, but not an absolute protection against foes. The lithe and wily panther, for instance, has a habit of inserting his paw into the opening left for the protrusion of the head, and thus extracting the animal. The turtle, moreover, is at a disadvantage when turned over on its back, which is a favorite method of securing those which come ashore to lay their eggs. Against ordinary dangers the thick shield is a very useful safeguard; but the impossibility of receiving any impression through the skin of the body must have its disadvantages, too. How, for instance, does a tortoise manage in those cases which a cow provides against by a rubbing post? Supposing it to be possible for him to suffer from any such inconvenience, he would be even worse off than a mediæval Knight armed cap-a-pie, beneath whose steel panoply a specimen of the domestic pulex had secreted itself.—Saturday Review.

"Skip-Two."

The most difficult and fashionable form of "solitaire" at cards is called the "skip-two. It is said that the game is so ingenious and interesting that in Eastern cities clubs are formed to play it, communication of success being made by telegraph and letter. The elements of calculation and chance are about equally divided. The possible combinations of the game may be said to be incalculable. The full pack of fifty-two cards is used. They must be thoroughly shuffled to begin with, and then laid out one by one in rows on a large table. Whenever as thus laid out a card of the same suit as the last one in the row is to be found three cards back, "skipping two," it can be placed on top of the last card in the row. This, of course, disturbs the order of the original arrangement, and may bring cards of the same suit within two cards of each other. In that event the two may be placed in a single pile, that to the right being the one on which the other card must be placed. It will often happen that the four suits may be moved in this way at the same time and in doing this the memory is taxed and great ingenuity needs to be frequently displayed so as to combine the cards in such a way as to bring those of the same suit within two cards of each other. When the cards on the table offer no chance to move the player draws from those in the hand until all are exhausted. The result of the game, if successful, is the combination of all those of the same suit in a pile by themselves, thus making four piles. Failure is reached when, the cards in hand being exhausted, there are no further moves and more than four piles remain on the table. Special cards, smaller than those generally used, so as not to take up too much room, are sold with instructions how to play what is really a fascinating home game, requiring considerable exercise of memory and a vast deal of patience.

How Johann Strauss Writes his Waltzes.

Strauss and his wife were enjoying a quiet walk in the park at Schonau recently, when suddenly the composer exclaimed: "My dear, I have a waltz in my head; quick, give me the inside of a letter or an envelope to write it down, before I forget it." Alas! after much rummaging of pockets it was discovered that neither of them had a letter about them—not even a tradesman's account. Johann Strauss' music is considered light, but it weighs heavy as lead on his brain till he can transfer it to paper. His despair was heart-rending. At last a happy thought struck Frau Strauss. She held out a snowy linen cuff, and Johann smiled. In two minutes it was MS. Then its mate shared the same fate, then Frau Strauss' collar, then not another scrap of starched linen on which to conclude the composition. His own linen was limb colored calico—no hope there. Johann became frantic. He was much the worse for having been allowed to write three-quarter of the waltz. He was on the point of dashing home like a madman when another happy thought struck Frau Strauss. She plunged her hand into a capacious pocket, fished out a purse, opened it and displayed, to his delighted gaze, a bran new hundred gulden note. Hurrah! The entire finale was written on the bank-note, and then Johann Strauss relapsed into his usual placidity.

Why We Die Early.

Some of the reasons why men catch cold and find premature graves:

Living nine-tenths of their days in the house; breathing house air; bleaching in the house, and getting thin and sallow in the house. Sitting down to eat, tired and perspiring, and then wondering why nothing "touches the right spot" and one's food seems to do no good.

Soaking and scrubbing oneself to death in daily hot baths.

Taking a health paper and trying to live up to its directions.

Going to bed hungry. Getting crazed with an idea that it is unhealthy to eat nights.

THE peculiar color imparted to silver spoons used in eating eggs and fish, and the blacking of white lead paint in stables, is solely owing to the formation of metalic sulphides.

READY COOKED FISH.

A San Francisco Angler in Hot Water, With Startling Results.

[San Francisco Daily Call.]

Major Max paused slowly, sipped the last drop from his glass, refilled it, and resumed: "You remember the visit I made to Virginia City about a year ago?"

"The time you went up there to see about that mine you were so sure would pay divi—"

"Mrs. Max," interrupted the Major sternly, "that mine has nothing to do with this story;" and after a pause: "One evening, in Virginia City, I was sitting in the International Hotel with Hank Smith, Sam Jones and some other mine superintendents, when Hank said, carelessly: 'Sam, have you been fishing in the hot creek lately?'

"'No,' said Sam; 'I have not lately; I was thinking of trying my luck to-morrow morning.'

"'Fishing in a hot stream?' says I; 'that's something new to me.' They all looked at me in astonishment, and Sam exclaimed, 'Is it possible, Major, you have not been fishing in the hot stream yet? Why, you haven't seen half the wonders of the Comstock yet.' Well, before I went to bed it was arranged that I should be one of a fishing party to visit the hot stream early the next morning. They agreed to supply me with tackle—you know I never was much of a fisherman, and so did not know much about tackle—and at daybreak next morning a crowd of us started off. Sure enough, down in the valley, below the Savage shaft, we struck a hot stream of clear running water. We walked down the stream to a lot of Piute campoodies. A campoodie, Mrs. Max, is a Piute wigwam. In each campoodie sat a Piute buck or squaw, with a long fish pole and line dangling in the creek. As we passed along, the Indians looked up at Jones and Smith and grinned. 'What luck?' said Hank to one of them. 'Plenty luck, heap big lot of fish inside,' answered the Piute with a grin. I wanted to bait my hook and sit down on the bank and fish right away, but they insisted on my sitting in a campoodie four or five yards back from the bank. 'If you sit too near to the bank, the water will overheat you, Major, and besides you will scare the fish,' said Hank. 'Yes, you'll scare the fish,' echoed Sam. So we all sat down in the place a door ought to have been in a campoodie, unreeled our lines and whipped them into stream. Pretty soon I had a bite, and such a bite! My pole bent and quivered and tugged until I could scarcely hold it. 'Play with him, Major, play with him,' yelled Sam, jumping up. 'Reel out, Max,' roared Hank, dancing around like mad. I unhitched the reel and the line whizzed out until it must have reached down to the Sutro Tunnel. 'Play him easy, Major,' said Sam; 'these hot-water fish are h—'

"Major!" interrupted Mrs. Max.

"'Are heavy to catch. Go it gently, old boy.' I confess, wife, that I was very much excited, and began reeling in with all my might. It was like turning a windlass. All the Piutes gathered around, and danced and screamed and gesticulated like the savages they were. Sam and Hank kept up a fusilade of high-keyed advice, and I reeled and unreeled and perspired and puffed—I must have puffed—until I thought my arm would fall off, and I was ready to give it up when a chorus of shrieks by all hands, I landed——

"What, Major?" asked Mrs. Max, breathlessly.

"I landed a tin dinner-pail full of steaming hot fish chowder. After it a steaming and dripping stark naked Indian boy, with an infernal grin, crawled up from behind the bank. I am not sure, but I have my suspicion that that naked imp manipulated my line. I found out at breakfast, which Smith ordered, and which cost me just $37, that the hot stream was the water pumped up from the mines."

Men and Women as Workers.

Leaving laziness and mere lymphatic indifference out of the question, men and women differ much in natural tendency to work. A man may be very far from idle, and yet have none of that agreeable instinct of activity which is born with some people. We must also distinguish between activity in a favorite study or purpose and mere labor. Absolute toil we may put on one side. But we must draw a line everywhere between labor in which the whole of the force and suggestion has to come from within and to which the inducements and solicitations lie outside. Inclination being supposed equal, it is more easy to get through any course of business in which one thing turns up after another to excite the attention and quicken brain and hands, than to carry through a task in which the immediate goals of exertion are not near, and the internal spring of effort has to be wound up from time to time without the help of a tangible, outward Hoc age.

There is an old rhyme—which was probably unknown to Mr. Mill, for in his "Subjection to Women" he treats the point as a new one—which says, "That from rise of morn to set of sun, woman's work is never done." That is quite true; but if it is a hardship, the hardship is mitigated by the fact that woman's household duties have a "concatenation accordingly," in which the solicitation or impulse is supplied from without, with the advantage (which also applies to much of men's ordinary business) that the social feelings count for a good deal in the concatenation and the impulse. It may be noted, meanwhile, that women get through all their duties —and, no doubt, through their highest studies—with less waste of power than men, and with less apparent concern about either pain or uneasiness. This we do not mention as a discovery, for it is commonplace, but as a thing to be borne in mind.—London Spectator.

Practical Arithmetic.

"You can't add different things together," said an Austin school teacher. "If you add a sheep and a cow together, it does not make too sheep or two cows."

A little boy, the son of an Austin avenue milkman, held up his hand, and said:

"That may do with sheep and cows, but if you add a quart of milk and a quart of water, it makes two quarts of milk. I've seen it tried."

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1881.

DAVID DAVIS is a cousin of the late Henry Winter Davis.

GERMANY is overrun with tramps and beggars—an unfailing sign of national distress.

THE erection of the new American hotel in London has commenced. It will occupy nearly an acre on the northern side of Holborn, abutting on Warrick court and Holburn. It is to contain 400 rooms, and will be called the First Avenue Hotel, because it is intended to construct an avenue through the block of the hotel building.

Two covered wagon loads of movers arrived at San Antonio, Tex., the other day. The occupants were two Irish widows with their children. They had come all their way from Des Moines, Iowa, and had been on the way six months. One of the widows naively gave her reason for moving to Texas as because she wanted to get her sons away from the wickedness and corruption of the great cities.

TO GIVE some idea of the extent of the spool-thread business, it is estimated that 20,000,000 dozen spools, or 240,000,000 spools of six-cord thread, were sold last year, beside all three-cord makes and the 500 and 2,400-yard spools that are put up for manufacturing purposes. Two hundred yards to the spool is the popular measure in the United States, while in England spools vary, some having sixty, others 100, 300, 500, and so on.

THE Mexican Government has started a scheme to encourage Italian colonization, which is on a very liberal basis. The contractor will receive $75 per head for each emigrant over 12, and $40 for each child between 5 and 12. The Government furnishes land, houses, implements, work, cow and mare for each family, and 25 cents a day for each person for one year. The colonists are to repay the same in one year.

AN effort is being made by the proprietors of steamships running between this country and Europe to check, if not entirely prevent, the gambling which is constantly going on among the passengers. Poker is the favorite game, and it has been discovered that numerous professional card sharps travel on these boats during the season of heavy passenger traffic for the sole purpose of roping in and defrauding persons with more money than brains.

AN important decision rendered in Cincinnati in regard to the right of teachers in the public schools to administer corporal punishment to pupils. A teacher had slapped an 11-year-old boy on the face with sufficient force to cause a slight swelling of the cheek, and the father of the child had him arrested for assault and battery. The court before which the matter was brought decided that the teacher had no authority under the law to inflict corporal punishment on any pupils in his charge, and a fine was imposed.

THE most rigid examination set on foot by the treasury cattle commission at the great Western centers of the trade have so far failed to disclose the presence of any trace of pleuro-pneumonia, and have only confirmed the members of the commission in the opinion that this disease has not crossed the Alleghenies. The investigation will be continued, however, in a quiet and unostentatious way for some months to come, for the commission have fully determined to take nothing for granted in a matter of such vital importance.

A MAN living in the vicinity of St. Louis recently forwarded to the Postoffice Department eighteen 3-cent stamps, which, having been carried about in his pocket, were nearly reduced to the condition of their original pulp. Accompanying the dilapidated stamps was a letter in which the writer says: "You can see that they have not been used, and that is the reason why I send them to you. If you can, send good ones back; if not, you can probably make it up in some other way; for instance, by appointment to some good position, or—some other way."

REPORTS from England in relation to American export cattle are not very encouraging. Shippers from this side seem to have been particularly unfortunate of late. Consignments have been received at Liverpool in very bad condition, more especially the shipments of butchered stock. Severe storms have made the shipment of cattle on the hoof a precarious and costly venture, and the consequence of these adverse circumstances is that American beef is losing its reputation in England. A circumstance that has contributed to this general result is the fact that pasturage in Great Britain is better than for many years past, and the number of beef cattle grazing at home, especially in England and Scotland, has largely increased. American shippers do not despair, however, and the trade, which has become an established one, will undoubtedly continue.

ROBERT COLLYER says: "This is not a land of peace; it is a nation of armed men. The farmer has a revolver in his bedroom, and the merest boy on the slightest provocation pulls out his pistol. Two hundred years have proved that in civil life, at least, the Quaker is right. No Quaker ever shoots, and no Quaker is ever shot. There should be general disarmament, and we should guard the sale of pistols as we guard the sale of poisons. It is the brutality that comes from the possession of weapons that does the harm." There is some exaggeration in this, but there is also much good, strong sense. The carrying of fire-arms is much too common, and their sale too free.

AN exhibition is in progress in London showing the career of the straw hat, from the field to the fashionable store. The workers are all from Luton Beds, a town of 25,000 people, of whom it is computed that 24,000 are in some way or other connected with the straw trade. The business at Luton dates from 1605, when a colony of straw plaiters, who had emigrated from Lorraine to Scotland, settled at Luton in view of the superior straw raised in the district. A particular sort of knife used in splitting straw was invented by one of the French prisoners detained in England early in the century.

WOMEN are coming to the front as American dramatists. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, the novelist, has written a play of North Carolina life called "Esmeralda," and it is being acted by a strong company sent out from the Madison Square Theater. Its chief character is a Southern planter of the old school. Mrs. Mary H. Fiske is the authoress of "Clarice," in which Katharine Rogers is starring. It is described as a drama of no great originality in incidents, but remarkably witty, well constructed and interesting. Mrs. John C. Fremont is said to be at work on a tragedy which John McCullough may appear in.

REV. DR. THOMAS, of Chicago, in a recent sermon, thus referred to his expulsion from the M. E. church: "What are the points of doctrine on which I have been expelled from the church? The court on trial, by a majority vote of eleven to four, declared my views concerning the Bible to be sound, so that those who hold similar views, and about all the scholarship of the world agrees with me, may not for that cause be expelled; and that leaves only two points to consider. These are the atonement and future punishment. I believe in the divinity and the sacrificial death of Christ, but I deny the penal theory of the atonement; or that Christ was punished for sin, or that the penalty of sin was executed upon Christ. That is all that I deny. I believe in future and proper punishment for all unrepented sin, but I cannot limit all of God's great mercy to this short life, and I hope that the work of salvation may somehow go on in the future."

Interesting Reminiscence.

Sylvester Marsh, of Concord, New Hampshire, projector and principal owner of the White Mountain Railroad, refers in the following extract from a private letter to Hon. J. W. Patterson, to his early experience in the West. It will be read with interest by all interested in the early history of the West:

In speaking of the rapid growth of the West, I have time to mention only a few facts. I left Boston October 2, 1828, for Ohio. It took me seventeen days to reach Ohio, by way of Buffalo, which then had but 3,000 inhabitants. The largest vessels on Lake Erie was sixty tons; now vessels run from Buffalo of over 2,000 tons. The Erie Canal was finished to Buffalo in 1827. Then there was no harbor at Cleveland, but afterward the sand-bar was removed and piers built at the expense of the government. Detroit was only a trading post; the principal business was buying furs and skins from the Indians. The government had troops at Fort Gratiot, east end of Lake Huron. There were also government troops at Mackinaw and Chicago. I went to Ohio in company with Nath'l Pease, whose object was to begin the packing business in the lake region. He only found hogs and cattle enough during the whole winter to make 700 barrels. This was taken to Buffalo in the spring, being the first provisions shipped from the West through the Erie Canal. We carried out on our persons about $7,000 in Boston bills, but were unable to find cattle and hogs enough to use all the money, and carried back a portion of it in the spring. I went from Chicago to Ohio in the winter '33 and '34 on an Indian pony. The stopping places were often thirty miles apart, through Michigan. Chicago had a garrison of eighty soldiers, and 250 or 300 citizens. I began the provision business in a rather novel and primitive way, by hanging my cattle on a large Elm tree, near where the postoffice and custom-house now stand, following the business until I slaughtered 185 large cattle and 500 hogs daily. This was progressive for the times, but in magnitude not to be compared with what has been done since I left the business in '52. Last season there were hogs enough slaughtered in Chicago, if placed in line, single file, to reach 2,000 miles. The principal beef-packing is now done in Kansas and Missouri, five or six hundred miles west of Chicago.

FORT WAYNE Sentinel: Since the law went into effect there has scarcely been a person brought before the Mayor for disorderly conduct. BURGLARS entered the store of Dr. Fowler, in Lockport, about ten miles south of Terre Haute, drilled open the safe, and extracted nearly $2,000 in money belonging to Brill & Connelly, grain dealers, who kept their money in the safe there over night. As soon as the money was secured the thieves set fire to the building and decamped. The store and stock were totally destroyed. Loss about $4,000.

DELANA E. WILLIAMSON, while pleading a case in the Putnam Circuit Court, called the prosecuting witness a liar. The jury returned a verdict of acquittal for Williamson's client, but added the following clause: "We, the regular impaneled jury, being men who love decency and courtesy toward our fellowmen, do say that D. E. Williamson did, without any cause whatever, call a lady, Mrs. Saunders, a liar. We do say that we denounce all such conduct, and respectfully suggest that he be reprimanded by the court."

Lazy Venetians.

The saddest thing in Venice is the absence of newspapers. I have never yet seen one in the hands of anybody but a traveler. The red-faced Venetian sits lazily under the half-drawn curtain that takes the place of door to his shop, waiting for customers, knowing nothing of the world without; the women, barefooted or in toe slippers, shuffle and gossip about, but no one has a newspaper or a book; the somber gondolier quarrels for an extra centesimi from his passenger, but he never heard of America, or of England, and has never read a word even of his own language. All are proud of Venice, even though she is but the dowerless bride of the Adriatic; proud that she was once conquered by Napoleon; proud of the church and square of St. Mark's; proud of the commerce she once had; proud of the palace of the Doges, with its quaint Moorish-Gothic architecture; proud, for aught I know, of the Bridge of Sighs, "a prison and a palace on each hand," and of the horrible machinery of persecution underneath, running down a hundred steps into the gloomy earth, where the early Venice developed all that was devilish in man. But Venice is a bankrupt city, only half fed, a pauper of glass gewgaws and filagree, slowly returning, through gloomy grandeur, to the quagmire from which it sprung.—W. A. Croffut.

Electricity the Benefactor.

Electricity—we shall want a shorter word very soon, oh, philologists! and a better one, "amberishness" being a stupid description, and the proper one, if you knew it, would be "Indra"—can already be made to do many things, though it does them all imperfectly, expensively, or with a certain uneasy hesitation, as if some Demiurgus did not quite know whether he was justified in giving such power as that to such a race of men, and every now and then held up his hand. Man may—and man will, if ten more years be given him—use his new slave upon his favorite work, the only work he permanently and always admires, that of killing [illegible] others wholesale; and Demiurgus [illegible] worried about that. Still, elec[illegible] work is done, and work greater than ringing angry little hotel bells. There is, to begin with, always the telegraph, which does take messages across the Atlantic ahead of time. Then, though the big electric lights flicker and go out unexpectedly, and the little lights are not as bright as they should be, and all the lights are more or less disagreeable in color, and nobody will give you the least dependable hint about the cost, and everybody tells a different story about the distance at which the force begins to tire and slacken, there is certainly light; light, if you will pay the money, almost limitless in quantity, and in practice able to go all the distance from the generator that is wanted. And, slowly, slowly, but quite visibly, the obstacles to the use of that light passes away. Subdivision, the old difficulty, considered insuperable, has been mastered; a measuring instrument for the light consumed has been invented; yesterday, some weeks ago, the color of light that human eyes find easiest was secured; to-day, this very week, the flicker has been conquered by an application Faure's accumulator; and to-morrow, perhaps, the easiest, cheapest and handiest generator of the force will be shown to a Parisian audience, anxious chiefly to know if with electricity substituted for gas theaters will not light up very well indeed.—The Spectator.

THE great Junius said he never knew a rogue who was not unhappy. Of course not. It is the rogues who are not known who are the happy ones. There's plenty in this country.—Steubenville Herald.

THE love of knowledge in a young mind is almost a warrant against the infirm excitement of passions and vices.

"JERUSHA, lovest thou me?" "Yes, Michael, thou knowest I love thee." "Lovest thou me more than all else?" "Yes, Michael, thou knowest I do." "It is well," said he. "But," said she, gazing fixedly at the north star, "who loves Jerusha?" "God, God who hears the widow's and the orphan's cry; God loves Jerusha."—Chicago News Letter.

FOR
NERVOUS DEBILITY

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoro'ly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had suffered from weakness for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $3. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

Missouri, June 21.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer as suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

MRS. GARFIELD and family will remove to Cleveland the first of next month.

A SON of Captain Semmes, of Alabama, was recently married in Louisville, Kentucky.

FIFTY-ONE physicians have registered their names in the clerk's office at Fort Wayne.

IT is said that the aged poet, Longfellow, is daily growing weaker, and more nervous.

STEWART L. WOODFORD, of New York, is down on the new slate for minister to Portugal.

ORTH is getting as hot as a limekiln again. This time he wants to be speaker of the house.

THE president and postmaster-general James, are in New York, where they will remain until after the election.

ONE of the celebrated Astor family, of New York, is running for congress, from one of the New York districts.

JUDGE FOLGER, the new secretary of the treasury, will enter upon his duties about the middle of this month.

THERE is quite a boom in locomotives at present. The great activity that prevails in railroad building, is the cause of the increased demand.

A RECENT inspection of the records kept of the reunions, has developed the fact, that there are but two privates any more.

SECRETARIES LINCOLN and Kirkwood are all that are left to run the government now. The rest are off home or on the wing somewhere.

THE students of the agricultural college at Lansing, Mich., have rebelled, and left the school because the faculty wished them to pay for a lot of watermelons they had stolen.

THE matter of making flour from the seed of broom corn, is again agitated. Experiments av shown that a good article can be produced by careful milling.

COMMISSIONER of pensions, Dudley, has asked for an appropriation of $100,000,000 for his department, and for an immediate deficiency appropriation of $20,000,000.

TUNIS, in the northern part of Africa, is fast becoming a great wheat growing country, and bids fair to furnish to European countries, a large part of the wheat they now get from the United States.

DR. THOMAS, of Chicago, has at last been expelled from the Methodist church for heresy. He does not believe unreasonable, impossible and unnatural things, no difference where found, and has the manhood to say so.

AN old house is still standing at Yorktown, that was occupied by Cornwallis, before the surrender. When Lafayett visited the place in 1824, during his tour through the United States, it was occupied by him, for a short time.

GEN. LONGSTREET, one of the soldiers, who voted the way he shot, as some of the brave (?) ones here tell about, is talked of for a cabinet office. He shot against Gen. Hancock, and, of course, voted against him. We have no fault to find with it, for the reason, that he could do so consistently.

WHOEVER says that David Davis is too thin, is a reckless handler of the truth. He weighs 400 pounds and is not very tall. If the fellow who invented that "bullet hunting" machine with which he came within about two feet of locating it in President Garfield, ever has occasion to use it on Dave, he will not come within four feet of it.

THE star route swindlers defrauded [illegible]ment out of about ten [illegible]llars, but it looks now as [illegible]ould go scot free, and keep [illegible]eir plunder. They stand too high in the republican party, to be punished. They know too many of the party's secrets, and gave too much money to help carry Indiana.

THE subject of Canadian independence is a gain being actively discussed. There are plenty of people in the Dominion, who are out-spoken in favor of a separation from the mother country. It is also asserted, that several leading statesmen of Great Britain express themselves in favor of the movement. They claim that no effort will be made by the British government to retain control over Canada, for an hour after she expresses a wish for a separate existence.

—Ladies don't forget that Davenport has a fine assortment of toilet powders and fragrants extracts cheap.

Tuesday's Election.

As we go to press, the indications are that New York has gone democratic by a handsome majority. In Virginia it is close, with the chances in favor of the Mahoneites. In Wisconsin there seems to be something unusual, both parties claim the state.

A COMMISSION is investigating the charges against the ninth Massachusetts militia at Richmond, Virginia. Many witnesses were examined, and testified that most of the soldiers were drunk, and went about the streets insulting women, breaking into restaurants and lunch rooms, and helping themselves, smashing the windows in street-cars, taking teams from their drivers and various other riotous and disgraceful acts. It is thought that if these charges are sustained, the regiment will be disbanded.

SINCE the beginning of the special term of the senate, John Sherman has made a good deal of cheap capital by calling for the report of the committee, that attempted last spring to investigate Sherman's mismanagement of the treasury, through his man, Pitkin. Sherman kept calling for this report, which was written by employes in the treasury department, and of course was favorable to him. But when a member moved to have the evidence in the case, accompany the report, Sherman backed square down and voted against the resolution.

THE republicans are now buying up confederate bonds. Can it be possible that they intend to finally adopt them and assume their payment? You see at the rate, the public debt is being paid off, it will not be so very long until the entire debt will be paid and without bonds, the national banks cannot exist, and they would, therefore, lose that engine of power. If General Hancock had been elected, and within six months thereafter, a demand for this worthless and unconstitutional paper had been created, every republican paper in the country would have found the English language too beggarly poor to sufficiently denounce and vilify the democrats. Will some good republican brother please rise in meeting and explain what they want with confederate bonds, if not for the purposes above stated.

GUITEAU has written to the president, asking him to contribute something to aid him in his trial, claiming that Arthur is under great obligations to him, for making him president. He has also written to Bennett, of the New York Herald, hinting that $10,000 would be thankfully received. The following is the letter: "Dear Sir.—I desire to call your attention, through my brother-in-law and attorney, George Scoville, to the inclosed account of a suit I had against the Herald. I ask you to make a liberal contribution for my defense in view of the suffering the Herald caused me in 1874, and I have no doubt, considering your liberality and right mindedness, but you will do it. As your reporter suggested, a $10,000 check or cash, if you don't wish your name to appear, will be gratefully received. I have no doubt, had I proceeded with the case and employed competent counsel, it would have cost you twice that; but I did not wish to get the Herald down on me politically, and therefore did not press the trial. I therefore ask you to make a liberal contribution to my defense. I have the honor to be very respectfully yours.

CHAS. J. GUITEAU.

The account referred to is that of the unsuccessful libel suit of Guiteau for $50,000, the Herald having published in 1874, that Guiteau had defrauded New York parties of collections he had made for them.

On Monday evening of this week, was Jas. R. Duncan's twentieth marriage anniversary, and in the evening as Jim and his estimable wife sat at home in their everyday cloths in blissful ignorance of what was about to transpire, about forty of their friends came storming in, and took them completely by surprise, and after spending a pleasant evening and presenting them with a lot of chinaware, they departed feeling that it was good to have been there. Jim must keep watch of them when the next twenty years come around, and if they organize a similar raid on him, he must get into his Sunday cloths before they come, and also tell his wife about it.

Around About Us.

T. F. Jordan has been very sick at Garrett. He has the sympathy of his many friends all over the county.

We learn that I. B. McDonald, present editor of the Churubusco Herald, established in 1858, the first newspaper of Whitely county.

The Lagrange Democrat has just closed its second year. We congratulate Bro. Snyder on his success in establishing a democratic paper in that county. The Democrat is a sound paper, and is bound to win.

On Monday, Thomas Henry, son of John Henry, of Connersville, shot himself through the thigh while playing with an old pistol.—[Fort Wayne News. One of our town "dads" here answers to the name of John Henry, but we know it ain't him. He never shoots himself with anything except sausages and "sich.

The Ft. Wayne News is our authority for saying that Clerk Spencer shot a red-squirrel this fall. We never knew before that Mart. was a shootist. We knew that he went fishing sometimes, and fell in the lake, but we positively deny that we even heard about his killing anything. Wonder if the squirrel died after he shot it.

Last Saturday night David Rodibaugh, near New Paris had over forty head of fine blooded sheep killed out-right by dogs, and some twenty wounded. This is a big slaughter of the innocents, and if that dog is found his life will be in as much danger as Guiteau's.—[Goshen Democrat.

A good joke is told on one of our citizens who got up at midnight recently, and fired two shots into the spittoon that was sitting on the porch, thinking he had annihilated a couple of cats that were having a little social visit under his window.—[Goshen Democrat.

The following good note is from the Ligonier Leader of a recent date; and is good enough to be repeated: "The doctor was recently attending an obstetrical case in a family of one of his patrons, who though a very excellent man, is a little slow in the payment of his medical bills. Immediately after the birth of the babe, the father nervously asked: 'Doctor, is the baby marked?' 'Yes,' quietly replied the doctor, 'it is marked C. O. D.' It is needless to add that the bill for that baby was promptly settled.

A Valuable New Law Book.

Our townsman, P. V. Hoffman, Esq., has written a very valuable and extensive addendum to Judge Green's work on "Pleading and Practice," adapting it to the revised code of Indiana of 1881. The citations to the Indiana reports are very full and complete, and are brought up to the 73d volume. Among the chapters in the addendum, we notice the following: Parties, amendments, trial, new trial, bills of exceptions and appeals, practice in the supreme court on review, setting aside judgments by default, courts and judges. Also the following special statutory proceedings: Attachment, arrest and bail, ad quod damnum, occupying claimants, waste and nuisance, remedies of sureties against principals enforcing judgments against joint debtors and deceased debtors, habeas corpus, partition, divorce, mechanics liens, ne exeat, executions against the body and proceedings supplementary to executions, etc. The work shows great care and research in its preparation. Mr. Hoffman is a profound lawyer, and the members of the bar of Indiana are to be congratulated in having him place within their reach such an able and practical work. The book is now in the hands of the Gilbert Book Co., of St. Louis, Mo., and will be ready for delivery at an early date. We predict for it a large sale. It will be a valuable accession to any law library in the country. We have known the author from his youth, and regret that our space will not permit of a more extended notice. We shall have occasion to refer to this subject again at some future time.

A Card to the Public.

I desire to announce to the public that I am now prepared to practice modern photography in all its branches. To do this, I have been obliged to supply myself with Dr Vogel's wonderful process for making negatives in from one to three seconds. Dr. Vogel is acknowledged to be the best photographic chemist in the known world, and his new invention relieves the artist as well as the subject of many vexations. Parties desiring photographs of their children or family groups, can now be accommodated at the regular price as no extra charge will be made for this new invention, as the artist will be more than repaid by the leaving off of three or four extra sittings. Call and see for yourselves.

Wake up, Farmers.

The Lagrage Standard gives the following warning which we republish to place our farmer friends on their guard from the tricky tramp:

"Look out for a dead beat Quaker doctor who is going through this part of the state defrauding the farmers. Kick him out if he comes around. He played his game successfully in Elkhart county, and now a farmer has a note for $25 or $2,500, he does not know which, with his name signed to it." Farmers in this locality would do well to remember that swindlers in general are migratory birds, and we cannot tell how soon they will be playing their nefarious vocation in our midst.

The Red Men.

A band of Iowa Indians, eight in number, went east over the B. & O. last week. They stopped awhile at the junction to wait for the Jackson train, and were objects of the greatest curiosity to the people there. They were dressed in full Indian costume, including head-gear and feathers. Each had a sort of collar made of eagle's claws sewed together. All had earrings; one used silver half dollars for that purpose; others used other pieces, or silver pieces worked into various forms; and one, more ambitious than the others, had suspended from his copper colored ears, small brass pad-locks. They took up a collection and got some tobacco, which they all seemed to enjoy greatly. They are on their way to see their great father, the president, at Washington.

Entertainment.

Prof. G. Walter Dale, acknowledged to be the finest reader, rector and impersonator in the west, is assisting in the institute this week. He will give his great entertainment, entitled "Hush," at Easley's Hall, on Thursday evening (to-night). This entertainment introduces the best selections in the language. Among others, "Sam's Letter," a great impersonation of E. A. Sothem, in the character of Lord Dundreary. As an impersonator of old men, Prof. Dale has no superior in the country, and his "Old Yankee Farmer" is the most complete piece of work of its kind ever presented on any stage. Artemus Ward's Famous Mormon Lecture will be given, than which there is nothing richer in the field of comedy. This grand monologue is to be given at the popular price of 25 cents admission. Don't fail to hear this great artist.

Matrimonial Balm.

Some parts of the state has matrimonial insurance companies, and young lovers jump at the chance like the frisky sunfish does at the angle worm dangling at the end of the fisherman's line. We have no agents here as yet, but they are only twenty-two miles away. To give our marriageable young men a foresight in the business, we publish herewith the plan on which it is transacted: "The plan is to secure members of the unmarried portion of the county, who are charged an assessment fee, monthly dues, and an assessment on the occasion of the marriage of any member. The amount of the benefit will depend upon the size of the membership, and will vary from $500 to $3,000. So long as the classes are full and each member pays his or her assessment, the business will pay. All ye who contemplate matrimony in the near future, should take advantage of the chance to secure a start in life at a moderate outlay.

Uncle Tom.

The performance Friday evening was not quite up to the anticipations of the audience. The character of Uncle Tom was very poorly executed, and, in fact, when we say that two of the actors were good, we say all. The celebrated bloodhounds were about three-thirds Newfoundland; however they were quite well trained. The scenery was about the same as the average companies carry, and their ward robe was passible One great drawback for the company was, that the drama has been worn threadbare, and it seemed almost impossible to get the audience interested. If Uncle Tom is ever out upon the stage here again we guarantee that the company will receive a very poor equivalent for their labor.

—The stave factory started up again yesterday, after a "shut down" for several days. Charley and Joe are wide-awake gentlemen, and will spare neither money nor time to make this one of the leading enterprises of our town.

—Henry Ward Beecher recently delivered a sermon on newspapers, a paragraph of which we here append:

"I tell you my friends that a good newspaper is the grandest blessing that God has given to the people of this country—the grandest temporal blessing."

—Joe. Williamson, at Corunna, is building up quite a "rep" as a pugilistic knocker. We hear that a fellow insulted Joe. and received a handsome thrashing. We thought Joe. too easy, aimable and loved pretty faces too well to disfigure them.

—An avertiser in the Globe-Democrat uses a likeness of our late president to show up a furniture establishment. In the light of recent events there seems to be a lack of harmony between the advertising and editorial departments of that journal.

—Uncle Tom's Cabin, on Seventh street, is well advertised. The most attractive sign is the one hanging above, although the letters upon the bill boards are attractive and somewhat characteristic. Upon the inside are a number of "Topsies," and without joking, Uncle Tom is a happy son from the fields of cotton.

—The young folks should open up the party season, and enjoy an evening or two together socially and pleasantly. We have a number of "society" young men and it is their duty to launch out in these amusements. If this was leap year the girls would have the matter attended to in a business-like manner, we assure you.

—Squire, the fellow from dark town, who had a fight with French Pete, last summer, indulged in a little exercise at Hicksville, of about the same nature, with the exception of the weapons. Here he had to "buck" against a pitchfork, and over there he had to contend with a potato-masher in the hands of a fair damsel at the Swilley hotel.

Auburn Courier

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Eat 'kraut.

—Squirrels are plenty.

—Get your skates in order.

—Clean the street crossings.

—The week opened with a cold rain.

—Strangers by the wholesale in town.

—J. L. Davis took down his Garfield mourning this week.

—The heating apparatus in D. D. Snyder's residence is valuable.

—P. J. Lockwood has put away his two legged "horse" for the winter.

—Frank Larimore will assist Ben. Williams' little sawing machine this winter.

—The country roads are said to be in a frightful condition, and it is almost impossible to draw heavy loads.

—Some very important national questions have been argued and finally settled, at Davenport's drug store.

—The choir at the Presbyterian is acknowledged to be well drilled in their calling. Isn't it about time to "kick up a racket?"

—The Auburn band is jubilant over fact that a cornet player, a relative of Mr. Sanborn, will locate among us, and "jine de band."

—B. L. Williams is running a steam pump at the Cedar creek bridge on the Wabash road to keep the water out of the way of the workmen.

—Several big and little drunks last Saturday night. Our guardians of the law are inclined to be charitable in their dispensation during these chilly nights.

—The people in the vicinity of Newville, should not forget that Billy Little has opened a first-class shoe store in that place. Custom work and repairing a specialty.

—If Sam Pommert only occupies a part of Mitch. Houston's butcher shop, what will he do with Toad Latson. Toad must have more room to swing himself.

—If you wish to be happy you must learn to be just deaf enough not to hear some things and just blind 'nough not to see others.

—Messrs. Garrison and Dodge will take charge of the Butler Record next week. We are unacquainted with the gentlemen, but wish them success in their new field of labor.

—We have a photograph of a lost baker, which our detectives should give their immediate attention. The more we Puff the matter, the harder it will be to find him.

—Anna Dickinson is reported as saying that she will never marry until she can make a loaf of bread, and that she will never bake bread while she has her senses. Sensible Anna.

—Maud S. has a remarkable record for fleetness, but her velocity is only trivial when compared with the gait of John Zollars, while the the old man raises the window and asks: "Who am dar?"

—The Daily is printed at the COURIER office, with the following corps of typos: Milo Gansenhouser, Berri Lowry, Jno. Conger Little and Jenk Eldridge. "And de colored troupes did nobuly."

—The attendance at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening was not very large, and the audience was scattered too much. Some arrangement should be made to have the hearers seated farther forward and more compact.

—Harvey B. Coleman, a shoemaker at Bryan, Ohio, has been found guilty of incest with his seventeen year old daughter. There is no punishment within the statue of law that is severe enough for such worthless curs.

—An amateur farmer writes us and asks: "What will prevent a cow from kicking?" Our agricultural editor is at the institute, but we venture the suggestion that shooting the animal through the head will do some good.

—If the item in the COURIER last week had the effect to have the young ladies abandon their walking sticks last Sunday, we very heartily apologize. They have just as good right to carry canes as bankrupt young men.

—The band wants a room to practice in where they don't have to pay rent. A hundred men should volunteer to let them have a room without further notice. The melody that comes from a band while in practice, is too beautiful and harmonious to waste.

—A new wrinkle for paying church dues has just been invented by our Presbyterian brethren. They furnish the delinquents with an envelope printed upon the outside, which very politely requests them to "doe over." They can drop it in the contribution box, or send it to the trustees with the errand boy, it is immaterial which.

—The wood market is well stocked and now is a good time for the head of the family to lay in his winter's supply. The tricky farmer has the wagon box half filled with straw and the balance with wood. He offers the load for $1.25 and says it "humps" a cord pretty close. The straw is not for sale, from the fact that if he continues in the wood trade this winter, his stack will give out before the coming harvest time.

A Beautiful Day.

Every one we met last Sabbath spoke of the "beautiful day," and seemed to be quite thankful, although they did not look for another one until the opening of the gentle spring time. The wind was somewhat bracing, but old Sol sent forth his bright rays that gave the desired warmth to all. The streets were crowded with people strolling to and fro, and the merry song of the "wild canary" greeted the ear. The barefooted boy appeared for the last time in 1881, and many other "historical" events we might mention that such days bring to the wanderer's mind.

The Daily.

Through the enterprise of Prof. J. A. Barns, county superintendent, and Calvin Houser, of the Republican, the teachers, who are in convention this week, have been furnished with a sprightly little daily paper, giving the proceedings of the institute and other matters of importance. We are glad to notice that not only the teachers have greatly appreciated their endeavors, but also that our business men have shown their gratitude by advertising liberally. This is the only paper that has ever been published in the county at one of these gatherings, and it causes the pedagogues to feel proud.

The Institute.

A large number of intelligent and promising looking young men and ladies are attending the institute this week, striving with all their energy and zeal to enhance the interests of education. These people love refinement, morality and promptness in all grades of life, and labor hard for this result. Everyone should encourage them, not only while in convention as they are now, but more particularly so when they open their winter schools to instruct our children in the necessary elements to afford them a successful future through life. Parents and scholars should combine themselves into one grand and noble idea, work together in harmony and peace and the teachers can close their labors with happy results.

Plain Drunks

Getting drunk on Saturday nights seems to be the prominent amusement on the juvenile schedule. Last Saturday, several of our young men, far from being out of their teens, presented the picture of a traveling distillery. Some one must buy and furnish these boys liquor, as we hardly think they get it directly. Opposite Slaybaugh's grocery was a crippled father pleading and begging for a drunken son to accompany him home, and upon the opposite side of the street a crowd had gathered, laughing and making different remarks. Although the subject was solemn and disgusting, there were some parts of it laughable. The boy was very anxious for his father not to "give him away," and every time the old man would ask him to "come along," he would say: "Hold on dad; dont give me away." We hope these young men will conduct themselves differently in the future, but if they continue to keep up these weekly drunks, it will be our duty as a newspaper advocate to publish them, and also enlighten the officers as to who furnishes the brine.

—The Headlight came sparkling into our office again after an absence of several weeks.

—Bab Lewis has painted his residence. Bab is a tasty fellow, and attends church regular.

—Wm. Dugan and Joe. Cullers have gone to the pineries in Michigan, where they will engage in hauling, logs this winter.

—The marshal might make some improvement in the street, near Joseph Abright's residence, by dumping in a lot of dirt.

Astonishing.

While the play of Uncle Tom's Cabin was being performed Friday evening, it was astonishing to notice the ill-manners and heartless actions of some of the audience. While little Eva was in the act of "leaving this cruel world and cross the dark, unknown river where sin and sorrow are not known," several hoodlooms, in the rear of the hall, hallowed and stamped, meaning for her to make a repetition of the act. The fact that this is a very touching part of the play, and the audience dotted with mothers who have but recently lost a dear little child, and whose aching hearts brought tears to their eyes, it is simply ridiculous that such ill-bred, heartless rowdies should be in a public audience.

Cold Winter.

Winter with her blustery winds and snowy robe will soon be upon us. Let the mothers see that the little ones are comfortably and warmly dressed. There is nothing that meets the eye quicker, or makes the heart fall sadder, than to see a thinly clad, shivering little urchin standing upon the street corner. Yes, the days are growing shorter and the long evenings of the pleasant weather steal upon us with a sense of enjoyment which render them attractive. Times flies rapidly, and to-day we find ourselves already far advanced in the latter half of another year.

Such is Life.

A well-to-do farmer, named John Stull, living near South Bend, Indiana, left that place quite mysteriously last week. He had been a juror on a nuisance case, and swore that he had heard or knew nothing concerning the facts connected with it; when, after the trial was over, he thought he had. He was afraid he would be fined and imprisioned for perjury, and he decamped. He is rich and his brothers are all wealthy, and, of course, no money was spared to seek his whereabouts. The Register says: "A letter was received Monday night from Mr. John Stull stating that he was at Waterloo, Ind., and that he would remain there until Friday. He has been traveling in and out of Waterloo looking at the country. The letter gave his family and friends much relief, as they feared harm had befallen him."

Progressive.

A short ride into the country shows that the spirit of progress is alive among our farmers. New houses and barns are being built to take the places of the old ones. The yards and fields are being enclosed by tasty fences, and the farmer has almost forgotten the hard work connected with the splitting of rails. Each one, as he is favored by fortune, is adding to the comforts that surround his home. With successive seasons favorable for the production of good crops and with the building of good roads to facilitate their transportation to market, ours will be a most beautiful, prosperous and desirable country. Our thoroughfares, however, were greatly improved last summer, but they need lots of labor yet.

"We Kick."

Several weeks ago, the generous-hearted citizens of Corunna gave a donation to their minister, purchasing for him an "easy chair." Dr. Cissel having been the the "handy man" when prayer was needed or sermons discoursed when there were no ministers in "reach," another portion of the citizens concluded to give him a lift, and accordingly circulated a subscription paper. When the committee visited Mr. Fried and the minister (name not known), they emphatically refused to give one cent, holding up the flimsy excuse "that Mr. Cissel was not in need of a donation." The Dr. and his wife, however, received some valuable gifts, of which the following are a part: Chair, cashmere dress goods and gold to buy the trimmings, and other articles of value and prize.

BY THE RIVER.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

River, O River, that singeth all night,
Nor waitest for light
To pour out thy mirth
Along the chill earth,
The words of thy song let me know.
"I come, and I go."

River, O River, with swell and with fall,
Thy musical call
Waketh, summoning me;
What thought is in thee
That lulls me, yet rouses me so?
"I come, and I go."

River, O River, a word thou must give
To help me to live.
"Then sing on thy way;
Sing joy of to-day—
Time's ripple, eternity's flow.
I come, and I go."

River, O River, thy message is clear.
Chant on, for I hear.
"What the mountains give me
Bear I forth to the sea.
Life only is thine to bestow.
I come, and I go."

River, O River, thy secret of power
I win from this hour:
Thy rhythm of delight
Is my song in the night.
I am glad with thy gladness; for, lo!
I come, and I go.

THE WHITEST MAN IN THE MINES.

Jim Moore was one of the most widely-known characters in the great Carbonate Camp during the winter of '78-9, and his popularity did not wane to any perceptible extent until the first week in March, 1880, when he joined the church, forsook politics, and permitted the Democrats to elect a Mayor and two of the six Aldermen which comprised the Common Council of Leadville. Col. Jim was not handsome by any means, but what he lacked in personal appearance was made up for in greatness and kindness of heart. He stood stood five feet nine inches in bare feet and in his knee-top patent-leather boots he was a good inch taller. His weight never exceeded one hundred and forty pounds; yet he was an athlete and boasted of muscles that were as hard as iron. No one knew his age, but his home had once been in Evansville, Ind., and he was intimately acquainted with Frank M. Gilbert, one of the brightest editors of that little Hoosier city and was never so happy as when narrating some boyish fiasco wherein Gilbert was one of the principal characters. His forehead was high and narrow, hair so black that it glittered in the light of day, eyes of the color of steel gray, nose a decided pug, mouth as large as Emily Soldene's, lips almost as thin as paper, teeth irregular and ghastly white, chin and under jaw massive, cheek bones prominent as an Indian's, and his smooth-shaven face was as sallow as though he had wrestled with chills and fever in the lowlands of Arkansas from the day of his birth.

By avocation Jim Moore was a gambler. He found his way to Leadville in November, 1878, and took rooms on Lower Chestnut street, his meals at the Tontine restaurant, and dealt faro in the Texas saloon on Harrison avenue. The first day in camp no one paid him a second thought, and his table was patronized by strangers alone. The second day June Richards, the camp bully, charged him with turning "top and bottom." Jim was shuffling the cards, preparing for a fourth deal, and he promptly knocked Richards down with the heavy silver box. When the bully returned to consciousness he saw that Jim had procured a fresh box and was dealing as though nothing had occurred. The crowd fell back in anticipation of an exchange of pistol-shots, but Richards remarked that he was no hog, knew when he had enough, and left the house to spend his money in the Little Church saloon.

On the fourth day of Jim's sojourn in camp a reckless prospector by the name of Mooney, who had backed the seven-spot heavily to lose when the seven had won, called the man from Indiana a tin-horn gambler, and threw his heavy bowie-knife across the lay-out. Jim could not wink at such a breach of etiquette, and shot Mooney through the heart without rising from his chair. An inquest was held, and, as all the gentlemen present at the time of the shooting pronounced it an act of self-defense, Jim was back at the table, dealing, within a few hours following the tragedy. This event sent his stock away above par, and from that day he was recognized on the street by the first gamblers of Colorado.

In the meantime a Methodist parson had come to the mines, and was endeavoring to raise a sum of money sufficient to build a place of worship. Jim called on the parson, extorted a promise from him that he would not play faro, keno or draw-poker, nor be too hard on the sporting men of the camp—and then set about taking up a collection. He prepared a list, subscribed $50 by way of a beginning, and then circulated the paper around the saloons and gaming tables, swearing that any sport who declined to chip in was no friend of Jim Moore's. The result was that Leadville possessed a church before Christmas. He attended the dedicatory services, led in singing and passed the hat around twice, once before the sermon and once following it. On the following Sabbath Jim was not at church, and in the afternoon the parson called at the Texas House to inquire if Mr. Moore was indisposed. He found Jim dealing, and a throng of miners about the table.

"No foolishness here, parson," said Jim sternly, as he paused with his fingers on the soda card.

"Certainly not. I shall not interrupt," replied the reverend gentleman, in an apologetic tone; "but I did not see you at worship this morning?"

"No," said Jim, slightly mollified, "and I expect your hat came back —— light. I wanted to come down and take part, but a $2,000 sucker from Virginia City chanced in, and ——, you know I had to accommodate him."

The sacerdotal laborer took his departure, after declining several invitations to drink from gentlemen in the crowd who recognized him, and never again called around to ascertain what cause had detained Jim Moore from attending morning service.

It was in these early days that claim and lot jumping flourished in Leadville. If a man, after toiling for weeks or months in a small shaft, chanced to strike it rich, tidings of his good luck would spread through the camp like wild fire. In their greed for carbonates, many men would forget their once-poor companion had delved in the hard stone and fireclay until he had fairly won his prize, and their ruling thought was through what agency he could be dispossessed and his paying claim relocated. Claim-jumping finally became quite a science, and mines had to be guarded night and day. As the price of real estate advanced in the camp, lot jumping became quite fashionable, and as a half-dozen land companies set up claims to the ownership of every foot of ground between the Arkansas and the First range on one hand, and California gulch and Tennessee Park on the other, the only bill of sale recognized as genuine was a Winchester rifle and a pair of self-cocking revolvers. There was seldom an hour in the day or night that was not broken by an exchange of rifle and pistol shots over some disputed mining claim or staked-off lot in the heart of the young city. Might in those days made right; there was no law, and an occasional lynching bee only served to incite men on to more cruel and daring extremes. The camp at this time contained about 10,000 souls, and when I write that of this number at least two-fifths were gamblers, thieves, highwaymen and assassins I simply state facts. Men who endured so many hardships and lived up in the heart of the Rocky mountains two miles above the level of the sea, forgot all except that they must acquire riches, and it was immaterial to them how they became wealthy. Every base passion was quickened to such an extent that the old adage of "honor among thieves" was even forgotten. Now all is changed, and the only monuments to the winter, spring and summer of 1879 in Leadville are two well-filled cemeteries.

On the corner of Harrison avenue and State street an old withered hag of a washerwoman from Denver, by the name of Ray, had pitched her tent. A dwarfed pine stood about the center of three lots she had staked off, and this pine was made to do service as a center-pole for her canvas mansion. The desirable location of these lots excited the cupidity of four professional lot jumpers, and "Mrs. Ray must emigrate." One February night Jim Moore placed a brother dealer in his chair and walked out on the street for exercise and a breath of the pure cold air which sweeps down from snow-capped mountain tops. He had been dealing steadily for seven hours, and the fumes of liquor and smoke in the gaming room had served to make him weak and dizzy. As he strode up Harrison avenue, in the direction of Capitol Hill, it seemed to him that he had stepped into another clime. The night was intensely cold, and small particles of snow and frost were borne upon the bosom of the blast which raged from the west. They came with stinging force, and were so fierce that the streets were almost deserted.

Jim Moore paused. The blast had borne to his ears an unusual sound. It was a woman's shriek for help. He had arrived at the corner of Main street, and, turning, beheld a tiny tongue of flame a block below. A shanty on fire was his first thought, but by the time he gained the Chronicle office he saw that it was Mrs. Ray's tent. The tarred canvas burned fiercely, and by its light he saw four men and recognized them as lot-jumpers. One had choked the old woman nigh unto death, and his companions stood by, pistols in hand, to prevent any attempt on the part of a couple of pedestrians, who had halted across the street, at extinguishing the flames. On the ground was a tent which they had brought with them, and it was their intention to eject the washerwoman by an incendiary act and then take possession of the vacated lots.

The man from Indiana understood the situation at a glance, and, with a few quick bounds was, within the glare of the burning tent. Two shots were fired at him by the lot-jumpers, and then he returned their fire. At the first report of his pistol one went down with a bullet hole in the center of his forehead, and the next moment his companion was also lying in the snow with a shattered thigh. By this time a dozen men were on the scene, and the remaining two backed off in the direction of the rude Theater Comique, with pistols standing at full cock.

When Mrs. Ray realized that she had been saved, she went down upon her knees to the courageous gambler who had come to her rescue.

"I don't know your name," she cried, in deep tones of emotion, the tears all the while coursing down her wrinkled and weather-stained face; "but one thing I do know, God bless you! You are the whitest man in the mines!"

Several citizens assisted Jim in erecting the lot-jumpers' tent for Mrs. Ray, and then the undertaker was summoned to remove the dead body. The wounded man was conveyed to his cabin on Lower Chestnut street, and he was advised to leave the camp as soon as he could travel. Henceforth Jim Moore was universally spoken of as "the whitest man in the mines," and Mrs. Ray was never tired of singing his praise. The washerwoman is now quite wealthy. A few weeks following the destruction of her tent she sold one of the lots for $14,000, and with this sum erected commodious buildings on the remaining two, which yield a handsome rental.

My second night in the Carbonate camp a friend asked if I knew Jim Moore. He remarked that I must make the acquaintance of the whitest man in the mines before I could hope to enter Leadville's best society. We strolled down from the Clarendon Hotel to the house where Jim presided over a faro lay-out, and I was introduced as "the new editor of the Chronicle." Moore scrutinized me an instant with his hard, steel-gray eyes, and then gave me a hand-clasp which brought tears to my eyes from its severity. He smiled at my wince of pain, and, as he drew in a stack of blues from the queen-ten, said, addressing me:

"Where from?"

"St. Louis," I answered, as tersely as the question had been put.

"Good enough," was his response, and he went on between cards asking question after question as to people whom he had known in that city.

Desirous of gaining his good-will I placed a $10 note on the ace, playing it open. "Please don't do it," said he, "It breaks me all up to have friends play at my table. If you want $50 or $100 take it out of the drawer, but for God's sake don't play faro!"

When the Vigilantes were organized against the leeches of the mines, who rejoiced in the title of "The Law and Order Abiders," Jim took no part. "It ain't my funeral," he exclaimed. "I can't shake the boys, nor I can't go back on the good people here. So I guess I'll take a reserved seat on the fence and pass myself off for a statesman."

The rough element concluded in November, 1879, that Leadville had no need for newspapers, and in accordance the proprietors, publishers, editors and reporters of the three daily papers were ordered out of town. The outlook was decidedly unpleasant, for, while men felt loth to desert their property, they knew that their lives were imperiled by remaining. I paid a visit to Jim Moore and briefly explained the situation.

"I catch on," said he, "and I shall slide down from the fence. I propose to deal faro in this camp until I get ready to leave, and if any one dared to interfere with me there would be a circus and menagerie turned loose in fifteen seconds; and they have actually ordered the newspaper men out of town?" he half questioned, "and still they call themselves sports."

He practiced a new shuffle for a few minutes, then, tossing his cards into the drawer, said:

"Go back to the boys and tell them to scribble their lies in peace. I shall pay a visit to the Law and Order Abiders and convince them in a very few minutes that newspapers are the salvation of this mining camp."

That night the roughs held a meeting, and when the whitest man in the mines strode into their midst and took a seat on the platform he was cheered heartily. He announced the object of his call briefly and emphatically, and swore by all the hoop poles in Posey county that he would shoot the first man who went fooling around a newspaper office or gunning for newspaper men. He was respected and feared by all the knaves, and nothing more was said about destroying the newspaper offices until the Vigilantes captured Stewart and Frosham and hanged them to the rafter of a building in course of erection.

"The newspapers did not hang them," said Jim Moore, "it was the Vigilantes."

"But did not the papers counsel lynching us?" asked the leaders of the Law and Order band.

"What if they did?" was Jim's reply. "Ain't this a free country, and don't the constitution provide for a free press? Of course it does, and I just feel like shooting somebody who wants to insult the constitution and the American flag."

When one of Wall & Witter's stages capsized a few miles below Leadville, and Rev. Mr. Pickett, who was riding in the boot with the driver, was crushed to death, Jim swore that "the parson had been a Prince," and subscribed liberally toward defraying his funeral.

But the Saturday night that Jim concluded to quit dealing faro and go to preaching will long be remembered in Lake county, Col. He stopped in the middle of the deal and removed the cards from the box, explaining that all bets were off, that the cases were off, and that he had dealt his last card.

"What is the matter, Jim?" cried a dozen in one voice.

"Nothing," he replied, "only that I have concluded that preaching, and not dealing, is my trade. You may call me 'Jim,' and the 'whitest man in the mines,' to-night, but hereafter you must always address me as Mr. Moore."

The proprietor of the house endeavored to induce Jim to remain, but he was firm in his intention.

"You might offer me $1,000 a minute," said he, "and it would not influence me in the least. I have done a terrible lot of harm guiding the Royal Bengal, and now I intend to do a powerful lot of good. Barkeeper, drinks for the house at my expense."

Jim Moore did some missionary work in Leadville. His sermons were always brief but forcible, and were interspersed with slang phrases acquired at the gaming table. About the 1st of April, 1880, he set out for Gunnison City, on snow-shoes, saying that he "felt called upon to wrestle with the Gunnison heathen." He did not arrive at Gunnison, nor did he return to Leadville. His strange disappearance was unaccounted for until the following July, when bold prospectors penetrated the gulches on Taylor river above Ruby camp. There, in one of the deep fissures, they found a human body. It was still frozen, and decomposition had not set in. From the position of the body they judged that the unfortunate man had accidentally fallen into the fissure. Frank Pritchard, one of the party of prospectors, who had loitered behind testing the rocks, came up to his companions, cast one glance at the remains, and said, with great emotion:

"Heavens, boys, this is the body of Jim Moore, the whitest man in the mines!"

An Exchange of Courtesies.

A story is told of an exchange of courtesy between a Scotch minister and his parishioner, which is characteristic of both. The minister was introduced into a country living, and, in his round of parochial visits, called at the cottage of a little tailor. Taking a seat uninvited, he proceeded to talk, but found it hard work, as he met with no response. The tailor sat upon the table, stitching in sulky silence. At length he spoke. "Sir," he said, "I regard it as an unwarrantable intrusion your entering my house, and I ask you in what capacity you come?" "My good man," was the reply, "I come as your parish clergyman—it is my duty to know all my parishioners. I know you don't attend church, but that is no reason why we should not be friends." To which the tailor responded: "I dinna regard ye as a minister of Christ, but as a servant of Satan; if ye come as a gentleman, well and good; but as a minister I refuse to receive you," which could hardly be called courteous, but the tailor's politeness was outrivaled by his minister's, who, rising, said: "My good fellow, be pleased to understand that it is only as your parish clergyman that I ever dreamt of visiting you; when I visit as a gentleman I don't visit persons in your position in society," with which he departed.

NO MAN, for any considerable period, can wear one face to himself and another to the multitude without finally getting bewildered as to which may be true.

A Ghastly Museum.

The Cincinnati Commercial publishes a list of articles on exhibition at an undertaking establishment at Vincennes, Indiana, which, for suggesting things ghastly, it would be hard to excel. Their enumeration is as follows:

Article No. 1—Is an ax covered with blood, which was the instrument used by a man named Provost, on the night of October 2, 1878 in killing the Vatchell family, composed of husband, wife and two sons. This was the most terrible murder that ever occurred in the vicinity.

No. 2—A car-pin which killed Samuel Perkins, in September, 1878.

No. 3—Is a towel with which Provost committed suicide, by hanging himself in jail, three days after his horrible butchery.

No. 4—A knife that killed two men in this city, one of them named Philips; happened in 1874.

No. 5—Another knife which on All Fool's day, 1878, in the hands of Mitchell Mallett, sent Joe Ouslemen to the other shore.

No. 6—A brick that, thrown by a small boy at his playmate, killed him instantly, May 29, 1876.

No. 7—A rope found on a man named Smythe, drowned in the Wabash, May 29, 1878.

No. 8—Two masks worn by two men who were shot and killed while in the act of robbing the store of Watts Bond, in Oaktown, Indiana, January 3, 1879.

No. 9—A knife found on D. Preuelt, drowned in the Wabash, December 26, 1876.

No. 10—Pocket-book found on Jno. Carroll, who died in jail, January 12, 1878.

No. 11—Brass knuckles found on a man killed on the railroad.

No. 12—Another pocket-book found on a man who committed suicide by drowning in 1874.

No. 13—A cuff button which was found on Harry J. Ryerson, who, while full of rum, in the waiting room of the Union depot, on the night of June 19, 1878, fell upon a spitoon and broke his neck.

No. 14—A strap with which S. St. Cows committed suicide in jail, November 12, 1878.

No. 16—A bullet that killed Tom Lindley, in May, 1875.

No. 17—A razor with which Charles Taylor, colored, murdered William Thomas, colored.

No. 18—A strap which was found on an unknown Cincinnatian, killed by the railroad in 1875.

No. 19—Suspenders of a man kicked to death by a mule.

No. 20—A piece of suspender and small piece of iron found inside of the body of James Coleman, who was killed by the explosion of a boiler in Clarke & Buck's foundry, December 11, 1877.

No. 21—Key-ring check, which was on a man found dead in bed, May 1, 1878.

No. 22—Five cent piece found on Mr. Hawkins, drowned December 27, 1877; body recovered February 19, 1878.

No. 23—Bundle of clothes found with a baby murdered November 10, 1877.

No. 24—Boot of John Miller, who was killed by an explosion, the same that killed Coleman on December 11, 1877. Miller was blown thirty feet, through the outside wall of a frame house.

Seventeen other articles of less importance are enumerated. Mr. Gardner, the owner of these relics of crime and accident, conceived the idea of his museum ten years ago, and since that time has exerted himself to make his strange museum of respectable proportion.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Homesteads.

The first requirement is that the person has served for ninety days in the army, navy, or marine corps of the United States during the rebellion, has remained loyal to the government, and has been, honorably discharged. The next privilege such soldier or sailor has is, "such homestead settler shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead, and filing his declaratory statement, within which to make his entry, and commence his settlement and improvement." The time the settler has seaved in the army, navy, or marine corps shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title; or if discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, without reference to the length of time he may have served: "But no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements." No matter what persons say who solicit the privilege of locating homesteads in the name of soldiers and sailors, at considerable expense, when there is no prospect of settling on the land selected; soldiers and sailors will observe the important requirement of at least one year's actual bona fide residence and cultivation of the homestead. Respecting the five-year homestead, the homestead law says: By making an entry an inceptive right is vested in the settler, and his final title depends on his residence upon, and cultivation of, the land embraced in his claim. This residence and cultivation must continue five years, unless he was a soldier or sailor in the late war; or if he prefers to pay for his land, or at private entry, he may after six months' settlement and cultivation make the necessary proof. This early payment is called commuting homestead entry. Such homestead settler (an ex-soldier or sailor) shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead, and filing his declaratory statement, within which to make his entry and commence his settlement and improvement. Another point is covered by rulings of the department, as follows: After a soldier has resided on his homestead long enough to make his military service five years, further residence is unnecessary to secure patent.

Why the Alligator Swore Off.

A pet alligator at Camden, N. J., which was addicted to intemperance, was reformed by putting Jamaica ginger in its whisky. The bibulous education of the alligator was begun by giving it a drink of port wine, and from this it was but a step to whisky and brandy until the experiment became an expensive one. The story of the saurian's reformation is thus told by the owner:

"It was like pouring water down a rat hole, and we had to let up after the first day. The alligator got so full that he couldn't eat his breakfast the next day, and put up one paw as though he had a headache. The fun was kept up for some time, until a very funny gentleman happened in the saloon one day and filled the alligator's whisky full of Jamaica ginger. That," continued Mr. Booker, looking fondly at his pet, who blinked stupidly, "set the poor fellow against whisky. He reformed as suddenly as he took to drink. We poured the liquor as usual down the funnel, but before half the tumbler had been emptied the alligator was standing on the floor hissing like a snake. I started the funny man out of the house with a bung-driver, and the alligator cried large tears for nearly two minutes. Since then the poor fellow has been a little temperance society all by himself, and drinks nothing but blood, and, as if to prove the truth of the story, the alligator slashed his tail about and grinned wider than ever."

How to Lift a Thousand Pounds.

Dumb-bells weighing not over five pounds each are recommended, which should be used regularly every morning an evening for half an hour for a year. By this time it will be found that the muscles of the arms, legs and body will have increased very much and become exceedingly firm and hard. When this condition has been acquired, then, and not till then, can a man think of lifting heavy weights; for if he cannot get his muscles and nerves in this healthy condition he can never become a lifter, even with years of practice, as it takes strength as well as slight to lift a heavy weight. Some very good authorities recommended lifting at the commencement, adding that "you must not lift too much." But how can inexperienced hands tell what is too much before they find themselves permanently injured?

After the year's exercise with dumb-bells or otherwise, as previously suggested, then a man who is not ruptured or otherwise injured can commence a systematic course of lifting, starting with not over one hundred pounds, which he can lift as many times a day as he is disposed to do for one month. He can then add another fifty pounds to the weight to be lifted during the second month's exercise, and so on, adding an additional fifty-pounds weight each month for twenty months, then he will be able to lift the great 1,000 pounds without any danger of injuring himself. This is a general rule, and a result any man with a sound body can reach if he only follows the prescribed course, and never tries to overdo the thing. If the weight will not come up without too much strain, stop, for it is too heavy for you at that point of your training.

To lift correctly and without danger a person must stand erect, the heels on the same line, the toes turned out, the shoulders thrown back and the body resting squarely on the hips—the arms hanging down by the sides. The legs should then be bent merely enough to enable the hands to grasp the handles or rings of what you are to lift; then lift by merely straightening the legs, and not by the arms or body. If you have to strain, and the weight does not come up freely, then you are attempting too much, and should try a lighter load. When you have become strong enough to lift one thousand pounds you are in reality a strong man, and should be perfectly satisfied to let well enough alone, for of all who attempt to exceed that point there is not one man in one hundred who, at some time or other, does not injure himself for life. Some few do not, but they are rare exceptions.—Exchange.

A Panama Wedding.

At 8 o'clock we started to the house, our black maid at our heels. When we reached the building I said to her: "Josepha, you can now go home." "O," said she, "ye bin in casa primera," (I see the house first). I can not tell when she came home, for the last I saw of her she was with a crowd of servants as black as herself. We were ushered into an immense parlor, with large velvet mats on the floor, a grand piano, handsome willow furniture and an abundance of pretty things. The guests were seated in a circle, in the center of the room. After a little wait the bride came in dressed in white satin, made with many pleatings, the train headed with a trailing vine of orange blossoms. She wore also a wreath and a handsome tulle veil. Her own income, I may add, is four hundred dollars per month. The groom now joined her, and they shook hands with all of us, after which they retired to the room adjoining, where they waited until all had assembled. Two lovely little girls held her train as we marched in procession to the Cathedral. Arriving there we found an immense crowd of all classes of people, among them hosts of negroes. The four very large steps leading to the altar were filled with those black hordes of men and women. I counted fifty-five and then grew tired of census-making. As soon as Father Figuro (the priest who comes to give our pupils religious instruction) began the ceremony, this rabble closed about the couple, so that no one could see her from the outside. I saw a woman pushing a little darkey with nothing on but a fragment of an originally very scanty shirt right on the bride's train. After the ceremony we filed back again. There was not the rush to congratulate her as with us; a few gentlemen went up and "felicitated" her, but it was very funeral. Ice cream, champagne and cake was served, after which a dish of pudding with meringue kisses and a little silk flag on each section. This was purely a Spanish sweet and is called dulce matrimonia. Champagne, ice, candied fruits and more cake followed, and the wedding was ended.—From a Private Letter.

"WHAT would you do if you were me and I were you?" tenderly inquired a young swell of his lady friend, as he escorted her home from church. "Well," said she, "if I were you I should throw away that vile cigarette, cut up my cane for fire-wood, wear my watch chain under my coat, and stay at home nights and pray for brains." The walk was finished in silence, and it is presumed that for once in his life the young man thought hard.

Simply by Absorption

TRADE MARK.

Is a sovereign remedy for all forms of Liver and Stomach-troubles, and is the ONLY SAFE and ABSOLUTE cure for Malaria in its various types.

Dr. Holman's Pad is a genuine and radical remedy, WITHOUT TAKING MEDICINE.

It was the FIRST article of the kind that was introduced to the public generally. It was the ORIGINAL PAD, and was devised by DR. HOLMAN alone.

He struck out from the beaten path and made a NEW WAY. No sooner had he rendered the undertaking a CERTAINTY than the IMITATORS and PIRATES who hang to and infest ever successful enterprise, started up and have since followed in his footsteps as closely as the law will tolerate.

Against these Dr. HOLMAN gives SPECIAL WARNING. Not only do they FAIL TO CURE, but in disappointing the purchaser they bring doubt and odium on the principal of Absorption, of which Dr. Holman's Pad is the GENUINE and ONLY TRUE EXPONENT.

Every Imitation is an emphatic endorsement of the substantial worth of the genuine article. A poor one is never copied.

Each Genuine Holman Pad bears the Private Revenue Stamp of the HOLMAN PAD CO., with the above Trade-Mark printed in green. Buy None Without It.

DANGEROUS INSECT.

A Serious Warning to Our Farmers.

[From the New York Sun.]

The following letter relates to a subject of extraordinary importance:

"To the Editor of the Sun: Please inform me what the inclosed insects are. The worms I found in some old wheat, and the flies around the granary. They begin to fly about 6 o'clock in the evening, and then settle down by the sides of the bin. Are they in any way connected? And will they do any harm to the wheat? Old Subscriber."

We regret that the writer of the above omitted his postoffice address in his note, because it is quite important that our readers should know from what part of the country noxious insects are received, that they may be on the lookout for the same species.

The small, silky moths, of which our correspondent sends us specimens, are the parents of the worms found in his wheat; and, furthermore, they are among the most destructive insects known, being no other than the noted Angoumois grain moth (Gelechia cerealella), so named because first discovered in the province of Angoumois, France, about 150 years ago.

This insect has already caused the destruction of thousands of bushels of corn, wheat and other kinds of grain in this country, and from present appearances it will soon make the keeping of grain over winter a very difficult matter in the United States, because the moths deposit their eggs on the grain in the fall, soon after it is harvested, and the worms work on it all through the cold weather, as well as in the summer, when stored in bins and granaries. If the Government or the farmers of this country could arrest the progress of this insect by expending $5,000,000 at this time, it would be the best investment ever made by our people.

We have been watching the progress of this pest for the past ten years, and find that it has become pretty well distributed over nearly all the grain-growing regions in both the Northern and Southern States. As early as 1782 this same grain moth was so destructive in some parts of France as to nearly cause a famine among the people, and it would not be at all strange if the same thing should soon occur in this country, as no effort is being made to check the ravages of this and several other imported grain-destroying insects.

Remove all your grain, and have it ground up, or otherwise disposed of; then thoroughly fumigate your granary with sulphur, or sprinkle with carbolic acid diluted with water. Do not put any grain in the bins this season, but store it elsewhere, because every moth must either be destroyed by poisons or starved out before the same building will be a safe depository for any kind of grain again.

Furthermore, your neighbors must do the same, or the moths will come from their barns to yours. Until rigorous measures are adopted the spread and ravages of such pests cannot be prevented. Laws must be enacted by the General Government for their suppression, and then enforced to the very letter. As soon as European countries find that we are sending them infested grain they will want no more of it at any price; and by that time our farmers will learn what it costs to harbor their enemies.

RESTORED FROM A DECLINE.

North Greece, N. Y., April 26, 1880.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir: I feel it my duty to write and thank you for what your "Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription" have done for my daughter. It is now five weeks since she began their use. She is more fleshy, has more color in her face, and is in other ways greatly improved.

Yours truly, Mrs. Marcella Myers.

Why Is It?

Why is it that a drunken man has such a fancy for the railroad track? He will go miles out of his way to find one, and rarely misses the object of his search, even on the darkest night. When found he is invariably seized with an uncontrollable desire to take a nap there. There must be something peculiarly soothing in the contact of the cold iron rail as he fits the back of his neck to it and adjusts his body between the ties in preparation for slumber. And frequently it is the last, long sleep that he takes. But what draws him there? Sober men wander about for hours sometimes, hunting the depot in daylight, but the inebriate can strike a railroad track in two minutes when it is as dark as tophet. And he generally gets there ahead of the train, too, though the train retaliates by getting a head of him before the deal is over.

Unlike other cathartics, Dr. Pierce's "Pellets" do not render the bowels costive after operation, but, on the contrary, establish a permanently healthy action. Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. By druggists.

Pinafore Revived.

Last week a strapping negro woman was up before an Austin justice, charged with unmercifully beating her boy, a saddle colored imp.

"I don't understand how you can have the heart to treat your own child so cruelly."

"Jedge, has you been a parent of a wufless yaller boy lik' dat ar oub of mine?"

"Never, no never," ejaculated the judge with great vehemence, getting red in the face.

"Den don't talk."

There was such a sensation in court that the judge had to call "next," four or five times, and to fine a man who said "hardly ever" fifty dollars, before order was restored.—Texas Siftings.

"Golden Medical Discovery" (Trade-mark registered) is not only a sovereign remedy for consumption, but also for consumptive night-sweats, bronchitis, coughs, spitting of blood, weak lungs, shortness of breath and kindred affections of the throat and chest. By druggists.

The Peanut.

The peanut is the fruit of a plant common in warm countries. It is sometimes called the ground pea and ground or earth nut, and in the Southern States the goober or goober nut. Still another name for it is pindal or pinder, and in Western Africa it is called mandubi. The plant is a trailing vine, with small yellow flowers. After the flowers fall the flower stem grows longer, bends downward and the pod on the end forces itself into the ground, where it ripens.

Peanuts are raised in immense quantities on the west coast of Africa, in South America and in the Southern United States. The vines are dug with pronged hoes or forks, dried for a few days and then stacked for two weeks to cure. The pods are picked by hand from the vines, cleaned in a fanning mill, and sometimes bleached with sulphur, and packed in bags for market. Peanuts are sometimes eaten raw, but usually roasted or baked. In Africa and South America they form one of the chief articles of food. Large quantities of them are made into an oil much like olive oil, and which is used in the same way. It is also used in the manufacture of soap. A bushel of peanuts, when pressed cold, will make a gallon of oil. If heat is used, more oil is made, but it is not so good. In Spain peanuts are ground and mixed with chocolate. Peanut vines make good food for cattle.

The peanut gets its name from the shape of its pod, which is like that of the pea.

Cured of Drinking.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, which had so prostrated him that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst, took away the appetite for liquor, made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups. I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. official, Chicago, Ill.—Times.

The Speculative Mania.

The disposition to get rich suddenly ensnares many men who are engaged in safe pursuits, and with whom it is only a question of a few years when they will have an assured competence. They are tempted by the occasional gains of lucky gamblers, embark on the sea of speculation, and not infrequently lose honor as well as their worldly possessions. Take the case in Boston, of Henry B. White, who was for a long period identified with the insurance interests of New England. He was greatly esteemed, and made Secretary of the Shoe and Leather Insurance Company, of Boston. He was paid a fine salary, attended closely to business, and his habits were considered exceptionally good. Suddenly he disappeared, and an examination of the books of the concern revealed the unwelcome fact that he had, at odd times, appropriated $15,000 belonging to the company to his own use. It was subsequently learned that White had been dabbling in stocks and losing on his speculations. As a result, he became guilty of embezzlement, lost his place, became a fugitive from justice, and brought misery and disgrace upon his wife and children. The terrible danger of gambling in any shape is that, with persons of a weak nature, it finally holds out some temptation to betray trust in order to gratify a passion which has become an imperious necessity. People begin with hazarding their own money and end with putting the money of others at stake. The form of gambling which is illustrated by speculations usually starts with a desire to make money faster than by the common routine of business. Men, urged by their own greed, which is too often stimulated by extravagant wives and daughters, and tempted by the chance fortunes of others who have gone safely through the whirlpool, turn aside from the slow-going and absolutely safe pursuits which have never failed them, and venture into speculations which are at best uncertain, and in most cases absolutely ruinous. In a shocking number of cases there is not simply a loss of money, but as events prove, a loss of integrity; all that makes life desirable is offered up at the same questionable alter. A rational view of life would suggest that it is not really desirable to get suddenly rich. The employment of life are in the nature of discipline and it is better that men should fill up the full measure of their vigorous manhood in honest and useful work, and take their ease toward the close. A young, rich man, will, in nine cases out of ten, get into evil ways, and if he do not entirely squander his money he will squander health, morals and worthy ambition. If you are doing passably well at any vocation, however humdrum, stick to it and let speculation alone. A bird in the hand, etc. Any man who can see his way with reasonable clearness towards a competence at the end of his journey, is fortunate and ought to be satisfied; he should take no risks whatever. With the majority of men life is all the way through simply a struggle for present needs, with nothing to show at the end.—Louisville Commercial.

Mr. George Drake, 48 Oak street, Indianapolis, Ind., suffered terribly with "water" rheumatism. He used St. Jacobs Oil and was entirely cured.—N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

Prayer.

The following brief essay on prayer was written by the New York lawyer and journalist, William A. Bartlett, who died a few days later. The article was read at his funeral by Bishop Clark as evidence of the religious feeling of the deceased:

"There is just at present a particularly animated discussion going on as to the province and efficacy of prayer.

"It is very easy for unbelievers to ridicule prayer. They say: 'Does it rain when you pray for rain?' 'Does it stop raining when you pray for sunshine?'

"Then they laugh at the idea that a universe which is manifestly governed by general laws should be influenced by special prayers.

"In reply to all this it may be stated that all spiritual and religious affairs are enveloped in mystery. We see them as through a glass darkly.

"But what seems to us a very powerful argument in favor of prayer, and, indeed, unanswerable, is the universal instinct to fall down before a higher power and petition for help and relief under afflictions for which there is no human remedy.

"By the death-bed of our beloved who would not pray?

"Then it will not do to make light of prayer—to attempt to ridicule the whole world on its knees; for alike saint and sinner—the revered pastor and the pirate in a storm—supplicate the same God for forgiveness and preservation."

By contracting a severe Cough and Cold, I was compelled to give up my daily work and keep to the house. A neighbor recommended me to try a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; it was procured and used; to my astonishment relief was instantaneous.

Wicked for Clergymen.

Rev. ——, Washington, D. C., writes: "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

The Cause of Earthquakes.

Dr. K. Von Fritsch, of Halle, discusses the subject of earthquakes in the Verhandlungen of the Berlin Geographical Society. He maintains that the cause of earthquakes must be sought for at a rather small depth, the greatest depth ascertained not exceeding ten or fourteen miles, and usually far less, while rather feeble forces produce earthquakes which are felt at great distances. It is known that Krupp's hammer, which weighs 1,000 centners, and falls from a heighth of three meters, produce sensible concussions on a surface of eight kilometers diameter; while the recent explosion of the Leimbach dynamite manufactory was felt at Halle and Merseberg, forty-one and forty-five kilometers distant. While showing how easily concussions are produced by causes comparatively feeble, Dr. Fritsch points out how earthquakes might be and must be produced by the increase and decrease of volumes of rocks under the influence of physical and chemical forces, and by concussions, by the opening of crevices in rocks, and by the subsidence of masses of rocks due to these agencies. Many schists are subjected, as is known, to extension, and when crevices arise the schists must enter into oscillations which must produce very varied phenomena, according to the direction and the force of the oscillations, much like to what is seen in the oscillations of tuning-plates.

A Holyoke, Mass., exchange alludes to the cure of D. O. Judd, Esq., U. S. Supervisor of Postal Card Manufactory, who was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of rheumatism and neuralgia.—Bridgeport, Ct., Standard.

The best sponges are the American sponges. They come from the West Indies and the extremity of Florida. But they are not sufficient to supply the demand in the United States alone, and so sponges are imported from the Mediterranean also. Many of the West India sponges are exported from New York to London, Paris, Germany and Holland. They are especially useful for washing carriages and for similar purposes. Common bath sponges are usually from the Mediterranean, and Syrian sponges are the kind used in hospitals and by surgeons. The Florida supply is growing smaller year by year, and prices are accordingly higher. European sponges are also scarce this year.

Health, Hope and Happiness restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the positive cure for all female complaints.

A Mrs. Jenkens, in Boston, has sued her husband for divorce on the grounds of desertion. As an instance of what people in the nineteenth century may be led to, the following instances leading to this suit will be interesting: Nine years ago in Georgia they became followers of one Curro, who claimed that he was the Prophet Elijah, risen from the dead. He was eventually to have 144,000 followers, but actually had only about 100, who camped out with him on holy ground near Augusta. None of his followers were to die, but some did give up the ghost, and finally the prophet passed away, also. These events shook the belief of some, but not of all. Jenkins finally went north with his family and then left them to shift for themselves; hence the suit of the wife. The court reserved its decision till it could be ascertained whether he was a rascal or merely insane, under which last contingency no divorce could be granted.

It has wonderful power on bowels, liver and kidneys! What? Kidney-Wort.

"You may only want a part of my tale, but I am in for the hole," replied the rat.

A Soft Answer.

"Can I see the lady of the house?" inquired the peddler.

"Well, yes, you can if you ain't blind!" snapped the woman who had answered the bell.

"Oh, beg pardon, madam; you are the lady of the house, then?"

"Yes, I am! What d'yer take me fur? Did yer think I was the gentleman of the house, or the next door neighbor, or one of the farm hands, or the cat, or the ice-chist?"

"I didn't know, madame, but you might be the youngest daughter."

"O, did yer? Well, that was nat'ral, too," replied the lady of the house. "What d'yer want, sir?"

Then the peddler displayed his wares, and when he left that doorstep half an hour later, his face was full of pleasure and his pockets were full of money. He understood human nature and had made a good sale.—Boston Transcript.

A Straight Answer Wanted.

One of the east-bound trains was heavily loaded, and a passenger who got on at Ypsilanti walked through two cars and finally halted at a seat occupied by a small man and a grab-bag and inquired:

"Is this seat occupied?"

"Of course this seat is occupied," was the reply.

"Are both halves of this seat occupied?" was the next query.

"Of course both halves are occupied."

"Well, my friend," said the new arrival, as he let go of his satchel, "I want to bother you with one more query. Had you rather I would toss that grab-bag out of the window and sit down with you, or chuck you out and ride with the grab-bag?"

The grab-bag man got mad at that and wouldn't ride anywhere else than on the wood box.

Public School Discipline.

There is in the public schools too much of this military drilling which forbids a tired and restless child to change its position and rest from a cruel constraint. It is sometimes absolute torture to a delicate child to maintain the stiffness and stillness enjoined by the foolish teacher. A moderate amount of freedom of movement can not be productive of disturbance to a well managed school. The teacher who thoroughly knows his business and is born to his work is never an unreasoning martinet.—New York Tribune.

The Dr. Harter Medicine Company, of St. Louis, Mo., is one of the most honorable and substantial establishments in the country. Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is one of the standard and most-highly-esteemed preparations of the day, and justly enjoys a wide and increasing sale. This is brought about by the high merit of the goods and the judicious and extensive manner in which they are advertised throughout the country. Laudatory columns might be easily written in their praise, but, with goods so able to speak for themselves, simple facts serve a better purpose.—Des Moines (Iowa) Western Farm Journal.

Dr. Winchell's Teething Syrup has never failed to give immediate relief when used in cases of Summer Complaint, Cholera-infantum, or pains in the stomach. Mothers, when your little darlings are suffering from these or kindred causes, do not hesitate to give it a trial. You will surely be pleased with the charming effect. Be sure to buy Dr. Winchell's Teething Syrup. Sold by all druggists. Only 25 cents per bottle.

For dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the Ferro Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya Bark, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

For Headache, Constipation, Liver Complaint and all bilious derangements of the blood, there is no remedy as sure and safe as Eilert's Daylight Liver Pills. They stand unrivalled in removing bile, toning the stomach and in giving healthy action to the liver. Sold by all druggists.

There is but one real cure for baldness—Carboline, a deodorized extract of petroleum, a natural Hair Restorer. As recently improved, Carboline is free from any objection. The best hair dressing known.

A tonic administered through the stomach is generally exchant, and apt to derange functional action, but Dr. Holman's Pad supplies the tonic by absorption, and is therefore the proper form of remedial application. A trial will prove how important is this form of cure.

The sales of the Frazer axle grease are increasing every day, because it is as good as represented.

For Rheumatism, Sprains and Bruises, use Uncle Sam's Nerve and Bone Liniment, sold by all druggists.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.

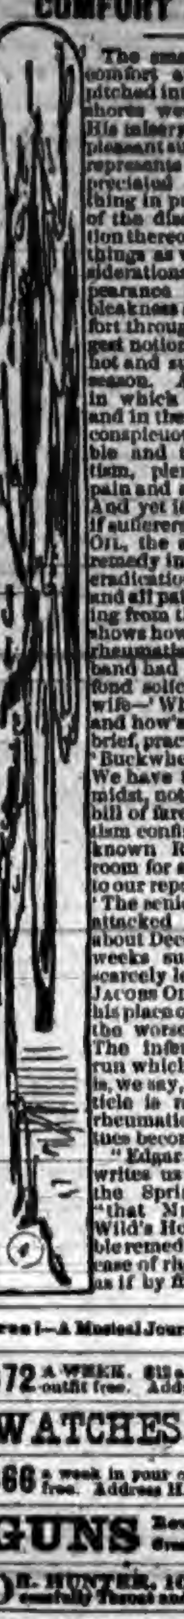
COMFORT BY THE WAY.



The small boy's idea of genuine comfort and happiness was to be pitched into a pond of ice cream whose shores were made of sponge cake. His misery was the absence of these pleasant substances. That boy simply represents humanity. Comfort is appreciated by contrast—we enjoy a thing in proportion to our conception of the disadvantages of our deprivation thereof. This applies to material things as well as to immaterial considerations. The icicle, whose appearance in the wintry cold and bleakness sends the shiver of discomfort through the observer, would suggest notions of the coolest comfort in hot and sultry days of the summer season. And in both seasons—that in which the icicle flourishes best and in the one wherein its absence is conspicuous—that most uncomfortable and torturing disease, rheumatism, plentifully abounds, causing pain and agony to myriads of people. And yet it need not be thus afflictive if sufferers would only use St. Jacobs Oil, the surest, safest and speediest remedy in the whole world for the eradication and cure of rheumatism and all painful ailments. The following from the Rochester (Ind.) Sentinel shows how some people attend to their rheumatism: "When a young husband had gone from home, and with fond solicitude telegraphed his little wife—'What have you for breakfast, and how's the baby?' he received the brief, practical and suggestive reply—'Buckwheat cakes and the measles.' We have the report of a case in our midst, not where measles was in the bill of fare, but where sciatic rheumatism confined Mr. J. Dawson, the well-known Rochester druggist, to his room for a long period. It was stated to our reporter in the following words: 'The senior member of this firm was attacked with sciatic rheumatism about December 10th last, and for four weeks succeeding Feb. 10th, could scarcely leave his room. He used St. Jacobs Oil, and is now able to be at his place of business, feeling not much the worse for his recent affliction. The inference is convincing. The run which St. Jacobs Oil is having is, we say, unprecedented, and the article is rapidly displacing all other rheumatic remedies as fast as its virtues become known.

"Edgar T. Paige, Esq., druggist, writes us from Chicopee Falls," says the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, "that Mr. Albert Guenther, under Wild's Hotel, has used that remarkable remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, for a severe case of rheumatism, and it cured him as if by magic."

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.

Gentlemen:—I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your Iron Tonic, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. Watson, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

The Iron Tonic is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark, and Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

The American Flag.

The first European banners unfurled upon the shores of the New World, of which we have any authentic account, are those of Columbus, who landed on the small island of San Salvador, October 12, 1492. Doubtless his ideas of a new world came from Ireland, which he visited early in 1477.

His son writes that Columbus, dressed in scarlet, stepped ashore and planted the royal standard of Spain, emblazoned with the arms of Castile and Leon. A white flag with a green cross was its companion.

In 1499 the eastern coast of South America was explored, and eight years later the discovery was announced to the world by a Florentine, Americus Vespucius, who gave name to the Western Continent. About this time, the Cabots planted on the shores of North American the banner of England and of St. Marks, of Venice. The early voyagers found that the Indians of North America carried as a standard, a pole covered with the wing feathers of eagles.

The red cross of St. George floated from the mast of the Mayflower, 1620, when the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock. For a century and a half, during the colonial and provincial periods, the use of the English flag continued in North America, with the addition of many devices and mottoes.

Some flags were all red, with white horizontal stripes, and blue stripes. Others were red, blue, white or yellow. Upon these were the pine or "Liberty tree," and the words, "An Appeal to Heaven;" also stars, the crescent, anchor, beaver and serpent. Under the latter, "Don't tread on me." A flag at the battle of White Plains bore the words "Liberty or Death."

On January 2, 1776, at Cambridge, Mass., was first hoisted the "Grand Union" flag of the crosses of St. George and St. Andrews, and the thirteen alternate red and white stripes, emblematic of the union of the thirteen colonies against the oppressive acts of British tyranny.

This was the flag in use when the Declaration of Independence was read by the Committee of Safety at Philadelphia, in the presence of Washington in New York, and from the balcony of the State House in Boston.

On the 14th of August, 1777, congress resolved "that the flag of the United States be thirteen stripes, alternately red and white, and that the union be thirteen stars, white, in a blue field, representing a new constellation."

Once the stripes were increased to fifteen, but in 1818 they were changed back permanently to thirteen, prepetuating the original thirteen states of the Union, and it was decreed that for every new state coming into the Union a star should be added. The stars have five points; those in our coins, six. They were first arranged in a circle, afterwards in the form of a large star, and now in parallel lines.

Marvelous Fish Story.

A rich proprietor at the interior had made to establish a pond artificial, where found themselves agglomerated 3,000 trouts.

This proprietor is the father of a girling of from 5 to 6.

She had taken the habitude to go each morning to give to eat to the trouts, at the aid of crumbs of bread.

These fishes were become so entamed that they skipped out of the water to attrap the crumbs which the infant child held in the crevice of her hand.

It arrived one day that she lost the equilibrium, and she fell, the head the first, in the pond, of which the water was enough to profound.

At the cries emitted by the girling, the father was run himself,

But what horror! He saw his infant extended without movement at the surface, where she floated as a cork.

What was not the surprise of the father in seeing that she had been supported by a mass compact of trouts.

The fishes had arranged themselves under her body as to sustain and prevent her from drown.

If this history is truthful, the fishes are not so much deprived of the intelligence as one pleased himself to believe.—[Translated from the French.

Sunday-School Institute.

The Richland Township Sunday-School institute met at the Methodist church, in Corunna, October 29, 1881.

Devotional exercises by Rev. Harding.

Welcome address by F. G. Fried.

The association was then addressed by the following gentlemen: F. W. Willis of Waterloo, Rev. Paschall, of Corunna, L. D. Britton and others.

AFTERNOON SESSION:

After prayer and singing, Rev. Klotz, of Waterloo, responded promptly to the call of the chairman, followed by F. W. Willis, of Waterloo, Mrs J L Hine, of Sedan, and others. The question box and miscellaneous business being disposed of, a motion was made by L. D. Britton, and seconded by the chairman, that we extend a hearty invitation to the Sunday-school workers of Fairfield township, to meet and work with us in our next institute, to be held at the U B church in Corunna, on the last Saturday of January, 1882.

The Executive Mansion.

The president's home at Washington, which is officially termed the executive mansion, commonly called the white house, has a history that runs back nearly ninety years. Its corner stones were laid under the superintendence of Captain James Hobon, as architect, on the thirteenth of December, 1792. Captain Hobon was an Irish architect, direct from Dublin, via Charleston, who took the award of $500 for the design. He is buried in the Catholic cemetery at Washington, and his descendants are still living in that city. The British destroyed the building in 1814. It was afterwards rebuilt by Captain Hobon, and was first opened for the reception of visitors on January 1, 1819. The portico, of four lofty columns on the north side, was added in 1829, during the administration of President Jackson. It is a lofty building, two stories in height, having a frontage of 170 feet and a depth of 80 feet. The vestibule within the front door is 50x40 feet in dimentions. The famous east room, which was finished only fifty years ago, is 80 feet long by 40 wide and 23 feet high. Eight large mirrors and three chandeliers of crystal and silver adorn it. The walls are covered with gray paper, and the trimming of the furniture is grey reps and maroon velvet. With the exception of our public halls, it is probably the largest room in the country, and for its size is certainly the handsomest. It is the Mecca of all lady visitors to the capitol. The president's office, which is in the second story, is also the cabinet room, and is not a very large department for the white house, although about thirty-five or forty feet deep, by perhaps thirty feet wide, and with a high ceiling. A long table is in the middle of the floor, with leather seated chairs around it; the two windows have long lambrequin curtains of a dark, bluish gray color. A large map of the United States is on the wall. The carpet is of a red tint, with large figures. The general effect of the room as one enters is that of a library without books. The white house is surrounded immediately by twenty acres of garden and park. The lawn is still a naked plain, reaching on to the Potomac, like a desert coming to the palace stairs. Like Versailles in the time of Louis XVI., Washington is a government creation, and the white house is memorable only for the people who have lived in it. Every one of our presidents, except Washington, has lived in the great house, and he has poked his horse's head into its portals to look at the workmen plastering on the scaffold. The original cost of the building in 1792 was about $333,000, and the total cost of the structure to the present time, with refurnishing, etc., has been about $1,750,000. The unhealthful character of Washington, and of the white house locality in particular, has been for years a subject of complaint.

A good Baptist clergyman, of Bergen, N. Y., a strong temperance man, suffered with kidney trouble, neuralgia, and dizziness almost to blindness, over two years after he was told that Hop Bitters would cure him, because he was afraid of and prejudiced against "Bitters." Since his cure he says none need fear but trust in Hop Bitters. 44-2w.

TEACHERS' CONVENTION.

Full Proceedings of the Institute Last Week.

A GOOD WORK ACCOMPLISHED IN FIVE DAYS.

FIRST DAY'S SESSION:

The institute met at 1:30 p. m., and was called to order by the superintendent. The choir, composed of Mr. M. Widney, Miss Sadie Hare, Miss Rosa Shaffer, with Miss Flora Hoffman as organist, sang the opening piece. Prayer was then offered by Rev. S. B. Ward, and another piece was sung by the choir. Organization was effected by electing T. J. Saxton secretary. Superintendent Barns then made a brief speech, calling attention to the necessity of the work before the meeting, and asking the active co-operation of every member present. The first regular lession was then brought on.

ANALYSIS BY DIAGRAMS.

This was conducted by M. W. Harrison, teacher in the public schools of Auburn. It was nicely done, and showed well. He began by explaining the different uses made of the lines used. The main line, or stem, is to show the principle parts of the sentence, with the modifiers attached by sloping lines drawn from the main stem and extending to the right and downward. Mr. H. explained the different ways of showing the subjects a verb may have, whether it be a single word, phrase or a sentence. He prefers to put everything used as a noun on the main stem, except the infinitive. When the infinitive is used, he would place it on a broken line, and attach it to the main stem by a vertical line. The subject is separated from the predicate by a short line across the main stem. With this treatment of the subject, the lesson ended. Explanations were asked by Coe, Hubbell and others, after which was recess.

MISS DOLAN'S CLASS

came next. Miss D. is a teacher in the primary department of the Garrett school. She had brought eleven of her pupils, bright little boys and girls, to illustrate her method. It was a reading class. She called on one to read from a designated lesson. The lesson was found, and the pupil read without further instruction. This was repeated until several had read, when the exercise was changed. They were directed to find a given word, and look for it, found it, and, after calling it aright, looked for another. The teacher explained that her pupils must know by sight the words in the lesson before attempting to read it. Then, the reading will be more natural and easy, with no hesitation or break. The difficult words of the lesson are pronounced before it is read. First the teacher pronounces, then the pupils in concert. Next the pupils pronounce it alone, and when they can do this well, they are ready to read.

One part of the exercise, consisted in spelling by sound, words written on the board. They were then spelled by letters. Attention was called to the silent letters, and to other matters connected with the lesson. The class showed good drill and were quite proficient for children of that age. It was remarked that they stood well in the class, there being but little of that swinging motion usually noticed in primary classes. At the close of this lesson Mr Houser called attention to the daily institute paper that was to be published, stated the terms, and made some remarks as to its object.

DALE'S READING CLASS

came next, and was listened to with intense interest. Mr. Dale had written up an outline of his work, and proceeded to follow it up with explanations and drills. He spoke of the great importance of taking the breath in a proper manner, and of sitting erect. Had whole audience rise in concert at a giving signal, and then showed them the different ways of taking breath. They can take breath while leaning to the right,—while leaning to the left,—while standing upright with the hands at the back, or with the hands hanging down at the side. This showed the different methods by which the lungs may be filled, and to what extent it should be done. Teachers must learn to do, as well as to direct or to criticise. A person may be able to criticise another, and yet not be able to do the work any better. Mr. Dale dwelt on the importance of articulation, and gave a short preliminary drill in producing tones. His work is to be followed up to-day.

SECOND DAY'S SESSION:

Mr. Merica, of the Garrett schools, was introduced and gave a lesson upon the converse operations in interest. We should reason from many to one, The pupil is discouraged by the usual methods. Mr. M. has, thereupon, adopted a formula by which to teach interest.

P x R x T equals Interest

From this we derive the following:

(A) Interest divided by (P x R) equals time.

(B) Interest divided by (P x T) equals rate.

Am't divided by am't of $1 for T x R equals principal.

Mr. O. Z. Hubbell, principal of the Butler schools, began his remarks on the subject of Physiology, by stating that, as education does not consist in merely learning text-books, but in something higher, the discipline of the mind, we find in that fact alone sufficient argument for studying Physiology in our common schools. Passing from these prefatory remarks, he proceeded to consider, under two heads, the immediate effects obtained by teaching this subject.

First,—Importance to the teacher.—It is important to the teacher, because he is liable to become overworked, or to give undue anxiety to his school—anxiety to that degree which impairs health. It is important in order that he may give the proper attention to his person, diet, sleep, and exercise; that he may be able to adapt these to his temperament. He dwelt upon this very forcibly, and we trust that all who listned to his remarks will give more attention to these essential matters.

2.—To the pupils.—Under this head, he said that the same remarks will apply to the pupil which he had stated with reference to the teacher.

3.—To the parent.—He dwelt with great energy on this part of his subject, because, as he stated, upon the parent depends the proper heating, ventilating and lighting of the home, and the consequent health of the family.

2d part.—How to make the subject important, or interesting to the pupil.—Under this division of his remarks, he dwelt upon the necessity of explaining in each recitation the lesson for the succeeding recitation, in order that all may study the lesson understandingly.

Recitations should be mainly by topics, as this method cultivates independence of any text-book. Familiar conversation between the pupils and teacher will increase interest in the study. He would not be confined to one text-book. He objects to the present text-books, because, written from the standpoint of the practitioner, instead of so presenting the matter that its study will prevent disease. He then cautioned teachers against allowing pupils to come in from play, warm, and sit with coats removed, and in a draught of air.

The institute regretted that the hour of twelve prevented Mr. Hubbell from completing his lecture.

Mr. McIntyre's lesson on Geography was an interesting feature of yesterday. Mr. M. said that many pupils can bound the state in which they live but they can not bound their own county. Many know that Texas is the largest state in the Union, but do not know that Allne county is the largest in the state. He should pay more attention to home geography. For this lesson we will take Indiana.

The subject can be divided into four parts: 1st, The History 2d, The Situation, 3d Boundary, 4th, Divisions.

1. Situation of Indiana is 37 degrees, 47 minutes and 41 degrees, 47 minutes North latitude, and 84 degrees 49 minutes and 87 degrees, 35 minutes. 276, miles long by 140 miles wide.

2. The boundaries are Ohio, Michigan Lake Michigan, Illinois and Kentucky,

3. Divisions are Counties, Cities and Towns.

Counties are divided into Townships, Civil and Congressional.

Mr. McIntyre also explained the plan of the public survey.

State Superintendent Bloss was introduced to the Institute by Supt. Barns yesterday morning, and spoke briefly to the teachers. After exercises in analysis, by Mr. Harrison, Mr. Bloss gave the teachers a talk on the "Elements of Success." The first element is thought preparation. If one wishes to teach Arithmetic he must be well informed in Algebra, Geometry, and all kindred branches. In Grammar, the teacher must know more than one author. He must also know Logic and Rhetoric, or he would teach all these subjects together; also in Geography, the teacher must know more than mere location, etc. If he know only this, he can only cultivate memory at the expense of reason. The teacher must understand Physical Geography, which involves, 1st, Geography, 2d, Astronomy, 3d Zoology.

The teacher must dig deep into studies outside of the course which is taught. Young men say that they have not the time to do this. They are too ambitious. No man, however, accomplishes much before the age of thirty. The time from nineteen to twenty-five years of age should be used to cultivate the mind. Every teacher needs a classical education. This is a progressive age; we are moving on, and the teacher who would teach as he did fifteen years ago would soon have no position. The teacher must be prepared for his work firstby a classical education, second, by a special training. The second element of success is skill, power, ability to conduct recitations. The teacher should not expect too much of a child. More teachers fail on this account than any other. Because a man can talk it does not follow that he can teach. He should not continually reiterate and talk over things already known to the pupil, Third, the teacher must teach the individual and not the class. He must study the mind. If he do not he will fail. A pupil often fails to answer a question because he failed to make the knowledge his own. The teacher must then understand the pupil and by proper questions, lead the pupil to make the knowledge his own.

Mr. Bloss also offered a suggestion to the teachers as to how to obtain knowledge. The teacher who knows only books may be a poor teacher. The teacher must not only know what to teach but how to teach.

Scholarship will not, of itself, bring success; the teacher must know something of the world. He ought to read widely and repeat it to his pupils. In thisway Reverdy Johnson made himself what he was. Let the teacher thus improve himself as well as the pupil. But the talks to the pupil should be upon subjects outside of school work.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The lecture by Superintendent Bloss was well attended in spite of the continuous rain. His subject was, "The Old Civilization and the New." He took for a basis of his theme, the city of Colchester, England, as shown by its records in 1301, and its condition to-day. This was followed up by frequent comparisons with the condition of the people of our own country at the present time. The lecture was what might be called a strong one, and made a lasting impression on the minds of the audience. Mr. Bloss' work in the institute has made an excellent impression, and he leaves with the best wishes, as well as the regrets of all.

THIRD DAYS SESSION:

The first lesson on yesterday morning was an exercise in grammar by Mr. Harrison. Subject, "The Copula."

1 The office of the copula is to affirm the predicate of the subject. Mr. Harrison invited any criticism that might be made.

2. The copula is found in every sentence. It is either a separate word or words, or it is merged into the predicate in the form of a verb. The first sentence analyzed upon the board, contained a copula; thus merged in the predicate. The pure copula is the verb "to be;" as, The boy is industrious, "Is" is the copula.

3 The verbs seem, think, appear, look, etc. are strengthened copulas. "The man seems intelligent." In this sentence "seems" is a strengthened copula.

4. Some verbs have in them the ideas of change, but are copulas. Others denote continuation, and retain their copulative force. "He remained silent." Remained is a copula denoting continuation.

5. Another classof verbs pertains to the senses, being at the same time copulative verbs. "The apple tastes sour." Another class of verbs denotes condition, as run, sit and stand.

6. Still another class of verbs are copulas, though they are transitive in their nature. "I got a book." Here, got is a transitive verb, but in this sentence: "I got well." the word got is a copula.

7. There is a class of verbs, also, which take two object, one of the person, one of the rank or occupation. All such verbs in the passive voice become copulas, as, "They elect John captain." When we change the voice of the verb, we have this sentence: "John was elected captain." In this case, was elected, according to definition, becomes a copula.

8. A copula may also consist of a finite mode and an infinitive depending upon it. These are called by Whitney, verbs of incomplete predecation. Example; "Men ought to be perfect."

9. The next class of copulas are adjectives followed by an Infinitive, As, "We are able to be scholars." "Able to be" is the copula.

10. "People are apt to be rash." "Are apt to be" is the copula. Mr. H. contended that in such expressions as "I intend to be a scholar," "I intend to be" is the copula, though not a pure copula. He supports this by analogies from Greek, Latin and German.

Mr. Baxter and some others asked explanations.

The first lesson yesterday afternoon was given by Mr. Dale, subject, "Elocution." (1.) Two methods of changing the monotone; (a) skips, (b) slides. Mr. Dale took up the subject where he left off the day before. The difference between skips and slides was defined as follows: Skips are sudden changes from one pitch to another; slides are gradual changes. Mr. Dale continued by saying that "the exercises of to-day are exaggerations." They consist of drills which are for the purpose of getting control of the vocal organs. The exercise in slides gives greater flexibility of the voice than other exercises.

This was followed by other exercises on slides and skips, using the vowels a, e, i, o, u. These exercises should always be lively and animated. They will not accomplish so much good if they drag. The simple slide, compound and double compound slides were given by the school. A selection from "The Bridge" was repeated with rising, falling and compound slides.

Mr. Dale's guide to know good reading is to hear the person without seeing him. Then if the listener can detect that it is reading, it is poor. If he can not tell whether it is reading or speaking, then it is good. If the listener receives the impression that he hears original conversation, then it is "artistic."

In practicing the exercises in elocution it should be done by class, and not individually. Concert practice is the better. Following this was an exercise in skips. The class attempted to point out skips in Mr. Dale's reading.

This was followed by an exercise in conversational poetry—simple, pure style. The Prof. then showed how to represent different pitches, and closed with an exercise in articulation.

The second lesson of the afternoon session yesterday, was given by Mr. Coe, of the Waterloo schools. The subject was "History." Method illustrated by a class from the Waterloo schools. He uses the topical and exponential method. The class must keep a topical record of the entire work of the term. The divisions are numbered by numerals. The subordination of the topics is shown by an exponent, and the number shows the order of subordination. Mr. Coe called his class in the way usual in his school. The class was then sent to the board, and put thereon their work. The recitation was then heard, the class did well, and the manner of their recitation was admired by all present. We are sorry that we have not the space to outline each pupil's work. Mr. Coe believes that a class cannot complete an ordinary text book in one term. More time should be given to this branch of study. If the pupil had learned his lesson so that he recited in a mechanical way, then question him, otherwise not. In review exercises, one pupil should give dates, and the class respond with events, then another should give events, and the class respond with dates. Whenever a topic is taken up, it should be thoroughly learned before passing on to another. The method thus presented, is good, and we recommend our teachers to study it with a view to use it,

HUBBELL'S LECTURE.

For the benefit of teachers we report in full the outline of Mr. Hubbell's lecture on School Management,

I. GRADED SCHOOLS.

1.—School, (1.) Grades, (a) grade "A." (b) grade "B." (2) Method. (3) Interest.

2. TEACHERS.

(1)—Enforce Orders. (2) Control of Room. (3) Teaching.

(3) SUPERINTENDENT.

(1)—Preparation. (2) Authority. (a) Method. (a) In Dismissing. (b) Supervision. (b) Discipline. (a) Pupils. (b) Teachers.

II. COUNTRY SCHOOLS.

1—School. (1) Grades. (a) Grade "A" (b) Grade "B." (c) Grade "C." (2) Method. (3) Interest.

2—TEACHER.

(1) Method. (2) Discipline. (3) Common Sense. (4) Perseverance. (5) Preparation. (6) Soul Sight. (7) Authority—firm, kind, earnest.

In graded schools he would have only two grades in any department, and believes that a superintendent while visiting a room has full control of it. He would grade country schools closely and seat the pupils by grades and hear them recite in their seats.

Mr. Hubbell's remarks on grading in country schools elicited a warm discussion in which Mr. Bloss took part, stating that this matter must be brought about gradually, by interesting parents and by securing the co-operation of the trustee and county superintendent.

BLOSS' LECTURE.

He began by stating that one reason why this subject is not better understood, generally, is because it really is difficult to understand. He wanted all to remember that there is no "the way," and exhorted all to rise above the idea that their way of presenting a subject or teaching a lesson is the only way. He illustrated his thought by solving a problem in long division, by a contracted method, which he, to the great satisfaction of the institute, explained at the close of his lecture. By this method, he showed that there is more than one way of solving problems in long division even, which truth will apply to every subject; and he said there are pupils whom you have to bring to see this fact, before you can teach them. He would begin to teach this part of arithmetic without any distinction of cases, as argued in the books, but teach pupils to distinguish each of the terms, base, rate, percentage, amount and difference, without any trouble in any problem. He would always have a full statement made of each problem. He took the problem, "I sold a house for $500 and gained 10 per cent. What was the cost?" He first drew forth the statement: A equals $500, R equals per cent., to find B. From the same statement he deduced two other problems:

1. Sold a house for $500, and gained 10 per cent. What was the gain?

2. Sold a house for $300, and gained 10 per cent. What per cent of cost price was the selling price?

He next placed on the board: B equals $500, P equals $500, and remarked that this problem should relate to a horse trade, after which he called upon members of the institute to state problems from the things given. In compliance with the request, three problems were stated. By a process of calculation, he solved the problems given. After proceeding in this manner till the pupils thoroughly understood each term and its relation, he would solve the problems as arranged in the text-book adopted in the school. In his pleasant, masterly way, he worked up much interest in the subject, and presented facts worthy of consideration and appreciation.

MERICA'S LESSON.

He spoke first of the care which should be exercised in assigning lessons, he generally assigns lessons the first thing on calling classes, in order that full time may be given to that part of the work, even if it is at the expense of the recitation. He fully explains all terms, which he would have classes understand, before proceeding to the solution of problems.

Under the head of method, we first give his formula. Cost of $1 exchange, plus face, equals cost of draft.

Below we give the problems he used together with the solutions.

I. What is the cost of a sight draft on Chicago, for $1680 at 1 1-8 per cent. premium?

Solve.

1. Cost of $1 exchange equals $1.01 1-8

2. Cost of $1680 equals $1.01 1-8 times 1680 equals $1698.90.

II. What is the cost of a draft on Portland, for $1860, payable in 60 days after sight, at 6 per cent. int., exchange being at 7-8 per cent. premium.

Solve.

1. The cost of $1 sight draft equals $1.007-8 or 1.00876.

2. The discount of $1 for 63 days equals $.0105.

3. $1.000875 minus .0105 equals $.99,-825, cost of $1 time draft. Substituting in the above formula, which holds good, both in a sight and time draft, We have $.99825 plus $1860 equals $1857.82.

III. The cost of a draft for 60 days at 7-8 per cent. premium, was $1857.92, what was the face? Substituting in the formula, we have

$$\frac{$1857.92}{$.99825} \text{ equals } $1860, \text{ Face.}$$

FOURTH DAY'S SESSION:

HARRISON'S LECTURE.

The first exercise yesterday morning was a lesson in grammar by M. W. Harrison. This was a continuation of the subject of grammar which is under this gentleman's charge. His remarks were upon the "Objective Element." In analyzing a sentence the main line should contain the principal elements, and if there is an object it should also be upon the main line. Mr. H. uses a double line for the principal proposition, and a single line for the subordinate proposition. If the object is modified, place the modifier on an oblique line below. If modified by an infinitive or any element of the second class, it should be upon a broken line. If an object is of the third class, elevate it. In same way treat an objective element of the third class.

Mr. H. defined the object and said that it may be a word, phrase or clause—that it may be simple or compound— and direct or indirect.

The object may be an infinitive with a subject. Any class of objective elements may be compound. "You learn to be good and to be just" "To be good and to be just" is the compound object.

Some verbs take two objects, and if a preposition is used with the indirect object it becomes an adverbial element. The prepositions "to," "of," "for," "from," may be used with indirect object when it follows the direct object. Some verbs that in the passive voice take two objects, will admit an object when the verbs become passive.

There are also objects of "transitives." Ex.—"I am confident that Mr. Hutchins rode through the village." In this sentence all that follows "confident" is regarded by Mr. H. as the object of the transitive adjective "confident," because this word has the force of the transitive verb "know." He followed with several other classes of objects. The lesson was good and well received.

MR. CYRUS SMITH was introduced to the Institute, and began his remarks by saying that he was pleased to meet the teachers. He is good-natured now, but was a very cross boy. He announced the meeting of the State Teachers Association for December 27, 28 and 29. Urged all teachers to go, as the social part of it would pay for the outlay. Headquarters of teachers will be at the Grand Hotel. He talked upon the "Purposes of Study."

1. It is to acquire knowledge This is attained by skillful training and drill. Children should be led step by step. The work should be of such a character that the child will learn something outside of text books. When we have accomplished this we have done a good deal. We should inculcate method in the child.

2. There should be discipline—a thorough understanding of what is given them— otherwise the child cannot learn,

3. If the child does not learn the lesson we should ask ourselves whose fault it is. Put yourself in child's place.

4. Another purpose of study is to gain a mastery over difficulties in future.

5. Physical comfort. See that the child sits with ease. If pupil is uncomfortable he can not study.

6. Arrange proper periods of study. To do this, study your school.

7. Children should study as long as they can keep quiet.

8. Teachers should remember the force of example.

9. Authority. Cheerful, earnest, well-directed study, is the key to scholarship and success.

10. Suitable exercises—different in various schools.

11. Proper diet.

12. Communications should be made through the teacher, and in no other way.

13. A clear idea must be given to the pupil. No book is so well graded that no explanations are needed.

LAMPORT'S LECTURE.

The second lesson in the afternoon was given by Prof. Lamport, principal of the Waterloo schools. His subject was the "Thirty Formulae of Percentage." He began by stating that Mr. Bloss' lesson of the day before was upon the same general subject, and that he would take up the subject where Mr. B. had left off. We give the formulae in full for the benefit of the teachers:

Formula 6. Given A and D to find P, is A minus D divided by 2, equals P.

CASE II.

Formula 1. Given B and P to find R, is P divided by B equals R.

CASE V.

Formula 1. Given B and R to find D, is B multiplied by (1 minus R) equals D.

Formula 2. Given B and P to find D, is B minus P equals D.

Formula 3. Given B and A to find D, is B minus (A minus B) equals D.

Formula 4. Given R and P to find D, is (P divided by R) minus P equals D.

Formula 5. Given R and A to find D, is [A divided by (1 plus R)] multiplied by (1 minus R) equals D.

Formula 6. Given P and A to find D, is A minus 2 P equals D; or, (A minus P) minus P equals D.

The foregoing formulas will prove great aid to teachers and pupils. Any case that may arise in percentage can be quickly and understandingly disposed of by this method. Mr. Lamport's remarks were well received by the large audience.

Prof. Fyke, of Bryan, Ohio, was called up and gave a talk on language lessons, and for the benefit of the teachers of the county, we give his outline in full:

First.—The place of language lessons on the school programme: (A.) With reading lesson in lower grades—1st and 2d readers. (B.) In upper grades to be a separate exercise.

Second.—These lessons include, (A.) mechanical training; (B.) intellectual preparation.

Third.—Common errors in teaching composition or language. (A.) Having pupils to try to write without thought; (B.) using unsuitable subjects; (C.) endeavoring to do too much; (D.) neglecting oral expression, confining the attention mostly to written forms; (E.) making the work one of memory rather than adjustment of thought and language (F.) writing too infrequently; (G.) writing at home without the teacher's help; (H.) teaching oral grammar in place of giving language lessons; (I.) separating the language training from other school work; (J.) want of gradation in exercise.

Fourth.— First reader pupils—(A.) should be encouraged to hold free conversation with the teacher upon reading and other lessons; (B.) they should make sentences about things they see, hear, etc.; (C.) use the words they learn in their reader in new and original sentences; (D.) reciting verses, maxims, and select paragraphs may be both language, culture and moral instruction; (E.) describe common objects.

Fifth.— Second reader pupils— (A.) should be able to write readily; (B.) be trained in both oral and written expressions of thought; (C.) they should be encouraged to tell what they think and know, see and do; (D.) use new words in sentences; (E.) fill blanks in sentence with proper words—1st predicate, 2d subject; (F.) talk about pictures in reading books—about persons and facts in lessons; (G.) write a specified number of sentences about the above; (H.) tell the story of the reading lesson after reading; (I.) reproduce stories told or read to them; (J.) in above work, all errors in pronunciation, spelling and grammar should be carefully corrected.

It was regretted that Mr. Fyke did not fully expand and explain each step.

EXERCISE IN NUMBERS.

Mrs. A. L. Lamport, teacher of the first primary room, Waterloo public schools, gave an exercise in numbers, with her class of ten little boys and girls, who have been in school but one year. The class was called in the manner used by Mrs. L. in her school, and they proceeded to complete the table showing the combination of 2's

[Concluded on Eighth Page.]

A SAILOR'S YARN.

This is the tale that was told to me
By a shattered and battered son of the sea
To me and my messmate, Silas Green,
When I was a guileless young marine.

'Twas the good ship Gyascutus,
All on the China seas,
With the wind a lee and the capstan free,
To catch the summer breeze.

'Twas Capt. Porgie of the deck
To the mate in the mizzen hatch,
While the boatswain bold, in the for'ard hold,
Was winding his larboard watch.

"Oh, how does our good ship head to-night?
How heads our gallant craft?"
"Oh, she heads E. S. W. by N.,
And the binnacle lies abaft."

"Oh, what does the quadrant indicate?
And how does the sextant stand?"
"Oh, the sextant's down to the freezing point,
And the quadrant's lost a hand."

"Oh, if the quadrant's lost a hand,
And the sextant falls so low,
It's our body and bones to Davy Jones
This night are bound to go.

"Oh, fly aloft to the garboard streak,
And reef the spanker boom,
Bend a steady sail to the martingale
To give her weather room.

"Oh, boatswain, down in the for'ard hold,
What water do you find?"
"Four foot and a half by the royal gaff,
And rather more behind."

"Oh, sailors, collar your marlinspikes
And each belaying pin;
Come, stir your stumps to spike the pumps,
Or more will be coming in."

They stirred their stumps, they spiked the pumps,
They spliced the mizzen brace;
Aloft and alow they worked, but, oh!
The water gained apace.

They bored a hole below her line
To let the water out,
But more and more with awful roar
The water in did spout.

Then up spoke the cook of our gallant ship—
And he was a lubber brave—
"I've several wives in various ports,
And my life I'd like to save."

Then up spoke the Captain of the marines,
Who dearly loved his grog,
"It's awful to die, and it's worse to be dry,
And I move we pipe to grog."

Oh, then, 'twas the gallant second mate
As stopped the sailors' jaw,
'Twas the second mate whose hand has weight
In laying down the law.

He took the anchor on his back,
And leapt into the main;
Through foam and spray he clove his way,
And sunk and rose again.

Through foam and spray, a league away,
The anchor stout he bore,
Till safe at last, he made it fast,
And warped the ship ashore.

This was the tale that was told to me
By that honest and truthful son of the sea.

And I envy the life of a second mate,
Though Captains curse him and sailors hate;
For he ain't like some of the swabs I've seen,
As would go and lie to a poor marine.

A HIDEOUS TOLL-GATHERER.

In the year 1857, I was mate of the ship Ellen Bird, then making her third voyage. It was in the palmy days of the sandal-wood and beeswax trade, and we were at the Island of Timor, anchored at Delhi haven, taking in a cargo.

Sandal-wood, so valuable because of its enduring perfume for the manufacture of fancy work-boxes, desks and cabinets, could, at that time, be obtained in considerable quantities in Timor. It grows there as a small timber tree among the mountains of the interior. The natives are hired to take it to the harbor in small logs, carried on the shoulders of two or three men walking together, or upon the backs of their famed ponies.

While slowly taking in this part of our cargo, log by log, I, as mate of the vessel, was dispatched on a trip inland, to hasten the collection of beeswax. Three of the seamen accompanied me. Some twenty natives of the island also went with us to take up the wild bees' nests, and these were to be paid in goods at the vessel for all the wax they might gather.

For over a week we slept in two bamboo huts set up on posts, with thatched roofs, at a place the natives called the Dardees, twenty or twenty-five miles back from Delhi.

Dardee is the Timorese name for a very curious tree, the roots of which rise out of the ground in a tangled, complicated pyramid to the height of sixty, and even eighty, feet. It is at the top of this vast mass that the real trunk of the trees begins, branching out above in a top almost as thick and extensive as the root. Often these wide-spread and thickly-woven dardee roots inclose an open space at their center, where one may stand directly beneath the great trunk overhead. These root systems are not infrequently thirty, forty and even fifty feet in diameter, exhibiting a singularly-grotesque, gnarled appearance; and where a forest of them stand moderately close together they present to the eye a most bewildering maze.

But the forests of Timor are, as a rule, by no means dense. Open plats, full of rank, coarse grass and flowers, alternate with the groves of larger trees; and the whole country round about the huts, where we spend our nights, was one great natural apiary. The huts, in fact, were built by bee-hunters, who each year visit the district to get honey and wax.

Much as has been said and written concerning bees, I think the reader will yet find something novel in a brief description of the wild bees of Timor, and the old method by which the natives capture them. These bees (the apis dorsata) do not, like the wild bees of America and other countries, build their nests in hollow trees, or clefts in the crags. I was astonished to see hanging to the lower side of some stout branch, far up in the tops of the loftiest trees, a great cone of honeycomb, often four feet in diameter by five feet in length. These combs are so piled and covered in as to resist the weather completely, and are cemented to the branch with a thick, glutinous stump of very tough and compact wax. I estimated the weight of some of these large combs at 300 pounds.

During the week we were in the forest, we took, I should think, nearly 500 of these honey-cones. The honey, save what we could eat with our food, was of no use to us, and I have little doubt that 30,000 or 40,000 pounds of honey were destroyed by us in that one week; for the wax was all that we cared to take.

The first time I saw the natives take a bees' nest, I thought their method of doing it as curious as the nest itself was odd. This peculiar nest hung from a limb of a tall, straight, smooth-barked eucalyptus tree, seventy five feet from the ground. The trunk of the tree was a yard or more in diameter. To cut it down would have been several hours' work, even for an experienced woodsman; while to climb it, after the ordinary fashion, would have been out of the question. This is the way Benu, one of the Timor men, set to work. First, he took from his bundle a torch of some resinous wood and lighted it. This torch he attached to his waist-cloth, or girdle, by means of a string some ten feet long, so that as he climbed up, the slowly-burning, but densely-smoking, torch would hang beneath him. To his girdle was also hung a chopping-knife, for cutting off the comb from the branch, and a long line, in a coil, for lowering it the ground. Fola, another of the men, now brought him a strong bush rope, or creeper, some twenty feet long, green and pliable, and freshly cut from a thicket. Benu first passed one end of this creeper round the trunk of the tree, then grasping an end in each hand, leaned back, and, setting his feet against the trunk, he began to walk up the tree, holding fast by the bush rope and throwing it up, by a quick jerk, after every second step. It was wonderful to note the skill with which he took advantage of the least roughness or scar in the bark to get a hold for the loop, or for his feet. He was not much more than a minute going up sixty feet. All this time he was almost enveloped in a cloud of smoke from the torch, which seemed to prevent the bees from settling upon his body, which, but for his waist-cloth, was entirely bare and exposed to their stings. Arriving directly beneath the limb to which the comb was suspended, by a dexterous spring he threw himself partly over it, then, drawing up his torch so that its smoke completely enveloped his body, he rested for some moments before creeping out on the branch to cut off the comb. Thousands of bees were flying about him, and thousands more were clinging in black masses to the outside of the comb. But, upon Benu's holding but the torch beneath it, they all rose in a dense cloud, filling the forest with their deep, solemn hum. Defended by the smoke, Benu had, in a moment or two more, made a double noose of his smaller line round the comb; and then, with a few deft cuts from his chopper, he cleaved off the comb from the limb, and lowered it unbroken to the ground. In three minutes more he had walked down the tree, much as he had walked up, and stood among us, none the worse for his exploit with the exception of a few stings.

Afterward, I repeatedly saw Fola, Amme, Motnleet and a dozen others of our native squad climb up for nests in the same way. It was their customary method. Nothing would have induced me to attempt such a feat; nor could any of our sailors be induced or cajoled into attempting it.

A little way out from our huts, on the farther side, and just beyond the three dardee trees, there was a rocky gully or gulch, twenty-five or thirty feet in depth, and from forty to fifty feet wide. So steep were its sides, and so tangled with creepers and vines, that to cross it we should have been forced to make a long detour, either below or above, had it not been for a bridge, which nature had provided in the shape of a tree which had fallen across the ravine, spanning it completely from bank to bank. It had been a very large, old tree. The shattered top lay on the side next our huts; and the ends were overrun by a luxuriant wild grape-vine, loaded down with clusters of grapes, the outer skins of which were covered with hair! But their flavor was delicious, though on first putting one in your mouth the hair gave you a very peculiar sensation. Winding through the top of the tree with the vine, there was a beautiful crown-lily, displaying its glorious festoons of blossoms side by side with the strange hairy grape clusters, so that a most singular and gorgeous effect was produced. The trunk of the tree, which was at least four feet in diameter, offered a perfectly safe bridge across the gully; and for the first four days we were constantly going back and forth on it. It had evidently been used for this purpose, either by men or wild animals, long before our arrival, for the log was worn smooth, apparently by the many feet that had passed and repassed on it.

Though still tolerably sound and strong, the log was plainly a hollow one, and out near the middle of it there was a hole on the upper side. I noticed this hole the first time I went across, and thought what an ugly thing it would be to step into it when crossing with a load. It must have been not far from a foot and a half in diameter.

Several times, while walking over this log, I noticed a strange, sickening odor coming from it, which, though faint, was very nauseating, and once, when standing still for a moment, looking down into the gully beneath it, I saw some bunches of what appeared to be bones wadded together. There were a good many of these lying there among the rank grass, and I concluded that a number of animals had died or been killed there, and that the peculiar odor came from these.

The fourth evening we were there, just at sunset, when the natives were coming from bee-hunting, each with his great sack of mashed comb on his head, I suddenly heard a fearful outcry in the direction of this gully.

"Some of 'em have tumbled off'n that log!" Myers, one of the sailors with me, called out, and we all ran from the hut where we were eating supper, to see what had caused so dreadful a shriek.

On coming in sight of the log that spanned the ravine, a strange spectacle presented itself. Dangling from the under side of the log, struggling and shrieking, hung one of the natives—a brother of Benu, named Oati. At the same instant I perceived the folds of a monstrous, mottled snake, rising in great loops above the log, and heard a native, who was standing at the farther end of the log, screaming: "U'lar le-hai! U'lar lehai!" (Great snake! Great snake!) "Tasahu! tasahu!" (Help! help!) "Come forth; white chief, with your fire gun!"

Without waiting to get my gun, for poor Oati's shricks were awful to hear, I seized a large handspike lying near, and, dashing out on the log, delivered two heavy blows upon the serpent's writhing folds, either of which, I feel certain, would have broken an ox's back. Feeling these, the monster dropped Oati, whom it had seized by the thigh in its mouth and was holding up by main strength, and, rearing its huge, flattened head six or seven feet above the log, looked me full in the face, its great eyes dilated with fury and its tongue licking the air with a strange, hissing sound.

It was a sight to startle the bravest of men. I struck at its head and leaped backward on the log, but lost my footing when close to the bank of the gully, and, slipping off the tree-trunk, went tearing down through the vines to the bottom. The fall did not hurt me much, but I was snarled up in the vines, and it was some moments before I could struggle out, or even clear away the foliage sufficiently to see whether the great snake was after me or not. I could hear a tremendous shouting and noise, however, and soon the reports of several guns.

The moment I got clear of the lianas, I ran through the bushes and grass down the bed of the gully; and here I came upon Oati, crawling off on his hands and knees. His thigh was bleeding profusely from several deep, ugly-looking holes, and his ankle was out of joint from the fall.

There was so savage a battle going on above us, that my shouts for assistance were unnoticed. After several efforts I succeeded in throwing Oati's ankle-joint back into place; and then, binding up his leg as best I could, helped him along to a place where it was possible for us to climb out.

But altogether this had occupied fifteen or twenty minutes; so that the fight which Myers and Benu Amme, Fola and the rest were making with the U'lar lehai was now for the most part over. The shots had driven the serpent back into the log; whence, according to Oati, it had darted its head out to seize him as he walked across. Myers was now watching for it—firing whenever it thrust its head out from the hole. He said that he had put two balls clean through its body before it had commenced to slide back into its retreat.

Benu now brought an ax, and, in the course of an hour, the great log was cut off, close to the bank, and fell down with a loud crash—one end of it—into the gully. It split as it fell, and the body of the python was thrown partly out of the hollow—but the crack closing somewhat again, as the end of the log came to rest on the bottom of the gulch, the great reptile was held fast within it. For awhile it writhed and twisted there, emitting a most horrible odor. Seeing it was caught fast, the natives went down and beat it to death with handspikes. They then cut away the log and let its body fall out.

With my pocket-rule I measured off a ten-foot pole, and when I say that I placed this pole three times along the dead serpent's body, and had still a foot to spare off its tail, perhaps I shall be accused of telling "a snake story;" nevertheless, it's the truth. At the middle its body was nearly as thick as a man's; and its scales were as large as clam shells. But the most ferocious feature was its great, bony, flattened head, with its huge grasping jaws and great lidless eyes. Its colors were a pale yellow along the belly, shading to coppery hues on its sides, with livid brown and black markings along the back.

There is little doubt that this monstrous creature had long had its lurking-place in the old log; and it made me shudder to think how many times we had all passed back and forth over its head.—Youth's Companion.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The Law of the Case.

The way of the succession to the Presidency, by the Vice President, President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives is not generally understood further than the mere fact that the officers named succeed in the order named. The facts briefly stated are that where the Vice President becomes President by the death, resignation or disability of the President-elect he serves out the full term, but when the Vice President is succeeded by the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, the latter serves as President only until an election can be held as provided by law.

Article II., section 1 of the constitution of the United States provides:

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The act of Congress of March 1, 1792, which is the only statute on the subject, provides:

SEC. 146. In the case of removal, death, resignation or inability of both the President and Vice President of the United States, the President of the Senate, or, if there is none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected.

SEC. 147. Whenever the offices of President and Vice President both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the Executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State.

SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors for President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States, as follows:

First—If there shall be the space of two months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding such first Wednesday in December.

Second—If there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and such first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in the year next ensuing. But if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will expire on the third day of March next ensuing, the notification shall not specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen.

SEC. 149. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notifications prescribed by the preceding section shall meet and give their votes upon the first Wednesday in December, specified in the notifications.

SEC. 150. The provisions of this title, relating to the quadrennial election of President and Vice President, shall apply with respect to any election to fill vacancies in the offices of President and Vice President, held upon a notification given when both offices become vacant.

SEC. 152. The term of four years, for which a President and Vice President shall be elected, shall, in all cases, commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the votes for the electors have been given.

THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

Report of Chief Hazen.

The report of Gen. W. B. Hazen, Chief Signal Officer, contains many matters of interest, among which the following may be noticed: "I have endeavored," he says, "to bring this service into active sympathy and co-operation with the ablest scientific intellects of the country. In this direction and in response to my request, the National Academy of Sciences has appointed an advisory committee of consulting specialists with which I may confer as occasion demands. I take pleasure in acknowledging this courtesy as showing the establishment of more intimate relations between the scientific interests of the United States and the Signal Service.
